1. To plan out; to excogitate.

One that slept in the contriving lust, and waked to do it.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

What more likely to contrive this admirable frame of the universe than infinite wisdom?

Tillotson.

Our poet has always some beautiful design, which he first establishes, and then contrives the means which will naturally conduct him to his end.

Dryden.

2. To wear away. Out of use.

Three ages, such as mortal men contrive.

Fairy Queen.

Please ye, we may contrive this afternoon,
And quaff carouses to our mistress' health.

Shak.

To CONTRIVE. v. n. To form or design; to plan; to scheme; to complot.

Is it enough

That masking habits, and a borrow'd name,
Contrive to hide my plenitude of shame?

Prior.

CONTRIVEMENT. n. f. [from contrive.] Invention.

Diſt.

CONTRIVER. n. f. [from contrive.] An inventor; one that plans a design; a schemer.

I, the mistress of your charms,
The close contriver of all harms,

Was never call'd to bear my part.

Epeus, who the fraud's contriver was.

Plain loyalty, not built on hope,

I leave to your contriver, Pope:

None loves his king and country better,

Yet none was ever less their debtor.

Scenes of blood and desolation, I had painted as the common effects of those destructive machines; whereof, he said, some evil genius, enemy to mankind, must have been the first contriver.

Swift's Gulliver's Travels.

CONTRO'L. n. f. [contrôle, that is, contre role, French.]

1. A register or account kept by another officer, that each may be examined by the other.

2. Check; restraint.

Let partial spirits still aloud complain,

Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;

And own no liberty, but where they may,

Without control, upon their fellows prey.

He shall feel a force upon himself from within,

and from the control of his own principles, to engage him to do worthily.

If the sinner shall win so complete a victory over his conscience, that all those considerations shall be able to strike no terror into his mind, lay no restraint upon his lusts, no control upon his appetites,

he is certainly too strong for the means of grace.

South's Sermons.

Speak, what Phœbus has inspir'd thy soul
For common good, and speak without control.

Dryden's Homer.

3. Power; authority; superintendence.

The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,

Are their males' subjects, and at their controls.

Shakespeare.

To CONTROL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To keep under check by a counter reckoning.

2. To govern; to restrain; to subject.

Authority to convent, to control, to punish, as far as with excommunication, whomsoever they think worthy.

Hooker.

Give me a staff of honour for mine age;

But not a sceptre to control the world.

Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.

Who shall control me for my works? Eccl. v. 3.

I feel my virtue struggling in my soul;

But stronger passion does its pow'r control.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.

With this he did a herd of goats control,
Which by the way he met, and slyly stole;

Clad like a country swain he pip'd and sung,

And playing drove his jolly troop along.

O, dearest Andrew, says the humble droll,

Henceforth may I obey, and thou control.

Prior.

3. To overpower; to confute: as, he controlled all the evidence of his adversary.

As for the time while he was in the Tower, and the manner of his brother's death, and his own escape, she knew thy were things that a very few could control.

Bacon's Henry VII.

CONTROLLABLE. adj. [from control.]

Subject to control; subject to command; subject to be over-ruled.

Passion is the drunkenness of the mind, and therefore, in its present workings, not controllable by reason.

South.

CONTROLLER. n. f. [from control.] One that has the power of governing or restraining; a superintendent.

He does not calm his contumelious spirit,
Nor cease to be an arrogant controller.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The great controller of our fate

Deign'd to be man, and liv'd in low estate.

Dryd.

CONTROLLERSHIP. n. f. [from controller.]

The office of a controller.

CONTROLMENT. n. f. [from control.]

1. The power or act of superintending or restraining.

2. The state of being restrained; restraint.

They made war and peace with one another,

without controlment.

Davies on Ireland.

3. Opposition; confutation.

Were it reason that we should suffer the same to pass without controlment, in that current meaning, whereby every where it prevailleth.

Hooker.

4. Resistance; hostility.

Here have we war for war, and blood for blood,

Controlment for controlment.

Shakesp. King John.

CONTROVERSIAL. adj. [from controversy.]

Relating to disputes; disputatious.

It happens in controversial discourses as it does in the assailing of towns, where, if the ground

be but firm whereon the batteries are erected, there is no farther enquiry whom it belongs to, so it affords but a fit rise for the present purpose.

Locke.

CONTROVERSY. n. f. [controversia, Lat.]

1. Dispute; debate; agitation of contrary opinions: a dispute is commonly oral, and a controversy in writing.

How cometh it to pass that we are so rent with mutual contentions, and that the church is so much troubled? If men had been willing to learn, all these controversies might have died the very day they were first brought forth.

Hooker.

Without controversy great is the mystery of god-liness.

1 Timothy.

Wild controversy then, which long had slept,
Into the press from ruin'd cloisters leapt.

Denham.

This left no room for controversy about the title,

nor for encroachment on the right of others.

Locke.

2. A suit in law.

If there be a controversy between men, and they come unto judgment, that the judges may judge them, then they shall justify the righteous and condemn the wicked.

Deuteronomy, xxv. 1.

3. A quarrel.

The Lord hath a controversy with the nations.

Jer. xxv. 31.

4. Opposition; enmity. This is an unusual sense.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it

With lusty sinews; throwing it aside,

And stemming it with hearts of controversy.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

To CONTROVERT. v. a. [controverto, Lat.]

To debate; to ventilate in opposite books; to dispute any thing in writing.

If any person shall think fit to controvert them, he may do it very safely for me.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

Hooker seems to use the word contro-verse, if it be not an erratum.

Persuasion ought to be fully settled in men's hearts, that, in litigations and controverted causes of such quality, the will of God is to have them to do whatsoever the sentence of judicial and final decision shall determine.

Hooker.

CONTROVERTIBLE. adj. [from controvert.]

Disputable; that may be the cause of controversy.

Discouraging on matters dubious, and many controvertible truths, we cannot without arrogance intreat a credulity, or implore any farther assent than the probability of our reasons and verity of our experiments.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CONTROVERTIST. n. f. [from controvert.]

Disputant; a man versed or engaged in literary wars or disputations.

Who can think himself so considerable as not to dread this mighty man of demonstration, this prince of controvertists, this great lord and possessor of first principles?

Tillotson.

CONTUMACIOUS. adj. [contumax, Latin.]

Obstinate; perverse; stubborn; inflexi-ble.

He is in law said to be a contumacious person, who, on his appearance afterwards, departs the court without leave.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

There is another very efficacious method for subduing the most obstinate contumacious sinner, and bringing him into the obedience of the faith of Christ.

Hammond's Fundamentals.

CONTUMACIOUSLY. adv. [from contumacious.]

Obstinately; stubbornly; inflexibly; perversely.

CONTUMACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from contumacious.]

Obstinacy; perverseness; inflexibility; stubbornness.

From the description I have given of it, a judgment may be given of the difficulty and contumaciousness of cure.

Wiseman.

CONTUMACY. n. f. [from contumacia, Latin.]

1. Obstinacy; perverseness; stubbornness; inflexibility.

Such acts

Of contumacy will provoke the highest

To make death in us live.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. [In law.] A wilful contempt and disobedience to any lawful summons or judicial order.

These certificates do only, in the generality, mention the party's contumacies and disobedience.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

CON-

CONTUMELIOUS, adj. [contumeliosus, Latin.]

1. Reproachful; rude; sarcastic; contemptuous.

With scoffs and scorns, and contumelious taunts,
In open market-place produc'd they me

To be a publick spectacle. Shakesp. Henry VI.

In all the quarrels and tumults at Rome, though the people frequently proceeded to rude contumelious language, yet no blood was ever drawn in any popular commotions, till the time of the Gracchi.

Swift.

2. Inclined to utter reproach or practise insults; brutal; rude.

There is yet another sort of contumelious persons, who indeed are not chargeable with that circumstance of ill employing their wit; for they use none of it.

Government of the Tongue.

Giving our holy virgins to the strain

Of contumelious, beauly, madbrain'd war.

Shakespeare's Timon.

3. Productive of reproach; shameful; ignominious.

As it is in the highest degree injurious to them, so it is contumelious to him.

Decay of Piety.

CONTUMELIOUSLY, adv. [from contumelious.] Reproachfully; contemptuously; rudely.

The people are not wont to take so great offence,
when they are excluded from honours and offices,
as when their persons are contumeliously trodden upon.

Hooker.

Fie, lords! that you, being supreme magistrates,
Thus contumeliously should break the peace.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

CONTUMELIOUSNESS, n. f. [from contumelious.] Rudeness; reproach.

CONTUMELY, n. f. [contumelia, Latin.] Rudeness; contemptuousness; bitterness of language; reproach.

If the helm of chief government be in the hands of a few of the wealthiest, then laws, providing for continuance thereof, must make the punishment of contumely and wrong, offered unto any of the common sort, sharp and grievous, that so the evil may be prevented.

Hooker.

Th' oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,

The pang of despis'd love, the law's delay.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

It was undervalued and deprecied with some bitterness and contumely.

Clarendon.

Why should any man be troubled at the contumelies
of those, whose judgment deserves not to be valued?

Tillotson.

Eternal contumely attend that guilty title, which claims exemption from thought, and arrogates to its wearers the prerogative of brutes.

Addison's Guardian.

TO CONTUSE, v. a. [contusus, Latin.]

1. To beat together; to bruise.

Of their roots, barks, and seeds, contused together, and mingled with other earth, and well watered with warm water, there came forth herbs much like the other.

Bacon.

2. To bruise the flesh without a breach of the continuity.

The ligature contuses the lips in cutting them, so that they require to be digested before they can unite.

Weyman.

CONTUSION, n. f. [from contusio.]

1. The act of beating or bruising.

2. The state of being beaten or bruised.

Take a piece of glass, and reduce it to powder,
it acquiring by contusion a multitude of minute surfaces, from a diaphanous, degenerates into a white body.

Boyle on Colours.

3. A bruise; a compression of the fibres, distinguished from a wound.

That winter lion, who in rage forgets

Aged contusions, and all bruise of time.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The bones, in sharp colds, wax brittle; and all contusions, in hard weather, are more hard to cure.

Bacon.

CONVALESCENCE, n. f. [from convalesco, Latin.] Renewal of health; recovery from a disease.

Being in a place out of the reach of any alarm, she recovered her spirits, to a reasonable convalescence.

Clarendon.

All the factious and schismatical people would frequently, as well in the night as the day, convene themselves by the sound of a bell.

Clarendon.

And now th' almighty father of the gods

Convenes a council in the blest abodes.

Pope's Statius.

2. To summon judicially.

By the papal canon law, clerks, in criminal and civil causes, cannot be convened before any but an ecclesiastical judge.

Ayliffe.

CONVE'NIENCE, n. f. [convenientia, Latin.]

CONVE'NIENCY, n. f. [convenientia, Latin.]

1. Fitness; propriety.

Convenience is, when a thing or action is so fitted to the circumstances, and the circumstances to it, that thereby it becomes a thing convenient.

Perkins.

In things not commanded of God, yet lawful, because permitted, the question is, what light shall shew us the convenience which one hath above another?

Hooker.

2. Commodiousness; ease; freedom from difficulties.

A man putting all his pleasures into one, is like a traveller's putting all his goods into one jewel:
the value is the same, and the convenience greater.

South's Sermons.

which he had not thought when he began.

Dryden's Fables, Preface.

There was a pair of spectacles, a pocket perspective, and several other little conveniences, I did not think myself bound in honour to discover.

Swift's Gulliver's Travels.

4. Fitness of time or place.

Use no farther means;

But, with all brief and plain convenience,

Let me have judgment. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

CONVE'NIENT, adj. [conveniens, Latin.]

1. Fit; suitable; proper; well adapted; commodious.

The least and most trivial episodes, or under actions, are either necessary or convenient; either so necessary, that without them the poem must be imperfect; or so convenient, that no others can be imagined more suitable to the place in which they are.

Dryden's Dedication to the Abciss.

Health itself is but a kind of tempor, gotten and preserved by a convenient mixture of contraries.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. It has either to or for before the following noun: perhaps it ought generally to have for before persons, and to before things.

My humour shall not cool; I will incense Ford to deal with poison; I will possess him with yellowness.

Shakespeare.

You never cool while you read Homer. I'm impatient till it be done; I will not give myself liberty to think, lest I should cool.

Congreve's Old Bachelor.

COOLER, n. f. [from cool.]

1. That which has the power of cooling the body.

Coolers are of two sorts; first, those which produce an immediate sense of cold, which are such as have their parts in less motion than those of the organs of feeling; and secondly, such as, by particular viscosity, or grossness of parts, give a greater consistence to the animal fluids than they had before, whereby they cannot move so fast, and therefore will have less of that intestine force on which their heat depends. The former are fruits, all acid liquors, and common water; and the latter are such as cucumbers, and all substances producing viscosity.

Quincy.

In dogs or cats there appeared the same necessity for a cooler as in man.

Harvey on Consumptions.

Acid things were used only as coolers.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. A vessel in which any thing is made cool.

Your first wort being thus boiled, lade off into one or more coolers, or cool-backs, in which leave the sillage behind, and let it run off fine.

Atterbury.

COOLNESS, n. f. [from cool.]

1. Gentle cold; a soft or mild degree of cold.

This difference consisteth not in the heat or coolness of spirits; for cloves and other spices, naphtha, and petroleum, have exceeding hot spirits, hotter a great deal than oil, wax, or tallow, but not inflamed.

Bacon's Natural History.

The toad loveth shade and coolness.

Bacon's Natural History.

Yonder the harvest of cold months laid up, Gives a fresh coolness to the royal cup; There ice, like crystal, firm and never lost, Tempers hot July with December's frost.

Waller.

The sheep enjoy the coolness of the shade.

Dryden's Virgil.

2. Want of affection; disinclination.

They parted with such coolness towards each other, as if they scarce hoped to meet again.

Clarendon.

3. Freedom from passion.

COOM, n. f. [from coûme, French.]

1. Soot that gathers over an oven's mouth.

Phillips.

2. That matter that works out of the wheels of carriages.

Bailey.

3. It is used in Scotland for the useless dust which falls from large coals.

COOMB, or COMB, n. f. [from comble, Fr. ca-mulus, Lat. a heap, Skinner.] A measure of corn containing four bushels.

Bailey.

COOP, n. f. [from kuype, Dutch.]

1. A barrel; a vessel for the preservation of liquids.

2. A cage; a penn for animals, as poultry or sheep.

Gracchus was slain the day the chickens refused to eat out of the coop; and Claudius Pulcher underwent the like success, when he contemned the tripudiary augurations.

Brown.

There were a great many crammed capons together in a coop.

L'Estrange.

To COOP, v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up in a narrow compass; to confine; to cage; to imprison: when it is used absolutely, it has often, perhaps always, the intensive particle up.

That pale, that white-fac'd shore, Whose foot spurns back the ocean's roaring sides, And coops from other lands her islanders.

Shakespeare's King John.

The Englishmen did coop up the lord Ravensstein, that he stirred not; and likewise held in strait siege the town.

Bacon.

In the taking of a town the poor escape better than the rich; for the one is let go, and the other is plundered and coop'd up.

L'Estrange.

Twice conquer'd cowards, now your shame is shown,

Coop'd up a second time within your town! Who dare not issue forth in open field.

Dryden's Æneid.

One world suffic'd not Alexander's mind; Coop'd up he seem'd, in earth and seas confin'd.

Dryden's Juvenal.

Coop'd up in a narrow isle, observing dreams With flattering wizards.

Dryden's Juvenal.

The Trojans, coop'd within their walls so long, Unbar their gates, and issue in a throng.

Dryden's Æneid.

The contempt of all other knowledge, as if it were nothing in comparison of law or physick, of astrology or chymistry, coops the understanding up within narrow bounds, and hinders it from looking abroad into other provinces of the intellectual world.

Locke.

They are coop'd in close by the laws of their countries, and the strict guards of those whose interest it is to keep them ignorant.

Locke.

What! coop whole armies in our walls again!

Pope.

COOPÉ, n. f. [from coûpé, French.] A motion in dancing.

COOPER, n. f. [from coop.] One that makes coops or barrels.

Societies of artificers and tradesmen, belonging to some towns corporate, such as weavers and coopers, by virtue of their charters, pretend to privilege and jurisdiction.

Child.

COOPERAGE, n. f. [from cooper.] The price paid for cooper's work.

To COOPERATE, v. n. [from com and opera, Latin.]

1. To labour jointly with another to the same end: it has with before the agent, and to before the end.

It puzzleth and perplexeth the conceits of many, that perhaps would otherwise cooperate with him, and makes a man walk almost alone to his own ends.

Bacon.

By giving men a free will, he allows man that highest satisfaction and privilege of cooperating to his own felicity.

Bayle.

2. To concur in producing the same effect.

His mercy will not forgive offenders, or his benignity cooperate to their conversions.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

All these causes cooperating, must, at last, weaken their motion.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

The special acts and impressions by which the Divine Spirit introduces this charge, and how far human liberty cooperates with it, are subjects beyond our comprehension.

Rogers.

COOPERATION, n. f. [from cooperate.]

The act of contributing or concurring to the same end.

We might work any effect without and against matter; and this not holpen by the cooperation of angels or spirits, but only by the unity and harmony of nature.

Bacon's Natural History.

COOPERATIVE, adj. [from cooperate.]

Promoting the same end jointly.

COOPERATOR, n. f. [from cooperate.] He that, by joint endeavours, promotes the same end with others.

COOPTATION, n. f. [from coopto, Latin.] Adoption; assumption.

COORDINATE, adj. [from con and ordinatus, Latin.] Holding the same rank; not being subordinate. Thus shell-fish may be divided into two coordinate kinds, crustaceous and testaceous; each of which is again divided into many species, subordinate to the kind, but coordinate to each other.

The word Analysis signifies the general and particular heads of a discourse, with their mutual connexions, both coordinate and subordinate, drawn out into one or more tables.

Watts.

COORDINATELY, adv. [from coordinate.] In the same rank; in the same relation: without subordination.

COORDINATENESS, n. f. [from coordinate.] The state of being coordinate.

COORDINATION, n. f. [from coordinate.] The state of holding the same rank; of standing in the same relation to something higher; collateralness.

In this high court of parliament there is a rare coordination of power, a wholesome mixture betwixt monarchy, optimacy, and democracy.

Howell's Pre-eminence of Parliament.

When these pretty intrigues of a play are so ill ordered, that they have no coherence with the other, I must grant that Lydinus has reason to tax that want of due connexion; for coordination in a play is as dangerous and unnatural as in a state.

Dryden on Dramatic Poesy.

COOT, n. f. [from maer-koet, Dut. coûte, Fr.] A small black water-fowl, seen often in fens and marshes.

A lake, the haunt

Of coots, and of the fishing cormorant.

Dryden's Fables.

COP, n. f. [from kop, Dut. cop, Sax.] The head; the top of any thing; any thing rising to a head: as, a cop, vulgarly cock, of hay; a cob-castle, properly cap-castle, a small castle or house on a hill; a cob of cherry-stones, for cop, a pile of stones one laid upon another; a tuft on the head of birds.

COPAL, n. f. The Mexican term for a gum.

COPARCENARY, n. f. [from coparcener.] Joint succession to any inheritance.

In descent to all the daughters, in coparcenary, for want of sons, the chief house is allotted to the eldest daughter.

Hale's History of Common Law.

COPAR-

COPARCENER. n. f. [from con and particeps, Lat.]

Coparceners are otherwise called parceners; and, in common law, are such as have equal portion in the inheritance of an ancestor. Cowell.

This great lordship was broken and divided, and partition made between the five daughters: in every of these portions, the coparceners severally exercised the same jurisdiction royal, which the earl marshal and his sons had used in the whole province. Davies on Ireland.

COPARCENY. n. f. An equal share of coparceners. Phillips's World of Words.

COPARTNER. n. f. [co and partner.]

One that has a share in some common stock or affair; one equally concerned; a sharer; a partaker; a partuer. Milton has used it both with of and in.

Our faithful friends,
Th' associates and copartners of our loss. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Shall I to him make known
As yet my change, and give him to partake Full happiness with me? Or rather not;
But keep the odds of knowledge in my pow'r,
Without copartner? Milton's Paradise Lost.

Rather by them
I gain'd what I have gain'd, and with them dwell
Copartner in these regions of the world.

Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

COPARTNERSHIP. n. f. [from copartner.]

The state of bearing an equal part, or possessing an equal share.

In case the father left only daughters, the daughters equally succeeded to their father as in copartnership. Hale.

COPATAIN. adj. [from cop.] High raised; pointed. Hammer.

Oh, fine villain! a silken doublet, a velvet hose, a scarlet cloke, and a copatain hat. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

COPAYVA. n. f. [It is sometimes written capiwi, copivi, capayva, copayva, cupayva, cupayba.] A gum which distils from a tree in Brasil. It is much used in disorders of the urinary passages.

COPE. n. f. [See COP.]

1. Any thing with which the head is covered.
2. A sacerdotal cloak, or vestment worn in sacred ministration.
3. Any thing which is spread over the head; as the concave of the skies; any archwork over a door.

All these things that are contained Within this goodly cope, both most and least,
Their being have, and daily are increast. Spenser.

Over head the dismal hills
Of fiery darts in flaming valleys flew,
And flying vaulted either host with fire;
So, under fiery cope, together rush'd
Both battles main. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The scholar believes there is no man under the cope of heaven, who is so knowing as his master. Dryden.

To COPE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover, as with a cope.
A very large bridge, that is all made of wood,
and coped over head. Addison on Italy.
2. To contend with; to oppose.
Know my name is lost,
By treason's tooth bare gnawn, and canker-bit;
Yet am I noble as the adversary
I come to cope. Shakespeare's King Lear.
3. To reward; to give in return.

Land my friend
Have, by your wisdom, been this day acquitted
Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof,
Three thousand ducats, due unto the Jew,
We freely cope your courteous pains withal. Shak.

VOL. I.

To COPE. v. n.

1. To contend; to struggle; to strive. It has with before the thing or person opposed. [In this sense it is a word of doubtful etymology. The conjecture of Junius derives it from koop, to buy, or some other word of the same import; so that to cope with signifies to interchange blows, or any thing else, with another.]

Let our trains
March by us, that we may peruse the men
We should have cop'd withal. Shak. Henry IV.
It is likely thou wilt undertake
A thing, like death, to chide away this shame,
That copes with death itself, to 'scape from it. Shakespeare.

But Eve was Eve;
This far his over-match, who, self-deceiv'd
And rash, beforehand had no better weigh'd
The strength he was to cope with, or his own. Milton.

They perfectly understood both the hates and the enemy they were to cope withal. L'Estrange.
On every plain,
Host cop'd with host, dire was the din of war. Philips.

Their generals have not been able to cope with the troops of Athens, which I have conquered. Addison's Whig Examiner.

If the mind apply itself first to easier subjects, and things near a kin to what is already known;
and then advance to the more remote and knotty parts of knowledge by slow degrees, it will be able,
in this manner, to cope with great difficulties, and prevail over them with amazing and happy success. Watts on the Mind.

2. To encounter; to interchange kindness or sentiments.

Thou fresh piece
Of excellent witchcraft, who of force must know Thy royal fool thou cop'st with. Shak. Winter's Tale.
Thou art e'en as just a man,
As e'er my conversation cop'd withal. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

To COPE. v. a. To embrace. Not in use.

I will make him tell the tale anew;
Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when,
He hath, and is again to cope your wife. Shakespeare's Othello.

COPESMATE. n. f. [perhaps for cutsmate, a companion in drinking, or one that dwells under the same cope, for house.] Companion; friend. An old word.

Ne ever laid in place, ne spake to wight,
Till that the fox his copesmate he had found. Hubbard's Tale.

COPIER. n. f. [from copy.]

1. One that copies; a transcriber.
A coin is in no danger of having its characters altered by copiers and transcribers. Addison on Coins.
2. One that imitates; a plagiarist; an imitator.

Without invention a painter is but a copier, and a poet but a plagiarist of others. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
Let the faint copier, on old Tiber's shore,
Nor mean the task, each breathing bust explore;
Line after line with painful patience trace,
This Roman grandeur, that Athenian grace. Tickell.

COPING. n. f. [from cope.] The upper tire of masonry which covers the wall.

All these were of costly stones, even from the foundation unto the coping. 1 Kings, viii. 9.
The coping, the modillions, or dentils, make a noble shew by their graceful projections. Addison's Freeholder.

COPIOUS. adj. [copia, Latin.]

1. Plentiful; abundant; exuberant; in great quantities.

Rose, as in dance, the stately trees, and spread
Their branches hung with copious fruit. Milton.

Full measure only bounds

Excess, before the all-bounteous king, who show'r'd
With copious hand, rejoicing in their joy. Milton.
This alkaline acrimony indicates the copious use of vinegar and acid fruits. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

The tender heart is peace,
And kindly pours its copious treasures forth
In various converse. Thomson's Spring.

2. Abounding in words or images; not barren; not confined; not concise.

Hail, Son of God, Saviour of men! thy name
Shall be the copious matter of my song
Henceforth, and never shall my harp thy praise
Forget, nor from thy Father's praise disjoin. Milton.

COPIOUSLY. adv. [from copious.]

1. Plentifully; abundantly; in great quantities.

2. At large; without brevity or conciseness; diffusely.

These several remains have been so copiously described by abundance of travellers, and other writers, that it is very difficult to make any new discoveries on so beaten a subject. Addison.

COPIOUSNESS. n. f. [from copious.]

1. Plenty; abundance; great quantity; exuberance.

2. Diffusion; exuberance of style.

The Roman orator endeavoured to imitate the copiousness of Homer, and the Latin poet made it his business to reach the conciseness of Demosthenes. Dryden.

COPIST. n. f. [from copy.] A copier; a transcriber; an imitator.

COPLAND. n. f. A piece of ground in which the land terminates with an acute angle. Diér.

COPPED. adj. [from cop.] Rising to a top or head.

It was broad in its basis, and rose copped like a sugar-loaf. Wise's Surgery.

A galeated eschinus being copped and somewhat conic. Woodward.

COPPEL. n. f. [This word is variously spelt; as copel, cupel, cuple, and cupple; but I cannot find its etymology.] An instrument used in chymistry, in the form of a dish, made of ashes, well washed, to cleanse them from all their salt; or of bones thoroughly calcined. Its use is to try and purify gold and silver, which is done by mingling lead with the metal, and exposing it in the coppel to a violent fire a long while. The impurities of the metal will then be carried off in dross, which is called the litharge of gold and silver. The refiners call the coppel a test. Harris.

COPPER. n. f. [koper, Dutch; cuprum, Latin.] One of the six primitive metals.

Copper is the most ductile and malleable metal, after gold and silver. Of a mixture of copper and lapis calaminaris is formed brass; a composition of copper and tin makes bell-metal; and copper and brass, melted in equal quantities, produces what the French call bronze, used for figures and statues. Chambers.

Copper is heavier than iron or tin; but lighter than silver, lead, and gold. Hill on Fossils.

Two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold. Ezra, viii. 27.

COPPER. n. f. A vessel made of copper: commonly used for a boiler larger than a moveable pot.

They boiled it in a copper to the half; then they poured it into earthen vessels. Bac. Nat. Hist.

COPPER-NOSE. n. f. [copper and nose.] A red nose.

He having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion: I had as lieve Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper-nose. Shakespeare.

Gotta rosacea ariseth in little hard tubercles, affecting the face all over with great itching, which, being scratched, looks red, and rises in great welks, rendering the visage fiery; and makes copper-noses, as we generally express them. Wyseman.

COPPER-PLATE. n. s. A plate on which pictures are engraven for the neater impression, distinguished from a wooden cut.

COPPER-WORK. n. s. [copper and work.] A place where copper is worked or manufactured.

COPPERAS. n. s. [kopperroose, Dut. couperouse, Fr. supposed to be found in copper mines only.] A name given to three sorts of vitriol; the green, the bluish green, and the white, which are produced in the mines of Germany, Hungary, and other countries. But what is commonly sold here for copperas, is an artificial vitriol, made of a kind of stones found on the sea-shore in Essex, Hampshire, and so westward, ordinarily called gold stones from their colour. They abound with iron, and are exposed to the weather in beds above ground, and receive the rains and dews, which in time breaks and dissolves the stones: the liquor that runs off is pumped into boilers, in which is first put old iron, which, in boiling, dissolves. This factitious copperas, in many respects, agrees with the native green vitriol.

Chambers. Hill.

It may be questioned, whether, in this operation, the iron or copperas be transmuted, from the cognation of copperas with copper, and the iron remaining after conversion. Brown.

COPPERSMITH. n. s. [copper and smith.] One that manufactures copper.

Salmoncus, as the Grecian tale is,
Was a mad coppersmith of Elis;
Up at his forge by morning peep. Swift.

COPPERWORM. n. s. [teredo, Latin.]

1. A little worm in ships.
2. A worm that fretteth garments.
3. A worm breeding in one's hand.

Ainsworth.

COPPERY. adj. [from copper.] Containing copper; made of copper.

Some springs of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick salts, dissolve the body of iron put into the spring, and deposite, in lieu of the iron particles carried off, coppery particles brought with the water out of the neighbouring copper-mines. Woodward on Fossils.

COPPICE. n. s. [coupeaux, Fr. from couper, to cut or lop. It is often written copse.] Low woods cut at stated times for fuel; a place over-run with brushwood.

A land, each side whereof was bounded both with high timber trees, and coppes of far more humble growth. Sidney.

Upon the edge of yonder coppice,
A stand, where you may have the fairest shoot.

Shakespeare.

In coppice woods, if you leave saddles too thick, they run to bushes and briars, and have little clean underwood. Bacon.

The willows, and the hazel coppes green,
Shall now no more be seen Fanning their joyous leaves to their soft lays. Milton.

Raise trees in your seminaries and nurseries, and you may transplant them for coppice ground, walks, or hedges. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The rate of coppice lands will fall upon the discovery of coal-mines. Locke.

COPPLE-DUST. n. s. [probably for coppel, or cupel dust.] Powder used in purifying metals, or the gross parts separated by the cupel.

It may be also tried by incorporating powder of steel, or coppel-dust, by pouncing into the quick-silver. Bacon.

COPPLE-STONES are lumps and fragments of stone or marble, broke from the adjacent cliffs, rounded by being bowled and tumbled to and again by the action of the water. Woodward.

COPPLED. adj. [from cop.] Rising in a conick form; rising to a point.

There is some difference in this shape, some being flatter on the top, others more coppel. Woodward on Fossils.

COPSE. n. s. [abbreviated from coppice.] Short wood cut at a certain growth for fuel; a place overgrown with short wood.

The east quarters of the shire are not destitute of copse woods. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Oaks and brambles, if the copse be burn'd,
Confounded lie, to the same ashes turn'd. Waller.

But in what quarter of the copse it lay,
His eye by certain level could survey. Dryden's Fables.

To COPSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To preserve underwoods.

The neglect of copping wood cut down, hath been of very evil consequence. Swift's Address to Parliament.

COPULA. n. s. [Latin.] The word which unites the subject and predicate of a proposition; as, books are dear.

The copula is the form of a proposition; it represents the act of the mind, affirming or denying. Watts's Logick.

To COPULATE. v. a. [copulo, Latin.] To unite; to conjoin; to link together.

If the force of custom, simple and separate, be great, the force of custom copulate, and conjoined, and collegiate, is far greater. Bacon.

To COPULATE. v. n. To come together as different sexes.

Not only the persons so copulating are infected, but also their children. Wyseman's Surgery.

COPULATION. n. s. [from copulate.] The congress or embrace of the two sexes.

Sundry kinds, even of conjugal copulation, are prohibited as dishonest. Hooker.

COPULATIVE. adj. [copulativus, Latin.] A term of grammar.

Copulative propositions are those which have more subjects or predicates connected by affirmative or negative conjunctions: as, riches and honours are temptations to pride; Cæsar conquered the Gauls and the Britons; neither gold nor jewels will purchase immortality. Watts's Logick.

COPY. n. s. [copie, Fr. copia, low Latin; quod cuiuspiam facta est copia exscribendi. Junius inclines, after his manner, to derive it from κόπος, labour; because, says he, to copy another's writing is very painful and laborious.]

1. A transcript from the archetype or original.

If virtue's self were lost, we might
From your fair mind new copies write. Waller.

I have not the vanity to think my copy equal to the original. Deubem.

He stept forth, not only the copy of God's hands, but also the copy of his perfections, a kind of image or representation of the Deity in small. South's Sermons.

The Romans having sent to Athens, and the Greek cities of Italy, for copies of the best laws, chose ten legislators to put them into form. Swift.

2. An individual book; one of many books: as, a good, or fair copy.

The very having of the books of God was a matter of no small charge, as they could not be had otherwise than in written copies. Hooker.

3. The autograph; the original; the archetype; that from which any thing is copied.

It was the copy of our conference;

In bed he slept not, for my urging it;

At board he fed not, for my urging it. Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

Let him first learn to write, after a copy, all the letters in the vulgar alphabet. Holder's Elements of Speech.

The first of them I have forgotten, and cannot easily retrieve, because the copy is at the press. Dryden.

4. An instrument by which any conveyance is made in law.

Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance lives;
But in them nature's copy's not eternal. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

5. A picture drawn from another picture.

COPY-BOOK. n. s. [copy and book.] A book in which copies are written for learners to imitate.

COPY-HOLD. n. s. [copy and hold.] A tenure, for which the tenant hath nothing to shew but the copy of the roll made by the steward of his lord's court: for the steward, as he enrolls other things done in the lord's court, so he registers such tenants as are admitted in the court, to any parcel of land or tenement belonging to the manor; and the transcript of this is called the court roll, the copy of which the tenant takes from him, and keeps as his only evidence. This is called a base tenure, because it holds at the will of the lord; yet not simply, but according to the custom of the manor: so that if a copy-holder break not the custom of the manor, and thereby forfeit his tenure, he cannot be turned out at the lord's pleasure. These customs of manors vary, in one point or other, almost in every manor. Some copy-holds are finable, and some certain: that which is finable, the lord rates at what fine or income he pleases, when the tenant is admitted into it; that which is certain, is a kind of inheritance, and called in many places customary; because the tenant dying, and the hold being void, the next of blood paying the customary fine, as two shillings for an acre, or so, cannot be denied his admission. Some copy-holders have, by custom, the wood growing upon their own land, which by law they could not have. Some hold by the verge in ancient demesne; and though they hold by copy, yet are they, in account, a kind of freeholder; for, if such a one commit felony, the king hath annuum, diem, diem, and vastum, as in case of freehold. Some others hold by common tenure, called mere copy-hold; and, they committing felony their land escheats to the lord of the manor. Cowell.

If a customary tenant die, the widow shall have what the law calls her free bench in all his copy-hold lands. Addison.

COPY-HOLDER. n. f. [from copyhold.] One that is possessed of land in copyhold.

To Co'PY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To transcribe; to write after an original: it has sometimes out, a kind of pleonasm.

He who hurts a harmless neighbour's peace,
Who loves a lye, lame slander helps about,
Who writes a libel, or who copies out. Pope's Epist.

2. To imitate; to propose to imitation; to endeavour to resemble.

He that borrows other men's experience, with this design of copying it out, possesses himself of one of the greatest advantages. Decay of Piety.

Set the examples, and their souls inflame
To copy out their great forefathers fame.

Dryden's King Arthur.

To copy her few nymphs aspir'd,

Her virtues fewer swains admir'd. Swift.

To Co'PY. v. n.

1. To do any thing in imitation of something else.

Some imagine, that whatsoever they find in the picture of a master, who has acquired reputation, must of necessity be excellent; and never fail, when they copy, to follow the bad as well as the good things. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. It has sometimes from before the thing imitated.

When a painter copies from the life, he has no privilege to alter features and lineaments, under pretence that his picture will look better. Dryden.

3. Sometimes after.

Several of our countrymen, and Mr. Dryden in particular, seem very often to have copied after it in their dramatick writings, and in their poems upon love. Addison's Spectator.

To CoQUE'r. v. a. [from the noun.]

To entertain with compliments and amorous tattle; to treat with an appearance of amorous tenderness.

You are coquetting a maid of honour, my lord looking on to see how the gamesters play, and I railing at you both. Swift.

To CoQUE'r. v. n. To act the lover; to entice by blandishments.

Phyllis, who but a month ago

Was married to the Tunbridge beau,

I saw coquetting t' other night,

In publick, with that odious knight. Swift.

CoQUETRY. n. f. [coqueterie, French.]

Affectation of amorous advances; desire of attracting notice.

I was often in company with a couple of charming women, who had all the wit and beauty one could desire in female companions, without a dash of coquetry, that from time to time gave me a great many agreeable torments. Addison's Spectator.

CoQUETTE. n. f. [coquette, Fr. from coquart, a prattler.] A gay, airy girl; a girl who endeavours to attract notice.

The light coquettes in sylphs aloft repair,
And sport and flutter in the fields of air. Pope.

A coquette and a tinder-box are sparkled.

Abutnot and Pope.

Co'RACLE. n. f. [cwrwgle, Welsh, probably from corium, leather, Lat.] A boat used in Wales by fishers, made by drawing leather or oiled cloth upon a frame of wicker work.

CORAL. n. f. [corallium, Latin.]

1. Red coral is a plant of as great hardness and stony nature, while growing in the water, as it has after long exposure to the air. The vulgar opinion, that coral is soft while in the sea, proceeds from a soft and thin coat, of a crustaceous matter, covering it while it is growing, and which is taken off before it is packed up for use. The whole coral plant grows to a foot or more in height, and is variously ramified. It is thickest at the stem, and its branches grow gradually smaller. It grows to stones, without a root, or without any way penetrating them; but as it is found to grow, and take in its nourishment, in the manner of plants, and to produce flowers and seeds, or at least a matter analogous to seeds, it properly belongs to the vegetable kingdom. Hill's Mat. Med.

In the sea, upon the south-west of Sicily, much coral is found. It is a submarine plant; it hath no leaves; it brancheth only when it is under water. It is soft, and green of colour; but being brought into the air, it becometh hard and shining red, as we see. Bacon's Natural History.

This gentleman, desirous to find the nature of coral, caused a man to go down a hundred fathom into the sea, with express orders to take notice whether it were hard or soft in the place where it groweth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

He hears the crackling sound of coral woods,
And sees the secret source of subterranean floods.

Dryden's Virgil.

A turret was inclos'd

Within the wall, of alabaster white,
And crimson coral, for the queen of night,
Who takes in Sylvan sports her chaste delight. Dryden.

Or where's the sense, direct or moral,
That teeth are pearl, or lips are coral? Prior.

2. The piece of coral which children have about their necks, imagined to assist them in breeding teeth.

Her infant grandame's coral next it grew;
The bells she gingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

CORAL-TREE. n. f. [corallodendron, Lat.]

It is a native of America, and produces very beautiful scarlet flowers; but never any seeds in the European gardens. Miller.

Co'RALLINE. adj. [corallinus, Lat.] Consisting of coral; approaching to coral.

At such time as the sea is agitated, it takes up into itself terrestrial matter of all kinds, and in particular the coralline matter, letting it fall again, as it becomes calm. Woodward.

Co'RALLINE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

Coralline is a sea plant used in medicine; but much inferior to the coral in hardness, sometimes greenish, sometimes yellowish, often reddish, and frequently white. Hill.

In Falmouth there is a sort of sand, or rather coralline, that lies under the owse. Mortim. Hush.

Co'RALLOID. } adj. [κοραλλοειδης.] Re-

Co'RALLOIDAL. } sembling coral.

Now that plants and ligneous bodies may indurate under water, without approachment of air, we have experiment in coralline, with many coralloidal concretions. Brown.

The pentadrous, columnar, coralloid bodies, that are composed of plates set lengthways of the body, and passing from the surface to the axis of it. Woodward on Fossils.

CORA'NT. n. f. [courant, French.] A lofty sprightly dance.

It is harder to dance a corant well than a jig; so in conversation, even, easy, and agreeable, more than points of wit. Temple.

I would as soon believe a widow in great grief for her husband, because I saw her dance a corant about his coffin. Wells.

Co'RBAN. n. f. [קרבן.] An alms-basket; a receptacle of charity; a gift; an alms.

They think to satisfy all obligations to duty by their corban of religion. King Charles.

Corban stands for an offering or gift made to God, or his temple. The Jews sometimes swore by corban, or the gifts offered unto God. If a man made all his fortune corban, or devoted it to God, he was forbidden to use it. If all that he was to give his wife, or his father and mother, was declared corban, he was no longer permitted to allow them necessary subsistence. Even debtors were permitted to defraud their creditors, by consecrating their debt to God. Our Saviour reproaches the Jews, in the Gospel, with these uncharitable and irreligious vows. By this word such persons were likewise meant, as devoted themselves to the service of God and his temple. Corban signifies also the treasury of the temple, where the offerings, which were made in money, were deposited. Calmet.

CORBE. adj. [courbe, French.] Crooked.

For fiker thy head very tortie in,
So thy corbe shoulder it leans amiss.

Spenser's Pastorals.

Co'RBEILS. n. f. Little baskets used in fortification, filled with earth, and set upon the parapet, to shelter the men in firing upon the besiegers.

Co'RBEL. n. f. [In architecture.] The representation of a basket, sometimes placed on the heads of the caryatides.

Co'RBEL. } n. f.

1. A short piece of timber sticking out six or eight inches from a wall, sometimes placed for strength under the semi-girders of a platform.

2. A niche or hollow left in walls for figures or statues. Chambers.

CORD. n. f. [cort, Welsh; chorda, Latin; corde, Fr.]

1. A rope; a string composed of several strands or twists.

She let them down by a cord through the window. Jos. ii. 5.

Form'd of the finest complicated thread,
These num'rous cords are thro' the body spread. Blackmore.

2. The cords extended in setting up tents, furnish several metaphors in scripture.

Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; none of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken. Isaiah, xxxiii. 20.

3. A quantity of wood for fuel, supposed to be measured with a cord; a pile eight feet long, four high, and four broad.

CORD-MAKER. n. f. [cord and make.] One whose trade is to make ropes; a rope-maker.

CORD-WOOD. n. f. [cord and wood.] Wood piled up for fuel, to be sold by the cord.

To CORD. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with ropes; to fasten with cords; to close by a bandage.

Co'RDAGE. n. f. [from cord.] A quantity of cords; the ropes of a ship.

Our cordage from her store, and cables, should be made,

Of any in that kind most fit for marine trade.

They fastened their ships, and rid at anchor with cables of iron chains, having neither canvas nor cordage. Drayton.

Raleigh.
Spain

Spain furnished a sort of rush called spartum, useful for cordage and other parts of shipping.

Arbutnot on Coins.

Co'rdad. adj. [from cord.] Made of ropes.

This night he meaneth, with a corded ladder,
To climb celestial Silvia's chamber window. Shak.

CORDÉLIER. n. f. A Franciscan friar: so named from the cord which serves him for a cincture.

And who to assist but a grave cordelier. Prior.

CORDIAL. n. f. [from cor, the heart, Latin.]

1. A medicine that increases the force of the heart, or quickens the circulation.

2. Any medicine that increases strength.

A cordial, properly speaking, is not always what increaseth the force of the heart; for, by increasing that, the animal may be weakened, as in inflammatory diseases. Whatever increaseth the natural or animal strength, the force of moving the fluids and muscles, is a cordial: these are such substances as bring the serum of the blood into the properest condition for circulation and nutrition; as broths made of animal substances, milk, ripe fruits, and whatever is epued with a wholesome but not pungent taste. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. Any thing that comforts, gladdens, and exhilarates.

Then with some cordials seek for to appease
The inward languor of my wounded heart,
And then my body shall have shortly ease;
But such sweet cordials pass physicians art. Spenser.

Cordials of pity give me now,

For I too weak for purges grow. Cowley.

Your warrior offspring that upheld the crown,
The scarlet honour of your peaceful gown,
Are the most pleasing objects I can find,
Charms to my sight, and cordials to my mind.

Dryden.

Co'rdial. adj.

1. Reviving; invigorating; restorative.

It is a thing I make, which hath the king
Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know
What is more cordial. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

He only took cordial waters, in which we infused Sometimes purgatives. Wise man's Surgery.

2. Sincere; hearty; proceeding from the heart; without hypocrisy.

Doctrines are infused among christians, which are apt to obstruct or intercept the cordial superstrucing of Christian life of renovation, where the foundation is duly laid. Hammond.

He, with looks of cordial love,
Hang over her enamour'd. Milton.

CORDIALITY. n. f. [from cordial.]

1. Relation to the heart.

That the antients had any such respects of cordiality, or reference unto the heart, will much be doubted. Brown.

2. Sincerity; freedom from hypocrisy.

Co'rdially. adv. [from cordial.] Sincerely; heartily; without hypocrisy.

Where a strong inveterate love of sin has made any doctrine or proposition wholly unsuitable to the heart, no argument, or demonstration, no nor miracle whatsoever, shall be able to bring the heart cordially to close with, and receive it. South's Sermon.

Co'rdiner. n. f. [from cordonnier, French.] A shoemaker. It is so used in divers statutes.

CORDON. n. f. [Fr.] In fortification, a row of stones jutting out before the rampart and the basis of the parapet.

Chambers.

CORDWAIN. n. f. [Cordovan leather, from Cordova in Spain.] Spanish leather.

Her straight legs most bravely were embay'd
In golden buskins of costly cordwain. Fairy Queen.

CORDWA'NER. n. f. [uncertain whether from Cordovan, Spanish leather, or from cord, of which shoes were formerly made,
and are now used in the Spanish West Indies. Trevoux.] A shoemaker.

CORE. n. f. [cœur, French; cor, Latin.]

1. The heart.

Give me that man

That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him
In my heart's core; ay, in my heart of heart.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. The inner part of any thing.

In the core of the square she raised a tower of a furlong high. Raleigh's History of the World.

Dig out the cores below the surface.

Mortimer's Husband y.

They wasteful eat,

Through buds and bark, into the blacken'd core.

Thomson.

3. The inner part of a fruit which contains the kernels.

It is reported that trees, watered perpetually with warm water, will make a fruit with little or no core or stone. Bacon.

4. The matter contained in a boil or sore.

Launce the fore,

And cut the head; for, till the core be found,
The secret vice is fed, and gathers ground.

Dryden's Virgil.

5. It is used by Bacon for a body or collection. [from corps, French, pronounced core.]

He was more doubtful of the raising of forces to resist the rebels, than of the resistance itself; for that he was in a core of people whose affections he suspected. Bacon's Henry VII.

CORIA'CEOUS. adj. [coriaceus, Latin.]

1. Consisting of leather.

2. Of a substance resembling leather.

A stronger projectile motion of the blood must occasion greater secretions and loss of liquid parts, and from thence perhaps spissitude and coriaceous concretions. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CORIA'NDER. n. f. [coriandrum, Latin.]

A plant.

The species are, 1. Greater coriander. 2. Smaller testiculated coriander. The first is cultivated for the seeds, which are used in medicine: the second is seldom found. Miller.

Israel called the name thereof manna; and it was, like coriander seed, white. Exodus, xiii. 31.

Co'RINTH. n. f. [from the city of that name in Greece.] A small fruit, commonly called currant.

Now will the corinths, now the rasps supply
Delicious draughts. Philips.

The chief riches of Zant consist in corinths, which the inhabitants have in great quantities.

Broome.

CORI'NTHIAN Order, is generally reckoned the fourth, but by some the fifth, of the five orders of architecture; and is the most noble, rich, and delicate of them all. Vitruvius ascribes it to Callimachus, a Corinthian sculptor, who is said to have taken the hint by passing by the tomb of a young lady, over which a basket with some of her playthings had been placed by her nurse, and covered with a tile; the whole having been placed over a root of acanthus. As it sprung up, the branches encompassed the basket; but arriving at the tile, bent downwards under the corners of it, forming a kind of volute. Hence Callimachus imitated the basket by the vase of his capital, the pile in the abacus, and the leaves in the volute. Villalpandus imagines the Corinthian capital to have taken its original from an order in the temple of Solomon, whose leaves were those of the palm-tree. The capital is adorned with two rows of leaves, between which little stalks arise, of which the sixteen volutes are formed, which support the abacus. Harris.

Behind these figures are large columns of the Corinthian order, adorned with fruit and flowers.

Dryden.

CORK. n. f. [cortex, Lat. kork, Dutch.]

Hic dies, anno redeunte, festus

Corticem aspicimus pice diuorabit

Amphora fumum bibere instituta

Consule Tullo. Hor.]

1. A glandiferous tree, in all respects like the ilex, excepting the bark, which, in the cork tree, is thick, spongy, and soft.

Müller.

The cork tree grows near the Pyrenean hills, and in several parts of Italy, and the north of New England. Mortimer.

2. The bark of the cork tree used for stopples, or burnt into Spanish black. It is taken off without injury to the tree.

3. A piece of cork cut for the stopple of a bottle or barrel.

I prythee take the cork out of thy mouth, that I may drink thy tidings. Shakesp. As you like it.

Be sure, nay very sure, thy cork be good;

Then future ages shall of Peggy tell,

That nymph that brew'd and bottled ale so well.

King.

Nor stop, for one bad cork, his butler's pay. Pope.

CORKING-PIN. n. f. A pin of the largest size.

When you put a clean pillow-case on your lady's pillow, be sure to fasten it well with three corkingpins, that it may not fall off in the night.

Swift's Directions to the Chambermaid.

Co'RKY. adj. [from cork.] Consisting of cork; resembling cork.

Bind fast his corky arms. Shakesp. King Lear.

Co'RMORANT. n. f. [cormorant, Fr. from corvus marinus, Latin.]

1. A bird that preys upon fish. It is nearly of the bigness of a capon, with a wry bill and broad feet, black on his body, but greenish about his wings. He is eminently greedy and rapacious.

Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,

Live register'd upon our brazen tombs;

When, spite of cormorant devouring time,

Th' endeavour of this present breath may buy

That honour which shall bate his scythe's keen edge. Shakespeare.

Those called birds of prey, as the eagle, hawk, puttock, and cormorant. Peacocks on Drawing.

Thence up he flew, and on the tree of life

Sat like a cormorant. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Not far from thence is seen a lake, the haunt
Of coots, and of the fishing cormorant. Dryd. Fab.

2. A glutton.

CORN. n. f. [corn, Sax. korn, Germ. It is found in all the Teutonic dialects;
as, in an old Runick rhyme,

Hagul er kaldastur corna.

Hail is the coldest grain.]

1. The seeds which grow in ears, not in pods; such as are made into bread.

Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone. John, xii. 25.

The people cry you mock'd them; and, of late,
When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd.

Shakespeare.

2. Grain.

2. Grain yet unreaped, standing in the field upon its stalk.

All the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Landing his men, he burnt the corn all thereabouts, which was now almost ripe.

Knolles's History of the Turks.
Still a murmur runs Along the soft inclining fields of corn.

Thomson's Autumn.

3. Grain in the ear, yet unthreshed.

Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season.

Job, v. 26.

4. An excrescence on the feet, hard and painful; probably so called from its form, though by some supposed to be denominated from its corneous or horny substance.

Ladies, that have your feet
Unplag'd with corns, we'll have a bout with you.

Shakespeare.

The man that makes his toe
What he his heart should make,

Shall of a corn cry woe,

And turn his sleep to wake. Sh. King Lear.
Even in men, aches and hurts and corns do en-grieve either towards rain or towards frost.

Bacon's Natural History.

The hardest part of the corn is usually in the middle, thrusting itself in a nail; whence it has the Latin appellation of clavis.

Wifeman.

He first that useful secret did explain,
That pricking corns foretold the gathering rain.

Gay's Pastorals.

It looks as there were regular accumulations and gatherings of humours, growing perhaps in some people as corns.

Arbuthnot.

Thus Lamb, renown'd for cutting corns,
An offer'd fee from Radcliff scorned.

Swift.

- 79 CORN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To salt; to sprinkle with salt. The word is so used, as Skinner observes, by the old Saxons.

2. To granulate.

- CORN-FIELD. n. f. A field where corn is growing.

It was a lover and his lass,
That o'er the green corn-field did pass.

Shakespeare's As you like it.

You may soon enjoy the gallant sights of armies, encampments, and standards waving over your brother's cornfields.

Pope.

- CORN-FLAG. n. f. [corn and flag.] A plant.
Miller enumerates eleven species of this plant, some with red flowers, and some with white.

- CORN-FLOOR. n. f. The floor where corn is stored.

Thou hast loved a reward upon every corn-floor.

Hof. ix. 1.

- CORN-FLOWER. n. f. [from corn and flower.]

There be certain corn-flowers, which come seldom or never in other places, unless they be set, but only amongst corn; as the blue-bottle, a kind of yellow marygold, wild poppy, and fumitory.

Bacon's Natural History.

Corn-flowers are of many sorts: some of them
flower in June and July, and others in August.
The seeds should be sown in March: they require a good soil.

Mortimer.

- CORN-LAND. n. f. [corn and land.] Land appropriated to the production of grain.

Pastures and meadows are of such advantage to husbandry, that many prefer them to corn-lands.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

- CORN-MASTER. n. f. [corn and master.]

One that cultivates corn for sale. Not in use.

I knew a nobleman in England, that had the greatest audits of any man in my time; a great grazier, a great sheep-master, a great timber-man, a great collier, a great corn-master, and a great leadman.

Bacon.

- CORN-MARIGOLD. n. f. [from corn and marigold.] A flower.

- CORN-MILL. n. f. [corn and mill.] A mill to grind corn into meal.

Save the more laborious work of beating of hemp, by making the axle-tree of the corn-mills longer than ordinary, and placing pins in it to raise large hammers.

Mortimer.

- CORN-PIPE. n. f. [from corn and pipe.]
A pipe made by slitting the joint of a green stalk of corn.

Now the shrill corn-pipes, echoing loud to arms,
To rank and file reduce the straggling swarms.

Tickel.

- CORN-ROCKET. n. f. [from corn and rocket.] A plant.

- CORN-ROSE. n. f. A species of poppy.

Latin.] A tenure which obliges the landholder to give notice of an invasion by blowing a horn.

- CORANCHANDLER. n. f. [corn and chandler.] One that retails corn.

- CORNCUTTER. n. f. [from corn and cut.]

A man whose profession is to extirpate corns from the foot.

The nail was not loose, nor did seem to press into the flesh; for there had been a corn-cutter, who had cleared it.

Wifeman.

I have known a corn-cutter, who, with a right education, would have been an excellent physician.

Spectator.

- CORNEL. } n. f. [cornus, Lat.]

CORNE'LIAN-TREE. }
The cornel-tree beareth the fruit commonly called the cornel or cornelian cherry, as well from the name of the tree, as the cornelian stone, the colour whereof it somewhat represents. The wood is very durable, and useful for wheel-work.

Mortimer.

Take a service-tree, or a cornelian-tree, or an elder-tree, which we know have fruits of harsh and binding juice, and set them near a vine or fig-tree, and see whether the grapes or figs will not be the sweeter.

Bacon's Natural History.

A huntress issuing from the wood,
Reclining on her cornel spear she stood.

Dryden.

Mean time the goddess, in disdain, bestows
The mast and acorn, brutal food! and strows
The fruits of cornel, as they feast around.

Pope's Odyssey.

On wildings and on strawberries they fed;
Cornels and bramble-berries gave the rest,
And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast.

Dryden's Ovid.

- CORNE'LIAN STONE. See CARNELIAN.

- CORNE'LIAN MUSE. n. f. [French.] A kind of rustick flute.

- CORNEOUS. adj. [corneus, Lat.] Horny; or ligneous constitution, consisting chiefly of a fibrous matter.

Woodward.

- CORNER. n. f. [cornel, Welsh; cornier, French.]

1. An angle; a place inclosed by two walls or lines, which would intersect

each other, if drawn beyond the point where they meet.

2. A secret or remote place.

There's nothing I have done yet, o' my conscience,

Deserves a corner. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

It is better to dwell in a corner of a house top,
than with a brawling woman and in a wide house.

Proverbs, xxv. 24.

I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner.

Acts, xxvi. 26.

All the inhabitants, in every corner of the island, have been absolutely reduced under his immediate subjection.

Davies.

Those vices, that lurk in the secret corners of the soul.

Addison.

3. The extremities; the utmost limit:
thus every corner is the whole or every part.

Might I but through my prison, once a day,
Behold this maid, all corners else o' th' earth
Let liberty make use of.

Shakespeare's Tempest.

I turn'd, and tried each corner of my bed,
To find if sleep were there; but sleep was lost.

Dryden.

- CORNER-STONE. n. f. [corner and stone.]
The stone that unites the two walls at the corner; the principal stone.

See you yond' coin o' th' capitol, yond' cornerstone?

Shakespeare.

mouth: used anciently in war, probably in the cavalry.

Israel played before the Lord on psalteries, and on timbrels, and on cornets.

2 Sam. vi. 5.

Other wind instruments require a forcible breath; as trumpets, cornets, and hunters horns.

Bacon's Natural History.

Cornets and trumpets cannot reach his ear;
Under an actor's nose, he's never near.

Dryden's Juvenal.

2. A company or troop of horse; perhaps as many as had a cornet belonging to them. This sense is now disused.

These noblemen were appointed, with some cornets of horse and bands of foot, to put themselves beyond the hill where the rebels were encamped.

Bacon.

Seventy great horses lay dead in the field, and one cornet was taken.

1. Relating to a crown; seated on the top of the head like a crown.

The basilisk of older times was a proper kind of serpent, not above three palms long, as some account; and differenced from other serpents by advancing his head, and some white marks, or coronary spots, upon the crown. Brown.

2. It is applied in anatomy to arteries, which are fancied to encompass the heart in the manner of a garland.

The substance of the heart itself is most certainly made and nourished by the blood, which is conveyed to it by the coronary arteries. Bentley's Sermons.

CORONA'TION. n. f. [from corona, Latin.]

1. The act or solemnity of crowning a king.

Fortune smiling at her work therein, that a scaffold of execution should grow a scaffold of coronation. Sidney.

Willingly I came to Denmark,

To shew my duty in your coronation. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

A cough, Sir, which I caught with ringing in the king's affairs upon his coronation day. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Now empress fame had publish'd the renown Of Sh—'s coronation through the town. Dryden's Macbeth.

2. The pomp or assembly present at a coronation.

In pensive thought recal the fancied scene, See coronations rise on ev'ry green. Pope.

Co'aONER. n. f. [from corona.] An officer whose duty is to enquire, on the part of the king, how any violent death was occasioned; for which purpose a jury is impannelled.

Go thou and seek the coroner, and let him fit o' my uncle; for he 's in the third degree of drink; he 's drowned. Shakespeare.

Co'RONET. n. f. [coronetta, Ital. the diminutive of corona, a crown.]

1. An inferior crown worn by the nobility. The coronet of a duke is adorned with strawberry leaves; that of a marquis has leaves with pearls interposed; that of an earl raises the pearls above the leaves; that of a viscount is surrounded with only pearls; that of a baron has only four pearls.

In his livery Walk'd crowns and coronets; realms and islands were As plates dropt from his pocket. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

All the rest are countesses.

— Their coronets say so. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Nor could our nobles hope their bold attempt, Who ruin'd crowns, would coronets exempt. Dryden.

Peers and dukes, and all their sweeping train, And garters, stars, and coronets appear. Pope.

2. An ornamental head-dress, in poetical language.

The rest was drawn into a coronet of gold, richly set with pearl. Sidney.

Under a coronet his flowing hair, In curls, on either cheek play'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

Co'RPORAL. n. f. [corrupted from caporal, French.] The lowest officer of the infantry, whose office is to place and remove the sentinels.

The cruel corp'ral whisper'd in my ear, Five pounds, if rightly tipt, would set me clear. Gay.

CORPORAL of a Ship. An officer that hath the charge of setting the watches and sentries, and relieving them; who sees that all the soldiers and sailors keep their arms neat and clean, and teaches them how to use them. He has a mate under him. Harris.

Co'RPORAL. adj. [corporel, Fr. corpus, Latin.]

1. Relating to the body; belonging to the body.

To relief of lazars and weak age, Of indigent faint souls past corporeal toil, A hundred alms-houses right well supplied. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Render to me some corporeal sign about her, More evident than this. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

That God hath been otherwise seen, with corporeal eyes, exceedeth the small proportion of my understanding. Raleigh.

Beasts enjoy greater sensual pleasures, and feel fewer corporeal pains; and are utter strangers to all those anxious and tormenting thoughts, which perpetually haunt and disquiet mankind. Atterbury.

2. Material; not spiritual. In the present language, when body is used philosophically in opposition to spirit, the word corporeal is used, as, a corporeal being; but otherwise corporeal. Corporeal is, having a body; corporeal, relating to the body. This distinction seems not ancient.

Whither are they vanish'd? Into the air; and what seem'd corporeal Melted, as breath, into the wind. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

And from these corporeal nutriments, perhaps, Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CORPORA'LITY. n. f. [from corporeal.] The quality of being embodied.

If this light be not spiritual, yet it approacheth nearest unto spirituality; and if it have any corporality, then, of all other, the most subtle and pure. Raleigh's History.

Co'RPORALLY. adv. [from corporeal.] Bodily.

The sun is corporally conjoined with basiliscus. Brown.

CORPORATE. adj. [from corpus, Lat.]

1. United in a body or community; enabled to act in legal processes as an individual.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he over-run all Munster and Connaught, defacing and utterly subverting all corporate towns that were not strongly walled. Spenser on Ireland.

The nobles of Athens being not at this time a corporate assembly, therefore the resentment of the commons was usually turned against particular persons. Swift.

2. General; united.

They answer in a joint and corporate voice, That now they are at fall. Shakespeare's Timon.

Co'RPOR-

CO'RPORATENESS. n. f. [from corporate.]

The state of a body corporate; a community. Diæ.

CORPORATION. n. f. [from corpus, Lat.]

A corporation is a body politick, authorized by the king's charter to have a common seal, one head officer or more, and members, able, by their common consent, to grant or receive, in law, any thing within the compass of their charter: even as one man may do by law all things, that by law he is not forbidden; and bindeth the successors, as a single man binds his executor or heir. Cowell.

Of angels we are not to consider only what they are, and do, in regard of their own being; but that also which concerneth them, as they are linked into a kind of corporation amongst themselves, and of society with men. Hooker.

Of this we find some foot-steps in our law, Which doth her root from God and nature take; Ten thousand men she doth together draw, And of them all one corporation make. Davies.

CO'RPORATURE. n. f. [from corpus, Lat.]

The state of being embodied. Diæ.

CORPOREAL. adj. [corporeus, Latin.]

1. Having a body; not immaterial; not spiritual. See CORPORAL.

The swiftness of those circles attribute, Though numberless, to his omnipotence, That to corporeal substances could add Speed almost spiritual. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Having surveyed the image of God in the soul, we are not to omit those characters that God imprinted upon the body, as much as a spiritual substance could be pictured upon a corporeal. South's Sermons.

God being supposed to be a pure spirit, cannot be the object of any corporeal sense. Tillotson.

The course is finish'd which thy fates decreed, And thou from thy corporeal prison freed. Dryden's Fables.

Fix thy corporeal and internal eye On the young gnat, or new engender'd fly. Prior.

2. It is used by Swift inaccurately for corporal.

I am not in a condition to make a true step even on Aimbury Downs; and I declare, that a corporeal false step is worse than a political one. Swift.

CORPOREITY. n. f. [from corporeus, Latin.] Materiality; the quality of being embodied; the state of having a body; bodiliness.

Since philosophy affirmeth, that we are middle substances between the soul and the body, they must admit of some corporeity, which supposeth weight or gravity. Brown.

It is the saying of divine Plato, that man is nature's horizon, dividing betwixt the upper hemisphere of immaterial intellects, and this lower of corporeity. Glanville's Scepsis.

The one attributed corporeity to God, and the other shape and figure. Stillingfleet.

CORPORIFICATION. n. f. [from corporification.] The act of giving body or palpability.

CO'RPORIFY. v. a. [from corpus, Lat.] To embody; to inspiolate into body. Not used.

A certain spirituous substance, extracted out of it, is mistaken for the spirit of the world corporified. Boyle.

CORPS. } n. f. [corps, Fr. corpus, Latin.]

CORPSE. } 1. A body.

That lewd ribauld Laid first his filthy hands on virgin cleene, To spoil her dainty corse, so fair and sheene, Of chastity and honour virginal. Spenser.

2. A body, in contempt.

Though plenteous, all too little seems To stuff this maw, this vast unbid-bound corpe. Milton.

He looks as man was made, with face erect, That scorns his brittle corpe, and seems ashamed He's not all spirit. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

3. A carcase; a dead body; a corse. Not a friend

Greet my poor corpe, where my bones shall be thrown. Shakespeare.

There was the murder'd corpe in covert laid, And violent death in thousand shapes display'd. Dryden's Fables.

See where the corpe of thy dead son approaches. Addison.

The corpe was laid out upon the floor by the emperor's command: he then bid every one light his flambeau, and stand about the dead body. Addison's Guardian.

4. The body, in opposition to the soul. Cold numbness freight bereaves

Her corpe of sense, and th' air her soul receives. Denham.

5. A body of forces.

CO'RPULENCE. } n. f. [corpulentia, Lat.]

CO'RPULENCY. } 1. Bulkiness of body; fleshiness; fulness of flesh.

To what a cumbersome unwieldiness, And burdensome corpulence, my love had grown. Donne.

It is but one species of corpulency; for there may be bulk without fat, from the great quantity of muscular flesh, the case of robust people. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Spissitude; grossness of matter.

The muscular flesh serves for the vibration of the tail; the heaviness and corpulency of the water requiring a great force to divide it. Ray on the Creation.

CO'RPULENT. adj. [corpulentus, Latin.]

Fleshy; bulky; having great bodily bulk.

We say it is a fleshy stile, when there is much periphrasis, and circuit of words; and when, with more than enough, it grows fat and corpulent. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

Excess of nourishment is hurtful; for it maketh the child corpulent, and growing in breadth rather than in height. Bacon.

CORPUSCLE. n. f. [corpusculum, Lat.]

A small body; a particle of matter; an atom; a little fragment.

It will add much to our satisfaction, if those corpuscles can be discovered with microscopes. Newton's Opticks.

Who knows what are the figures of the little corpuscles that compose and distinguish different bodies? Watts's Logick.

CORPUSCULAR. } adj. [from corpus-

CORPUSCULARIAN. } culum, Lat.] Relating to bodies; comprising bodies.

It is the distinguishing epithet of that philosophy, which attempts the rational solution of all physical appearances by the action of one body upon another.

As to natural philosophy, I do not expect to see any principles proposed, more comprehensive and intelligible than the corpuscularian or mechanical. Boyle.

This may be said, that the modern corpuscularians talk, in most things, more intelligibly than the peripateticks. Bentley.

The mechanical or corpuscular philosophy, though peradventure the eldest, as well as the best in the world, had lain dead for many ages in contempt and oblivion. Bentley.

CO'RRACLE. See CORRICLE.

CO'RRADE. v. a. [corrado, Latin.] To rub off; to wear away by frequent rubbing; to scrape together.

CORRADIA'TION. n. f. [con and radius, Latin.] A conjunction of rays in one point.

The impression of colour worketh not but by a cone of direct beams, or right lines, whereof the basis is in the object, and the vertical point in the eye; so as there is a corradia'tion, and conjunction of beams. Bacon's Natural History.

CO'RRÉCT. v. a. [corrigo, correctum, Latin.]

1. To punish; to chastise; to discipline.

Sad accidents, and a state of affliction, is a school of virtue; it corrects levity, and interrupts the confidence of sinning. Taylor.

After he has once been corrected for a lye, you must be sure never after to pardon it in him. Locke on Education.

Children being to be restrained by the parents only in vicious things, a look or nod only ought to correct them when they do amiss. Locke on Education.

2. To amend; to take away faults in writings, life, or things.

This is a defect in the first make of some men's minds, which can scarce ever be corrected afterwards, either by learning or age. Burnet's Theory, Preface.

Correcting Nature, from what actually she is in individuals, to what she ought to be, and what she was created. Dryden.

I writ, because it amused me; I corrected, because it was as pleasant to me to correct as to write. Pope's Preface.

The mind may cool, and be at leisure to attend to its domestick concern: to consider what habit wants to be corrected, and what inclination to be subdued. Rogers.

3. To obviate the qualities of one ingredient by another, or by any method of preparation.

O happy mixture! wherein things contrary do so qualify and correct the one the danger of the other's excess, that neither boldness can make us presume, as long as we are kept under with the sense of our own wretchedness; nor, while we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear be able to tyrannize over us. Hooker.

As, in habitual gout or stone,

The only thing that can be done,

Is to correct your drink and diet.

And keep the inward foe in quiet. Prior.

In cases of acidity, water is the proper drink: its quality of relaxing may be corrected by boiling it with some animal substances; as ivory or hartshorn. Arbutnot on Aliments.

4. To remark faults.

CORRE'CT. adj. [correctus, Latin.] Revised or finished with exactness; free from faults.

What verse can do, he has perform'd in this, Which he presumes the most correct of his. Dryden's Aur. Prol.

Always use the most correct editions: various readings will be only troublesome where the sense is complete. Felton.

CORRECTION. n. f. [from correct.]

1. Punishment; discipline; chastisement; penalty.

Wilt thou, pupil like,

Take thy correction mildly, kiss the rod? Shakespeare's Richard III.

An offensive wife,

That hath enrag'd him on to offer strokes,

As he is striking, holds his infant up,

And hangs resolv'd correction in the arm

That was uprear'd to execution. Shak. Henry IV.

We are all but children here under the great master of the family; and he is pleased, by hopes and fears, by mercies and corrections, to instruct us in virtue. Watts.

One fault was too great lenity to her servants, to whom she gave good counsel, but too gentle correction. Arbutnot.

2. Alteration to a better state; the act of taking away faults; amendment.

Another poet, in another age, may take the same liberty.

liberty with my writings; if, at least, they live long enough to deserve correction. Dryden's Fab. Pref.

3. That which is substituted in the place of any thing wrong.

Corrections or improvements should be adjoined, by way of note or commentary, in their proper places. Watts.

4. Reprehension; animadversion.

They proceed with judgment and ingenuity, establishing their assertions not only with great solidity, but submitting them also unto the correction of future discovery. Brown.

5. Abatement of noxious qualities, by the addition of something contrary.

To make ambitious, wholesome, do not take A dram of country's dulness; do not add Corrections, but as chymists purge the bad. Donne.

CORRECTIONER. n. f. [from correctio.]

One that has been in the house of correction; a jail-bird. This seems to be the meaning in Shakespeare.

I will have you soundly twinged for this, you blue-bottle rogue! you filthy furnished correctioner! Shakespeare's Henry IV.

CORRECTIVE. adj. [from correct.] Having the power to alter or obviate any bad qualities.

Mulberries are pectoral, corrective of bilious alkali. Arbutnot.

CORRECTIVE. n. f.

1. That which has the power of altering or obviating any thing amiss.

The hair, wool, feathers, and scales, which all animals of prey do swallow, are a seasonable and necessary correctives, to prevent their greediness from filling themselves with too succulent a food. Ray on the Creation.

Humanly speaking, and according to the method of the world, and the little correctives supplied by art and discipline, it seldom fails but an ill principle has its course, and nature makes good its blow. South's Sermons.

2. Limitation; restriction.

There seems to be such an instance in the regimen which the human soul exerciseth in relation to the body, that, with certain correctives and exceptions, may give some kind of explication or adumbration thereof. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CORRECTLY. adv. [from correct.] Accurately; exactly; without faults.

There are ladie, without knowing what tenses and participles, adverbs and prepositions are, speak as properly and as correctly as most gentlemen who have been bred up in the ordinary methods of grammar schools. Locke on Education.

Such lays as neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low.

Pope's Essay on Criticism.

CORRECTNESS. n. f. [from correct.] Accuracy; exactness; freedom from faults.

Too much labour often takes away the spirit by adding to the polishing; so that there remains nothing but a dull correctness, a piece without any considerable faults, but with few beauties.

Dryden's Dufresney.

The softness of the flesh, the delicacy of the shape, air, and posture, and the correctness of design, in this statue, are inexpressible. Addison on Italy.

Late, very late, correctness grew our care,
When the tir'd nation breath'd from civil war.

Pope.

Those pieces have never before been printed from the true copies, or with any tolerable degree of correctness. Swift.

CORRECTOR. n. f. [from correct.]

1. He that amends, or alters, by punishment or animadversion.

How many does zeal urge rather to do justice on some sins, than to forbear all sin! How many rather to be correctors than practisers of religion.

Spratt's Sermons.

With all his faults, he sets up to be an universal reformer and corrector of abuses, and a remover of grievances. Swift.

2. He that revises any thing to free it from faults; as the corrector of the press, that amends the errors committed in printing.

I remember a person, who, by his style and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge press in Little Britain, proceeding gradually to an author. Swift.

3. In medicine.

Such an ingredient in a composition, as guards against or abates the force of another; as the lixivial salts prevent the grievous vellications of resinous purges, by dividing their particles, and preventing their adhesion to the intestinal membranes; and as spices and carminative seeds assist the operation of some catharticks, by dissipating wind. In making a medicine, such a thing is called a corrector, which destroys or diminishes a quality that could not otherwise be dispensed with; thus turpentine is corrector of quicksilver, by destroying its fluxility, and making it capable of mixture. Quincy.

TO CORRELATE. v. n. [from con and relatus, Latin.] To have a reciprocal relation, as father and son.

CORRELATE. n. f. One that stands in the opposite relation.

It is one thing for a father to cease to be a father, by casting off his son; and another for him to cease to be so, by the death of his son: in this the relation is at an end for want of a correlate. South.

CORRELATIVE. adj. [from con and relativus, Latin.] Having a reciprocal relation, so that the existence of one in a particular state depends upon the existence of another.

Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, seem nearly to belong one to another. South.

Giving is a relative action, and so requires a correlative to answer it: giving, on one part, transfers no property, unless there be an accepting on the other. South.

CORRELATIVENESS. n. f. [from correlative.] The state of being correlative.

CORREPTION. n. f. [from corripio, corruptum, Latin.] Objurgation; chiding; reprehension; reproof.

If we must be talking of other people's faults, let it not be to defame, but to amend them, by converting our detraction into admonition and fraternal correction. Government of the Tongue.

TO CORRESPOND. v. n. [from con and respondeo, Latin.]

1. To suit; to answer; to be proportionate; to be adequate to; to be adapted to; to fit.

The days, if one be compared with another successively throughout the year, are found not to be equal, and will not justly correspond with any artificial or mechanical equal measures of time. Holder on Time.

Words being but empty sounds, any farther than they are signs of our ideas, we cannot but assent to them, as they correspond to those ideas we have, but no farther than that. Locke.

2. To keep up commerce with another by alternate letters.

CORRESPONDENCE. } n. f. [from correspond.]
CORRESPONDENCY. } spond.

1. Relation; reciprocal adaptation of one thing to another.

Between the law of their heavenly operations, and the actions of men in this our state of mortality, such correspondence there is as maketh it expedient to know in some sort the one, for the other's more perfect direction. Holzer.

Whatever we fancy, things keep their course; and their habitudes, correspondencies, and relations keep the same to one another. Locke.

2. Intercourse; reciprocal intelligence.

I had discovered those uniaxial correspondencies they had used, and engagements they had made to embroil my kingdoms. King Charles.

Sure the villains hold a correspondence With the enemy, and thus they would betray us. Derham.

It happens very oddly, that the pope and I should have the same thought much about the same time: my enemies will be apt to say, that we hold a correspondence together, and act by concert in this matter. Addison.

3. Friendship; interchange of offices or civilities.

Let such military persons be assured, and well reputed of, rather than factious and popular; holding also good correspondence with the other great men in the state. Bacon.

CORRESPONDENT. adj. [from correspond.] Suitable; adapted; agreeable; answerable.

What good or evil is there under the sun, what action correspondent or repugnant unto the law which God hath imposed upon his creatures, but in or upon it God doth work, according to the law which himself hath eternally purposed to keep. Hooker.

And as five zones th' etherial regions bind,
Five correspondent are to earth assign'd. Dryd. Ovid.

CORRESPONDENT. n. f. One with whom intelligence or commerce is kept up by mutual messages or letters.

He was pleased to command me to send to him, and receive from him all his letters from and to all his correspondents at home and abroad. Denham's Dedication.

CORRESPONSIVE. adj. [from correspond.] Answerable; adapted to any thing.

Priam's six gates i' th' city, with massy staples,
And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts,
Sperre up the sons of Troy.

Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

CORRIDOR. n. f. [French.]

1. [In fortification.] The covert way lying round the whole compass of the fortifications of a place.

2. [In architecture.] A gallery or long isle round about a building, leading to several chambers at a distance from each other. Harris.

There is something very noble in the amphitheatre, though the high wall and corridors that went round it are almost intirely ruined. Addison on Italy.

CORRIGIBLE. adj. [from corrigo, Lat.]

1. That which may be altered or amended.

He was taken up very short, and adjudged corrigible for such presumptuous language. Hosoid's Vocal Forest.

3. Corrective; having the power to correct. Not proper, nor used.

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that, if we will either have it steril with idleness, or manured with industry, the power and corrigible authority of this lies in our will. Shakespeare's Othello.

CORRIVAL. n. f. [from con and rival.] Rival; competitor.

They had governours commonly out of the two families of the Geraldines and Butlers, both adversaries and corrivals one against the other. Spenser on Ireland.

He, that doth redeem her thence, might wear
Without corriual all her dignities. Shakespeare. H. IV.

CORRIVALEY.

CORRI'VALRY. n. f. [from corriual.] Competition; opposition.

CORROBORANT. adj. [from corroborate.] Having the power to give strength.

There be divers sorts of bracelets fit to comfort the spirits; and they be of three intentions, refrigerant, corroborant, and aperient. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

TO CORROBORATE. v. a. [con and roboro, Latin.]

1. To confirm; to establish.

Machiavel well noteth, though in an ill-favoured instance, there is no trusting to the force of nature, nor to the bravery of words, except it be corroborate by custom. Bacon.

2. To strengthen; to make strong.

To fortify imagination there be three ways; the authority whence the belief is derived, means to quicken and corroborate the imagination, and means to repeat it and refresh it. Bacon.

It was said that the prince himself had, by the sight of foreign courts, and observation on the different natures of people, and rules of government, much excited and awaked his spirits, and corroborated his judgment. Wotton.

As any limb well and duly exercised grows stronger, the nerves of the body are corroborated thereby. Watts.

CORROBORATION. n. f. [from corroborate.] The act of strengthening or confirming; confirmation by some additional security; addition of strength.

The lady herself procured a bull, for the better corroboration of the marriage. Bacon's Henry VII.

CORROBORATIVE. adj. [from corroborate.] Having the power of increasing strength.

In the cure of an ulcer, with a moist intemperie, as the heart is weakened by too much humidity, you are to mix corroboratives of an astringent faculty; and the ulcer also requireth to be dried. Wise man's Surgery.

TO CORRODE. v. a. [corrodo, Latin.]

To eat away by degrees, as a menstruum; to prey upon; to consume; to wear away gradually.

Statesmen purge vice with vice, and may corrode the bad with bad, a spider with a toad; For so ill thralls not them, but they tame ill, And make her do much good against her will. Donne.

We know that aqua-fortis corroding copper, which is it that gives the colour to verdigrease, is wont to reduce it to a green-blue solution. Boyle on Colours.

The nature of mankind, left to itself, would soon have fallen into dissolution, without the incessant and corroding invasions of so long a time. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Hannibal the Pyreneans past, And steepy Alps, the moulds that nature cast; And with corroding juices, as he went, A passage through the living rock he rent. Dryden's Juvenal.

Fishes, which neither chew their meat, nor grind it in their stomachs, do, by a dissolvent liquor there provided, corrode and reduce it into a chylus. Ray on the Creation.

The blood turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing almost all the diseases of the inflammatory kind. Arbuthnot.

Should jealousy its venom once diffuse, Corroding every thought, and blasting all Love's paradise. Thomson's Spring.

COAROSENT. adj. [from corrode.] Having the power of corroding or wasting any thing away.

CORRODIBILITY. n. f. [from corrodible.] The quality of being corrosible; possibility to be consumed by a menstruum.

CORRODIBLE. adj. [from corrode.] Possible to be consumed or corroded.

VOL. I.

Metals, although corrodible by waters, yet will not suffer a liquation from the powerfulllest heat communicable unto that element. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CO'RRODY. n. f. [from corrodo, Latin.] A defalcation from an allowance or salary, for some other than the original purpose.

Besides these floating burgeisies of the ocean, there are certain flying citizens of the air, which prescribe for a corrody therein. Carver.

In those days even noble persons, and other meaner men, ordered corrodies and pensions to their chaplains and servants out of churches. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CORRO'SIBLE. adj. [from corrode.] Possible to be consumed by a menstruum. This ought to be corrodible.

CORRO'SIBLENESS. n. f. [from corrosible.] Susceptibility of corrosion: rather corrodibility. Dict.

CORRO'SION. n. f. [corrodo, Latin.] The power of eating or wearing away by degrees.

Corrosion is a particular species of dissolution of bodies, either by an acid or a saline menstruum. It is almost wholly designed for the resolution of bodies most strongly compacted, as bones and metals; so that the menstrua here employed have a considerable moment or force. These liquors, whether acid or urinous, are nothing but salts dissolved in a little phlegm; therefore these being solid, and consequently containing a considerable quantity of matter, do both attract one another more, and are also more attracted by the particles of the body to be dissolved: so when the more solid bodies are put into saline menstrua, the attraction is stronger than in other solutions; and the motion, which is always proportional to the attraction, is more violent: so that we may easily conceive, when the motion is in such a manner increased, it should drive the salts into the pores of the bodies, and open and loosen their cohesion, though ever so firm. Quincy.

A kind of poison worketh either by corrosion, or by a secret malignity and enmity to nature. Bacon's Natural History.

That corrosion and dissolution of bodies, even the most solid and durable, which is vulgarly ascribed to the air, is caused merely by the action of water upon them; the air being so far from injuring and preying upon the bodies it environs, that it contributes to their security and preservation. Woodward.

COAROSEIVE. adj. [from corrodo, Latin. It was anciently pronounced with the accent on the first syllable, now indifferently.]

1. Having the power of consuming or wearing away.

Gold, after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts, yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its own form. Grew's Cosmologia.

The sacred sons of vengeance, on whose course, Corrosive famine waits, and kills the year. Thomson's Spring.

2. Having the quality to fret or vex.

If the maintenance of ceremonies be a corrosive to such as oppugn them, undoubtedly to such as maintain them it can be no great pleasure, when they behold that which they reverence is oppugned. Hooker.

CORRO'SIVE. n. f.

1. That which has the quality of wasting any thing away, as the flesh of an ulcer.

He meant his corrosives to apply, And with strict diet tame his stubborn malady. Fairy Queen.

2. That which has the power of fretting, or of giving pain.

Such speeches savour not of God in him that useth them, and unto virtuously disposed minds they are grievous corrosives. Hooker.

Away! though parting be a fretful corrosive, It is applied to a deathful wound. Shakespeare, H. VI. Care is no cure, but rather corrosive, For things that are not to be remedied. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Coarse hoary moulded bread the soldiers thrust upon the points of their spears, railing against Ferdinand, who with such corrupt and pestilent bread would feed them. Knollys.

2. Unsound; putrid.

As superfluous flesh did rot,
Amendment ready still at hand did wair,
To pluck it out with pincers fiery hot,
That soon in him was left no corrupt jot. Spenser.

3. Vitious; tainted with wickedness;
without integrity.

Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying. Ephesians, iv. 29.

Corrupt, corrupt, and tainted in desire. Shakspeare.
These kind of knaves I know, which in this plainness

Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty filky ducking observants.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

Some, who have been corrupt in their morals, have yet been infinitely solicitous to have their children piously brought up. Scotch's Sermons.

CORRUPTER. n. f. [from corrupt.] He that taints or vitiates; he that lessens purity or integrity.

Away, away, corrupters of my faith! Shakspeare.
From the vanity of the Greeks, the corrupters of all truth, who without all ground of certainty vaunt their antiquity, came the error first of all.

Raleigh's History of the World.

Those great corrupters of Christianity, and indeed of natural religion, the Jesuits. Addison.

CORRUPTIBILITY. n. f. [from corruptible.] Possibility to be corrupted.

CORRUPTIBLE. adj. [from corrupt.]

1. Susceptible of destruction by natural decay, or without violence.

Our corruptible bodies could never live the life they shall live, were it not that they are joined with his body which is incorruptible, and that his is in ours as a cause of immortality. Hooker.

It is a devouring corruption of the essential mixture, which, consisting chiefly of an oily moisture, is corruptible through dissipation.

Harvey on Consumptions.

The several parts of which the world consists being in their nature corruptible, it is more than probable, that, in an infinite duration, this frame of things would long since have been dissolved.

Tillotson.

2. Susceptible of external depravation; possible to be tainted or vitiated.

CORRUPTIBLENESS. n. f. [from corruptible.] Susceptibility of corruption.

CORRUPTION. n. f. [from corruptio, Latin.]

1. The principle by which bodies tend to the separation of their parts.

2. Wickedness; perversion of principles;
loss of integrity.

Precepts of morality, besides the natural corruption of our tempers, which makes us averse to them, are so abstracted from ideas of sense, that they seldom get an opportunity for descriptions and images. Addison on the Georgicks.

Amidst corruption, luxury, and rage,
Still leave some ancient virtues to our age. Pope.

3. Putrescence.

The wise contriver, on his end intent,
Careful this fatal error to prevent,
And keep the waters from corruption free,
Mix'd them with salt, and season'd all the sea.

Blackmore.

4. Matter or pus in a sore.

5. The tendency to a worse state.

After my death I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions,
To keep mine honour from corruption,
But such an honest chronicler as Griffith.

Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

6. Cause, or means, of depravation.

The region hath by conquest, and corruption of other languages, received new and differing names.

Raleigh's History.

All those four kinds of corruption are very common in their language; for which reasons the Greek tongue is become much altered.

Brerewood on Languages.

7. [In law.] An infection growing to a man attainted of felony, or treason, and to his issue; for as he loseth all to the prince, or other lord of the fee, so his issue cannot be heir to him, or to any other ancestor, of whom they might have claimed by him; and if he were noble, or a gentleman, he and his children are made ignoble and ungente, in respect of the father. Cowell.

CORRUPTIVE. adj. [from corrupt.] Having the quality of tainting or vitiating.

Carrying a settled habitude unto the corruptive originals. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

For he was strong, and of so mighty corse,
As ever wielded spear in warlike hand. Spenser.

2. A dead body; a carcase: a poetical word.

That from her body, full of filthy sin,
He reft her hateful head, without remorse;
A stream of coal-black blood forth gushed from her corse. Spenser.

Set down the corse; or, by saint Paul,
I'll make a corse of him that disobeys.

Shakspeare's Richard III.

What may this mean?

That thou, dead corse, again in complete steel
Revisit'st thus the glimpses of the moon, Making night hideous? Shakspeare's Hamlet.

Here lay him down, my friends,
Full in my sight, that I may view at leisure
The bloody corse, and count those glorious wounds.

Addison.

CORSELET. n. f. [from corselet, French.] A light armour for the forepart of the body.

Some shirts of mail, some coats of plate put on,
Some don'd a cuirass, some a corselet bright. Fairf.

They lash, they foin, they pass, they strive to tore
Their corselets, and their thinnest parts explore.

Dryden.

But heroes, who o'ercome or die,
Have their hearts hung extremely high;
The strings of which, in battle's heat,
Against their very corselets beat.

Prior.

CORTICAL. adj. [from cortex, bark, Latin.]
Barky; belonging to the outer part;

CORUSCATION. n. f. [from coruscatio, Latin.]
Flash; quick vibration of light.

We see that lightnings and coruscations, which are near at hand, yield no sound.

Bacon's Natural History.

We may learn that sulphureous steams abound in the bowels of the earth, and ferment with minerals, and sometimes take fire with a sudden coruscation and explosion. Newton's Opticks.

How heat and moisture mingle in a mass,
Or belch in thunder, or in lightning blaze;
Why nimble coruscations strike the eye,
And bold tornados bluster in the sky.

Garth's Dispensatory.

CORYMBIATED. adj. [from corymbus, Latin.]
Garnished with branches of berries.

DiB.

CORYMBIFEROUS. adj. [from corymbus and fero, Latin.] Bearing fruit or berries in bunches.

Corymbiferous plants are distinguished into such as have a radiate flower, as the sun-flower; and such as have a naked flower, as the hemp-agrimony, and mugwort: to which are added those a-kin hereunto, such as scabious, teasel, thistle, and the like. Quincy.

CORYMBUS. n. f. [Latin.]

Amongst the ancient botanists, it was used to express the bunches or clusters of berries of ivy:
amongst modern botanists, it is used for a compounded discous flower, whose seeds are not pappous, or do not fly away in down; such are the flowers of daisies, and common marygold. Quincy.

COSCI'NOMANCY. n. f. [from coscivus, a sieve, and μαντεια, divination.] The art

Harris.

COSMETICK. adj. [κοσμητικὸς.] Having the power of improving beauty; beautifying.

No better cosmeticks than a severe temperance and purity, modesty and humility, a gracious temper and calmness of spirit; no true beauty without the signatures of these graces in the very countenance.

Ray on the Creation.

First, rob'd in white, the nymph intent adores, With head uncover'd, the cosmetick pow'rs.

Pope.

CO'SMICAL. adj. [κόσμος.]

1. Relating to the world.

2. Rising or setting with the sun; not acronycal.

The cosmical ascension of a star we term that, when it ariseth together with the sun, or in the same degree of the ecliptick wherein the sun abideth.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CO'SMICALLY. adv. [from cosmical.]

With the sun; not acronycally.

From the rising of this star, not cosmically, that is, with the sun, but heliacally, that is, its emersion from the rays of the sun, the ancients computed their canicular days.

Brown.

COSMO'GONY. n. f. [κόσμος and γένεσις.]

The rise or birth of the world; the creation.

COSMO'GRAPHER. n. f. [κόσμος and γραφω.]

One who writes a description of the world; distinct from geographer, who describes the situation of particular countries.

The ancient cosmographers do place the division of the east and western hemisphere, that is, the first term of longitude, in the Canary or Fortunate Islands, conceiving these parts the extreme habitations westward.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COSMOGRA'PHICAL. adj. [from cosmography.] Relating to the general description of the world.

COSMOGRA'PHICALLY. adv. [from cosmographical.] In a manner relating to the science by which the structure of the world is discovered and described.

If thou wilt bewail my woeful tear, I shall thee give yond' co'sset for thy pain.

Spenser.

COST. n. f. [kost, Dutch.] As this word is found in the remotest Teutonick dialects, even in the Islandick, it is not probably derived to us from the Latin costo;

though it is not unlikely that the French couster comes from the Latin.]

1. The price of any thing.

2. Sumptuousness; luxury.

The city woman bears

The cost of princes on unworthy shoulders.

Shak.

Let foreign princes vainly boast

The rude effects of pride and cost

Of vaster fabricks, to which they Contribute nothing but the pay.

Waller.

3. Charge; expence.

While he found his daughter maintained without his cost, he was content to be deaf to any noise of infamy.

Sidney.

I shall never hold that man my friend,

Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost,

To ransom home revolted Mortimer.

Have we eaten at all of the king's cost? or hath he given us any gift?

2 Samuel, xix. 42.

And wilt thou, O cruel boast!

Put poor nature to such cost?

O! 'twill undo our common mother,

To be at charge of such another.

Crahan.

It is strange to see any ecclesiastical pile, not by ecclesiastical cost and influence, rising above ground; especially in an age in which men's mouths are open against the church, but their hands shut towards it.

South's Sermons.

He whose tale is best, and pleases most,

Should win his supper at our common cost.

Dryden's Fables.

Fourteen thousand pounds are paid by Wood for the purchase of his patent: what were his other visible costs, I know not; what his latent, is variously conjectured.

Swift.

1. A head.

Take him over the costard with the belt of thy sword.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

2. An apple round and bulky like the head.

Many country vicars are driven to shifts; and if our greedy patrons hold us to such conditions, they will make us turn costard mongers, graiers, or sell ale.

Burton on Melancholy.

CO'STIVE. adj. [constipatus, Lat. constipé, Fr.]

1. Bound in the body; having the excretions obstructed.

When the passage of the gall becomes obstructed, the body grows costive, and the excrements of the belly white.

Brown.

While faster than his costive brain indites,

Philo's quick hand in flowing letters writes;

His case appears to me like honest Teague's,

When he was run away with by his legs.

Prior.

2. Close; unpermeable.

Clay in dry seasons is costive, hardening with the sun and wind, till unlocked by industry, so as to admit of the air and heavenly influences.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

CO'STIVENESS. n. f. [from costive] The state of the body in which excretion is obstructed.

Costiveness disperses malign putrid fumes out of the guts and mesentery into all parts of the body, occasioning head-aches, fevers, loss of appetite, and disturbance of concoction.

Harvey.

Costiveness has ill effects, and is hard to be dealt with by physick; purging medicines rather increasing than removing the evil.

Locke on Education.

CO'STLINESS. n. f. [from costly.] Sumptuousness; expensiveness.

Though not with curious costliness, yet with cleanly sufficiency, it entertained me.

Sidney.

Nor have the frugaller sons of fortune any reason to object the costliness; since they frequently pay dearer for less advantageous pleasures.

Glanville's Sceptica.

CO'STLY. adj. [from cost.] Sumptuous; expensive; of a high price.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy, But not exprest in fancy; rich, not gaudy; For the apparel oft proclaims the man.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Leave for a while thy costly country-feat; And, to be great indeed, forget

The nauseous pleasures of the seat.

Dryden.

The chapel of St. Laurence will be perhaps the most costly piece of work on the earth, when completed.

Addison.

He is here speaking of Paradise, which he represents as a most charming and delightful place; abounding with things not only useful and convenient, but even the most rare and valuable, the most costly and desirable.

Woodward's Nat. Hist.

The species are, 1. Shrubby cotton. 2. The most excellent American cotton, with a greenish seed. 3. Annual shrubby cotton, of the island of Providence. 4. The tree cotton. 5. Tree cotton, with a yellow flower. The first sort is cultivated plentifully in Candia, Lemnos, Cyprus, Malta, Sicily, and at Naples; as also between Jerusalem and Damascus, from whence the cotton is brought annually into these northern parts of Europe. The cotton is the wool which incloses or wraps up the seeds, and is contained in a kind of brown husk, or seed-vessel, growing upon this shrub. It is from this sort that the vast quantities of cotton are taken, which furnish our parts of the world. The second and third sorts are annual: these are cultivated in the West Indies in great plenty. But the fourth and fifth sorts grow in Egypt: these abide many years, and often arrive to be trees of great magnitude. Müller.

To COTTON. v. n.

But who will call those noble, who deface, By meaner acts, the glories of their race; Whose only title to their fathers' fame Is couch'd in the dead letters of their name? Dryden's Juvenal.

That great argument for a future state, which St. Paul hath couch'd in the words I have read to you. Atterbury's Sermons.

5. To include secretly; to hide: with under.

The foundation of all parables, is some analogy or similitude between the topical or allusive part of the parable, and the thing couch'd under it, and intended by it. South.

There is all this, and more, that lies naturally couch'd under this allegory. L'Estrange.

The true notion of the institution being lost, the tradition of the deluge, which was couch'd under it, was thereupon at length suspended and lost. Woodward's Natural History.

6. To lay close to another.

And over all: a brazen scales was arm'd, Like plated coat of steel, so couch'd near, That nought might pierce. Spenser.

7. To fix the spear in the rest, in the posture of attack.

The knight 'gan fairly couch his steady spear, And fiercely ran at him with rigorous might. Spenser.

Before each van

Prick forth the sery knights, and couch their spears, Till thickest legions close. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The former war'd in air

His flaming sword; Æneas couch'd his spear. Dryden's Æneid.

8. To depress the condensed crystalline humour or film that overspreads the pupil of the eye. This is improperly called couching the eye, for couching the cataract: with equal impropriety they sometimes speak of couching the patient.

Some artist, whose nice hand

Couches the cataracts, and clears his sight,

And all at once a flood of glorious light

Comes rushing on his eyes. Dennis.

Whether the cataract be wasted by being separated from its vessels, I have never known positively, by dissecting one that had been couch'd. Sharp.

COUCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A seat of repose, on which it is common to lie down dressed.

So Satan fell; and straight a fiery globe Of angels on full sail of wing flew nigh, Who on their plumed vaps receiv'd him soft From his uneasy station, and upbore, As on a floating couch, through the blithe air. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

To loll on couches rich with citron beds, And lay their guilty limbs in Tyrian beds. Dryden's Virgil's Georgicks.

O ye immortal pow'rs, that guard the just, Watch round his couch, and soften his repose! Addison's Cam.

2. A bed; a place of repose.

Let not the royal bed of Denmark be A couch for luxury and damned incest. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

This heap is called by maltsters a couch, or bed, of raw malt. Mortimer's Husbandry.

COUCHANT. adj. [couchant, French.]

Lying down; squatting.

If a lion were the coat of Judah, yet were it not probably a lion rampant, but rather couchant or dormant. Brown.

As a tiger, who by chance hath spy'd, In some purlieu, two gentle fawns at play, Straight couches close; then rising, changes oft His couchant watch. Milton's Paradise Lost.

COUCHEE. n. f. [French.] Bedtime; the time of visiting late at night.

None of her sylvan subjects made their court; Levees and couches pass'd without resort. Dryden.

COUCHER. n. f. [from couch.] He that couches or depresses cataracts.

COUCHFELLOW. n. f. [couch and fellow.] Bedfellow; companion.

I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, and your couchfellow, Nim; or else you had looked through the grate like a gemmy of baboons. Shakespeare.

COUCHGRASS. n. f. A weed.

The couchgrass, for the first year, insensibly robs most plants in sandy grounds apt to graze. Mortimer's Husbandry.

COVE. n. f.

1. A small creek or bay.

2. A shelter; a cover.

COVENANT.

COVENANT. n. s. [covenant, French; convantum, Latin.]

1. A contract; a stipulation.

He makes a covenant never to destroy
The earth again by flood; nor let the sea Surpass his bounds. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The English make the ocean their abode,
Whose ready sails with ev'ry wind can fly,
And make a covenant with th' inconstant sky.

Waller.

Some men live as if they have made a covenant with hell: let divines, fathers, friends, say what they will, they stop their ears against them.

L'Estrange.

2. An agreement on certain terms; a compact.

A covenant is a mutual compact, as we now consider it, betwixt God and man; consisting of mercies, on God's part, made over to man; and of conditions, on man's part, required by God.

Hammond's Practical Catechism.

3. A writing containing the terms of agreement.

I shall but lend my diamond till your return;
let there be covenants drawn between us.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

TO COVENANT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To bargain; to stipulate.

His lord used commonly so to covenant with him, which if at any time the tenant disliked, he might freely depart at his pleasure.

Spenser's State of Ireland.

It had been covenanted between him and the king of England that neither of them should treat of peace or truce with the French king.

Hayward on Edward VI.

By words men come to know one another's minds; by these they covenant and confederate.

South.

Jupiter covenanted with him, that it should be hot or cold, wet or dry, calm or windy, as the tenant should direct.

L'Estrange.

2. To agree with another on certain terms: with for before either the price or the thing purchased.

They covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver.

Matthew.

Pointing to a heap of sand,
For ev'ry grain, to live a year demand;
But, ah! unmindful of th' effect of time,
Forgot to covenant for youth and prime.

Gart's Ovid.

COVENANTER. n. s. [from covenant.] A party to a covenant; a stipulator; a bargainer.

Both of them were respective rites of their admission into the several covenants, and the cove-nanters become thereby entitled to the respective privileges.

Hyldiff's Parergon.

COVENANTER. n. s. [from covenant.] One who takes a covenant. A word introduced in the civil wars.

The covenanters shall have no more assurance of mutual assistance each from other, after the taking of the covenant, than they had before.

Oxford Reasons against the Covenant.

COVENOUS. adj. [from covin.] Fraudulent; collusive; trickish.

I wish some means devised for the restraint of these inordinate and covinous leases of lands, holden in chief, for hundreds or thousands of years.

Bacon's Office of Alienation.

TO COVER. v. a. [couvrir, French.]

1. To overspread any thing with something else.

The pastures are clothed with flocks, the valleys also are covered over with corn.

Psalms lxx. 13.

Sea cover'd sea,

Sea without shore.

Milton.

The flaming mount appear'd

In Dothan cover'd with a camp of fire.

Milton.

Go to thy fellows, bid them cover the table,
serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

2. To conceal under something laid over.

Nor be their outward only with the skins
Of beasts, but inward nakedness, much more Opprobrious, with his robe of righteousness
Arraying, cover'd from his father's sight. Milton.

Cover me, ye pines!

Ye cedars with innumerable boughs
Hide me, that I may never see them more. Milton.

In life's cool vale let my low scene be laid,
Cover me, gods, with Tempe's thickest shade.

Cowley.

Or lead me to some solitary place,
And cover my retreat from human race.

Dryden's Virgil.

3. To hide by superficial appearances.

4. To overwhelm; to bury.

Raillery and wit serve only to cover nonsense with shame, when reason has first proved it to be mere nonsense. Watts.

5. To conceal from notice or punishment.

Charity shall cover the multitude of sins.

1 Peter, iv. 8.

Thou may'st repent,

And one bad act with many deeds well done

May'st cover.

Milton.

6. To shelter; to protect.

His calm and blameless life
Does with substantial blessedness abound,
And the soft wings of peace cover him round.

Cowley.

7. To incubate; to brood on.

Natural historians observe, that only the male birds have voices; that their songs begin a little before breeding time, and end a little after; that, whilst the hen is covering her eggs, the male generally takes his stand upon a neighbouring bough within her hearing, and by that means amuses and diverts her with his songs during the whole time of her sitting. Addison's Spectator.

8. To copulate with a female.

9. To wear the hat, or garment of the head, as a mark of superiority or independence.

The king had conferred the honour of grandee upon him, which was of no other advantage or signification to him, than to be covered in the presence of that king.

Dryden.

COVER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing that is laid over another.

The secundine is but a general cover, not shaped according to the parts; the skin is shaped according to the parts. Bacon.

The fountains could be strengthened no other way than by making a strong cover or arch over them. Burnet's Theory.

Orestes' bulky rage,

Unsatisfied with margins closely writ,
Foams o'er the covers, and not finish'd yet.

Dryden's Juvenal.

With your hand, or any other cover, you stop the vessel so as wholly to exclude the air.

Ray on the Creation.

2. A concealment; a screen; a veil; a superficial appearance, under which something is hidden.

The truth and reason of things may be artificially and effectually insinuated, under the cover either of a real fact or of a supposed one. L'Estr.

As the spleen has great inconveniences, so the pretence of it is a handsome cover for imperfec-tions. Collier on the Spleen.

3. Shelter; defence from weather.

In the mean time, by being compelled to lodge in the field, which grew now to be very cold, whilst his army was under cover, they might be forced to retire. Clarendon.

COVER-SHAME. n. s. [cover and shame.]

Some appearance used to conceal infamy.

Does he put on holy garments for a cover-shame
of lewdness? Dryden's Spanish Friar.

COVERING. n. s. [from cover.] Dress;
vesture; any thing spread over another.

The women took and spread a covering over the well's mouth. 2 Sam. xvii. 19.

Bring some covering for this naked soul,
Whom I'll intreat to lead me. Shak. King Lear.

Through her flesh methinks is seen
The brighter soul that dwells within;

Our eyes the subtle covering pass,
And see the lily through its glass. Cowley.

Then from the floor he rais'd a royal bed,
With coverings of Sidonian purple spread.

Dryden's Fables.

Sometimes Providence casts things so, that truth and interest lie the same way; and when it is wrapt up in this covering, men can be content to follow
it. South.

COVERLET. n. s. [couvreliet, French.]

The outermost of the bedclothes; that under which all the rest are concealed.

Lay her in lilies and in violets,
And silken curtains over her display,

And odour'd sheets, and arras coverlets. Spenser.

This done, the host produc'd the genial bed,
Which with no costly coverlet they spread.

Dryden's Fables.

I was, for want of a house and bed, forced to lie on the ground, wrapt up in my coverlet. Swift.

COVERT. n. s. [from cover; couvert, Fr.]

1. A shelter; a defence.

Let mine outcasts dwell with thee, Moab; be thou a covert to them from the face of the spoiler.

Isaiah, xvi. 4.

There shall be a tabernacle for a shadow in the day-time from the heat, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from storm and rain. Isaiah, iv. 6.

They are by sudden alarm, or watch-word, to be called out to their military motions, under sky or covert, according to the season, as was the Roman wont. Milton on Education.

It was the hour of night, when thus the Son
Commun'd in silent walk, then laid him down
Under the hospitable covert nigh
Of trees thick interwoven. Milton.

Now have a care your carnations catch not too much wet, therefore retire them to covert.

Evelyn's Calendar.

2. A thicket, or hiding place.

Tow'rs him I made; but he was ware of me,
And stole into the covert of the wood.

Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

I shall be your faithful guide,
Through this gloomy covert wide. Milton.

Thence to the coverts, and the conscious groves,
The scenes of his past triumphs and his loves.

Denham.

Deep into some thick covert would I run,
Impenetrable to the stars or sun.

Dryden's State of Innocence.

The deer is lodg'd; I've track'd her to her covert.

Be sure ye mind the word; and when I give it,
Rush in at once, and seize upon your prey.

Addison's Cato.

COVERT. adj. [couvert, French.]

1. Sheltered; not open; not exposed.

You are, of either side the green, to plant a covert alley, upon carpenter's work, about twelve foot in height, by which you may go in shade into the garden. Bacon.

The fox is a beast also very prejudicial to the husbandman, especially in places that are near forest-woods and covert places. Martin, Husbandry.

Together let us beat this ample field,
Try what the open, what the covert yield.

Pope's Essays.

2. Secret; hidden; private; insidious.

And let us presently go sit in council,
How covert matters may be best disclos'd,
And open perils surest answered.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

By

By what best way,
Whether of open war, or covert guile,
We now debate. Milton's Paradise Lost.

COVERT. adj. [covert, French.] The state of a woman sheltered by marriage under her husband; as covert baron, feme covert.

Instead of her being under covert baron, to be under covert feme myself! to have my body disabled, and my head fortified! Dryd. Spanish Friar.

COVERT-WAY. n. s. [from covert and way.]

It is, in fortification, a space of ground level with the field, on the edge of the ditch, three or four fathom broad, ranging quite round the half moons, or other works toward the country. One of the greatest difficulties in a siege is to make a lodgment on the covert-way, because usually the beleagued pallisade it along the middle, and undermine it on all sides. It is sometimes called the corridor, and sometimes the counterescarp, because it is on the edge of the scarp. Harris.

COVERTLY. adv. [from covert.] Secretly; closely; in private; with privacy.

Yet still Aragnol (to his foe was hight)
Lay lurking, covertly him to surprise.

Spenser's Muirpotmos.

How can'st thou cross this marriage?—
—Not honestly, my lord; but so covertly, that no dishonesty shall appear in me.

Shakespeare's Much ado about Nothing.

Amongst the poets, Perilus covertly strikes at Nero; some of whose verses he recites with scorn and indignation. Dryden.

COVERTNESS. n. s. [from covert.] Secrecy; privacy. DiB.

COVERTURE. n. s. [from covert.]

1. Shelter; defence; not exposure.

It may be it is rather the shade, or other coverture, that they take liking in, than the virtue of the herb. Bacon's Natural History.

He saw their shame, that sought Vain covertures. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The winds being so fierce, and so severe, as not to suffer any thing to thrive beyond the height of a shrub, in those islands, unless protected by walls, or other like coverture. Woodward.

2. [In law.] The estate and condition of a married woman, who, by the laws of our realm, is in potestate viri, and therefore disabled to contract with any, to the prejudice of herself or her husband, without his allowance or confirmation. Cowell.

The infancy of King Edward VI. and the coverture of queen Mary, did, in fact, disable them to accomplish the conquest of Ireland.

Davies on Ireland.

To COVET. v. a. [convoyer, French.]

1. To desire inordinately; to desire beyond due bounds.

If it be a sin to covet honour,
I am the most offending man alive. Shak. Hen. V.
I am yet

Unknown to woman; never was forsworn;
Scarcely have coveted what was mine own;
At no time broke my faith. Shaksp. Macbeth.

O father! can it be, that souls sublime
Return to visit our terrestrial clime?
And that fine generous mind, releas'd by death,
Can covet lazy limbs and mortal breath?

Dryden's Æneid.

2. To desire earnestly.

All things coveting as much as may be to be like unto God in being ever; that which cannot hereunto attain personally, doth seek to continue itself another way, by offspring and propagation.

Hooker.

But covet earnestly the best gifts. 1 Cor. xii. 31.

To COVET. v. n. To have a strong desire.

The love of money is the root of all evil, which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith. 1 Tim. vi.

COVETABLE. adj. [from covet.] To be wished for; to be coveted. DiB.

COVETISE. n. s. [convoitise, French.] Avarice; covetousness of money. Not in use.

Most wretched wight, whom nothing might suffice,

Whose greedy lust did lack in greatest store;
Whose need had end, but no end covetise. Fairy Q.

COVETOUS. adj. [convoteux, French.]

1. Inordinately desirous; eager.

While cumber'd with my dropping cloaths I lay,
The cruel nation, covetous of prey,
Stain'd with my blood th' unhospitable coast.

Dryden's Æneid.

2. Inordinately eager of money; avaricious.

An heart they have exercised with covetous practices.

2 Peter, ii. 14.

What he cannot help in his nature, you must not account a vice in him: you must in no ways say he is covetous.

Shakespeare.

Let never so much probability hang on one side of a covetous man's reasoning, and money on the other, it is easy to foresee which will outweigh.

Locke.

3. Desirous; eager: in a good sense.

Sheba was never

More covetous of wisdom and fair virtue,
Than this fair soul shall be. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

He that is envious or angry at a virtue that is not his own, at the perfection or excellency of his neighbour, is not covetous of the virtue, but of its reward and reputation; and then his intentions are polluted. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

COVETOUSLY. adv. [from covetous.] Avariciously; eagerly.

If he care not for 't, he will supply us easily; if he covetously reserve it, how shall 's get it?

Shakespeare.

COVETOUSNESS. n. s. [from covetous.]

1. Avarice; inordinate desire of money; eagerness of gain.

He that takes pains to serve the ends of covetousness, or ministers to another's lust, or keeps a shop of impurities or intemperance, is idle in the worst sense.

Taylor's Holy Living.

Covetousness debaseth a man's spirit, and sinks it into the earth. Tutorson.

2. Eagerness; desire: in a neutral sense.

When workmen strive to do better than well,
They do confound their skill in covetousness.

Shakespeare's King John.

COVEY. n. s. [covée, French.]

1. A hatch; an old bird with her young ones.

2. A number of birds together.

A flight of wasps and covey of partridges went to a farmer, and begged a sup of him to quench their thirst. L'Estrange.

A covey of partridges springing in our front, put our infantry in disorder. Addison's Freeholder.

There would be no walking in a shady wood, without springing a covey of toasts.

Addison's Guardian.

COUGH. n. s. [kuch, Dutch.] A convulsion of the lungs, vellicated by some sharp serosity. It is pronounced coff.

In consumptions of the lungs, when nature cannot expel the cough, men fall into fluxes of the belly, and then they die. Bacon's Natural History.

For his dear sake long restless nights you bore,
While rattling coughs his heaving vessels tore.

Smirk.

To COUGH. v. n. [kuchen, Dutch.] To have the lungs convulsed; to make a noise in endeavouring to evacuate the peccant matter from the lungs.

Thou didst drink

The stale of horses, and the gilded puddle
Which beasts would cough at.

Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

Thou hast quarrelled with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath wakened thy dog that hath lain asleep in the sun.

Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

The first problem enquireth why a man doth cough, but not an ox or cow; whereas the contrary is often observed. Brown.

If any humour be discharged upon the lungs, they have a faculty of casting it up by coughing.

Ray on the Creation.

I cough like Horace, and tho' lean, am short.

Pope's Epistles.

To COUGH. v. a. To eject by a cough; to expectorate.

If the matter be to be discharged by expectoration, it must first pass into the substance of the lungs; then into the aspera arteria, or windpipe; and from thence be coughed up, and spit out by the mouth. Wise man's Surgery.

COUGH-R. n. s. [from cough.] One that coughs. DiB.

COVIN. } n. s. A deceitful agreement
COVINE. } between two or more, to the hurt of another. Cowell.

COVING. n. s. [from cove.] A term in building, used of houses that project over the ground-plot, and the turned projection arched with timber, lathed and plastered. Harris.

COULD. [the imperfect preterite of can. See CAN.] Was able to; had power to.

And if I have done well, and as is fitting the story, it is that which I desired; but if slenderly and meanly, it is that which I could attain unto.

2 Mac. xv. 38.

What if he did not all the ill he could?
Am I oblig'd by that t' assist his rapines,
And to maintain his murders?

Dryden's Spanish Friar.

COULTER. n. s. [culter, Latin.] The sharp iron of the plough, which cuts the earth perpendicular to the share.

The Israelites went down to sharpen every man his share, and his coulter, and his ax, and his mattock. 1 Samuel, xiii. 20.

Literature is the grindstone to sharpen the coulters, to whet their natural faculties.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

The plough for stiff clays is long and broad; and the coulter long, and very little bending, with a very large wing. Mortimer.

COUNCIL. n. s. [concilium, Latin.]

1. An assembly of persons met together in consultation.

The chief priests, and all the council, sought false witness. Matthew, xxvi. 59.

The Stygian council thus dissolv'd; and forth
In order came the grand infernal peers. Milton.

In histories composed by politicians, they are for drawing up a perpetual scheme of causes and events, and preserving a constant correspondence between the camp and the council table.

Addison's Spectator.

2. Act of publick deliberation.

The scepter'd heralds call

To council in the city gates: anon
Grey-headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd, Assamble, and harangues are heard. Milton.

3. An assembly of divines to deliberate upon religion.

Some borrow all their religion from the fathers of the Christian church, or from their synods or councils. Watts.

4. Persons called together to be consulted on any occasion, or to give advice.

They

They being thus assembled, are more properly a council to the king, the great council of the kingdom, to advise his majesty in those things of weight and difficult which concern both the king and people, than a court. Bacon's Adv. to Villiers.

5. The body of privy counsellors.

Without the knowledge
Either of king or council, you made bold
To carry into Flanders the great seal.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

COUNCIL-BOARD. n. f. [council and board.] Council-table; table where matters of state are deliberated.

He hath commanded,
To-morrow morning to the council-board
He be convened. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

When ship-money was transacted at the council-board, they looked upon it as a work of that power they were oblig'd to trust. Clarendon.

And Pallas, if she broke the laws,
Must yield her for the stronger cause;
A shame to one so much ador'd
For wisdom at Jove's council-board. Swift.

CO'UNSEL. n. f. [consilium, Latin.]

1. Advice; direction.

There is as much difference between the counsel that a friend giveth, and that a man giveth himself, as there is between the counsel of a friend and of a flatterer. Bacon.

The best counsel he could give him was, to go to his parliament. Clarendon.

Beware me not,
Whereon I live, thy gentle looks, thy aid,
Thy counsel, in this uttermost distress. Milton.

2. Consultation; interchange of opinions.

I hold as little counsel with weak fear
As you, or any Scot that lives. Shak. Henry IV.

3. Deliberation; examination of consequences.

They all confess, therefore, in the working of that first cause, that counsel is used, reason followed, and a way observed. Hooker.

4. Prudence; art; machination.

O how comely is the wisdom of old men, and understanding and counsel to men of honour.

Eccles. xxv. 5.

There is no wisdom, nor understanding, nor counsel, against the Lord. Prov. xxi. 30.

5. Secrecy; the secrets entrusted in consulting.

The players cannot keep counsel; they'll tell all. Shakespeare.

6. Scheme; purpose; design. Not in use.

The counsel of the Lord standeth for ever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations.

Psal. xxxiii. 11.

O God, from whom all holy desires, all good counsels, and all just works do proceed.

Common Prayer.

7. Those that plead a cause; the counsellors. This seems only an abbreviature usual in conversation.

Your hand, a covenant; we will have these things set down by lawful counsel. Shak. Cymbeline.

For the advocates and counsel that plead, patience and gravity of learning is an essential part of justice; and an overspeaking judge is no well-tuned cymbal. Bacon.

What says my counsel learned in the law? Pope.

CO'UNSEL. v. a. [consilior, Latin.]

1. To give advice or counsel to any person.

But say, Lucetta, now we are alone,
Wouldst thou then counsel me to fall in love?
Shakespeare.

Truth shall nurse her;
Holy and heavenly thoughts still counsel her.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

There is danger of being unfaithfully counsel'd, and more for the good of them that counsel than for him that is counsel'd.

Bacon.

Ill fortune never crushed that man whom good fortune deceived not; I therefore have counsel'd my friends never to trust to her fairer side, though she seemed to make peace with them.

Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

He supports my poverty with his wealth, and I counsel and instruct him with my learning and experience. Taylor.

2. To advise any thing.

The less had been our shame,
The less his counsel'd crime which brands the Grecian name. Dryden's Fables.

CO'UNSELLABLE. adj. [from counsel.]

Willing to receive and follow the advice or opinions of others.

Very few men of so great parts were more counsellable than he; so that he would seldom be in danger of great errors, if he would communicate his own thoughts to disquisition. Clarendon.

CO'UNSELLOR. n. f. [from counsel. This should rather be written counsellor.]

1. One that gives advice.

His mother was his counsellor to do wickedly. 2 Chron. xxii. 3.

She would be a counsellor of good things, and a comfort in cares. Wisdom, viii. 9.

Death of thy soul! Those linen cheeks of thine
Are counsellors to fear. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. Confidant; bosom friend.

In such green palaces the first kings reign'd,
Slept in their shades, and angels entertain'd;
With such old counsellors they did advise,
And by frequenting sacred groves grew wise. Waller.

3. One whose province is to deliberate and advise upon publick affairs.

You are a counsellor,
And by that virtue no man dare accuse you.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Of counsellors there are two sorts: the first, consiliarii nati, as I may term them; such are the prince of Wales, and others of the king's sons: but the ordinary sort of counsellors are such as the king, out of a due consideration of their worth and abilities, and withal of their fidelity to his person and to his crown, calleth to be of council with him, in his ordinary government.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

4. One that is consulted in a case of law; a lawyer.

A counsellor bred up in the knowledge of the municipal and statute laws, may honestly inform a just prince how far his prerogative extends.

Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

CO'UNSELLORSHIP. n. f. [from counsellor.] The office or post of a privy counsellor.

Of the great offices and officers of the kingdom, the most part are such as cannot well be severed from the counsellorship.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

TO COUNT. v. a. [compter, Fr. computare, Latin.]

1. To number; to tell.

Here thro' this grate I can count every one,
And view the Frenchmen. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The vicious count their years; virtuous, their acts. Johnson.

For the preferments of the world, he that would reckon up all the accidents that they depend upon, may as well undertake to count the sands, or to sum up infinity.

South.

When men in sickness ling'ring lie,
They count the tedious hours by months and years. Dryden.

Argos now rejoice, for Thebes lies low;
Thy slaughter'd sons now smile, and think they won.

When they can count more Theban ghosts than theirs. Dryden.

2. To preserve a reckoning.

Some people in America counted their years by the coming of certain birds amongst them at their certain seasons, and leaving them at others. Locke.

3. To reckon; to place to an account.

He believed in the Lord, and he counted it to him for righteousness. Genesis, xv. 6.

Not barely the plowman's pains is to be counted into the bread we eat; the labour of those who broke the oxen, must all be charged on the account of labour. Locke.

4. To esteem; to account; to reckon; to consider as having a certain character, whether good or evil.

When once it comprehended any thing above this, as the differences of time, affirmations, negations, and contradictions in speech, we then count it to have some use of natural reason. Hooker.

Count not thine handmaid for a daughter of Belial. 1 Sam. i.

Nor shall I count it heinous to enjoy
The publick marks of honour and reward
Confer'd upon me. Milton's Agonistes.

You would not wish to count this man a foe!
In friendship, and in hatred, obstinate. Philips's Britom.

5. To impute to; to charge to.

All th' impossibilities, which poets
Count to extravagance of loose description, Shall sooner be. Rowe's Ambitious Stepmother.

TO COUNT. v. n. To found an account or scheme: with upon.

I think it a great error to count upon the genius of a nation, as a standing argument in all ages. Swift.

1. The form of the face; the system of the features.

2. Air; look.

A made countenance about her mouth, between smiling and smiling; her head, bowed somewhat down, seemed to languish with over-much idleness. Sidney.

Well, Suffolk, yet thou shalt not see me bluish,
Nor change my countenance for this arrest:
A heart unspotted is not easily daunted.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

So spake our sire, and by his countenance seem'd

Entering on studious thoughts abstract. Milton.

To whom, with countenance calm, and soul sedate,

Thus Turnus. Dryden's Aeneid.

3. Calmness of look; composure of face.

She smil'd severe; nor with a troubled look,
Or trembling hand, the fun'ral present took;
Ev'n kept her countenance, when the lid remov'd
Disclos'd the heart unfortunately lov'd.

Dryden's Fables.

The two great maxims of any great man at court are, always to keep his countenance, and never to keep his word. Swift.

4. Confidence

4. Confidence of mien; aspect of assurance: it is commonly used in these phrases, in countenance, and out of countenance.

The night beginning to persuade some retiring place, the gentlewoman, even out of countenance before she began her speech, invited me to lodge that night with her father. Sidney.

We will not make your countenance to fall by the answer ye shall receive. Bacon's New Atlantis.

Their best friends were out of countenance, because they found that the imputations, which their enemies had laid upon them, were well grounded. Clarendon.

Your examples will meet it at every turn, and put it out of countenance in every place; even in private corners it will soon lose confidence. Spratt's Sermons.

If the outward profession of religion and virtue were once in practice and countenance at court, a good treatment of the clergy would be the necessary consequence. Swift.

If those preachers would look about, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance, and the other asleep. Swift.

It is a kind of ill manners to offer objections to a fine woman, and a man would be out of countenance that should gain the superiority in such a contest: a coquette logician may be rallied, but not contradicted. Addison's Freeholder.

It puts the learned in countenance, and gives them a place among the fashionable part of mankind. Addison's Freeholder.

5. Kindness or ill-will, as it appears upon the face.

Yet the stout fairy, 'mongst the midst crowd, Thought all their glory vain in knightly view, And that great prince too, exceeding proud, That to strange knight no better countenance allow'd. Spenser.

6. Patronage; appearance of favour; appearance on any side; support.

The church of Christ, which held that profession which had not the publick allowance and countenance of authority, could not use the exercise of the Christian religion but in private. Hooker.

His majesty maintained an army here, to give strength and countenance to the civil magistrate. Davies on Ireland.

Now then we'll use

His countenance for the battle; which being done, Let her who would be rid of him devise

His speedy taking off. Shakespeare's King Lear.

This is the magistrate's peculiar province, to give countenance to piety and virtue, and to rebuke vice and profaneness. Asterbury.

7. Superficial appearance; show; resemblance.

The election being done, he made countenance of great discontent thereat. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Oh, you blessed ministers above!

Keep me in patience, and with ripen'd time Unfold the evil, which is here wrapt up

In countenance. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

Bianca's love

Made me exchange my state with Tranio, While he did bear my countenance in the town. Shakespeare.

- To CO'UNTENANCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

COUNTERROLLMENT. n. f. [from counter-roll.] A counter account; controlment.

This manner of exercising of this office, hath many testimonies, interchangeable warrants, and counterrollments, whereof each, running through the hands, and resting in the power, of many several persons, is sufficient to argue and convince all manner of falsehood. Bacon.

CO'UNTERSCARP. n. f. [from counter and scarp.] That side of the ditch which is next the camp, or properly the talus that supports the earth of the covert-way; although by this term is often understood the whole covert-way, with its parapet and glacis: and so it is to be understood when it is said the enemy lodged themselves on the counterscarp. Harris.

TO COUNTERSIGN. v. a. [from counter and sign.] To sign an order or patent of a superiour, in quality of secretary, to render it more authentick. Thus charters are signed by the king, and countersigned by a secretary of state, or lord chancellor. Chambers.

COUNTERTENOR. n. f. [from counter and tenor.] One of the mean or middle parts of musick; so called, as it were, opposite to the tenor. Harris.

I am deaf: this deafness unqualifies me for all company, except a few friends with countertenor voices. Swift.

COUNTERTIDE. n. f. [counter and tide.] Contrary tide; fluctuations of the water.

Such were our countertides at land, and so Presaging of the fatal blow,
In your prodigious ebb and flow. Dryden.

COUNTERTIME. n. f. [counter and time; contretemps, French.]

1. The defence or resistance of a horse, that intercepts his cadence, and the measure of his manage. Farrier's Dict.
2. Defence; opposition.

Let cheerfulness on happy fortune wait,
And give not thus the countertime to fate. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

COUNTERTURN. n. f. [counter and turn.] The catastasis, called by the Romans status, the height and full growth of the play, we may call properly the counterturn, which destroys that expectation, embroils the action in new difficulties, and leaves you far distant from that hope in which it found you. Dryden on Dramatick Poessy.

TO COUNTERVAIL. v. a. [contra and valeo, Latin.] To be equivalent to; to have equal force or value; to act against with equal power.

In some men there may be found such qualities as are able to countervail those exceptions which might be taken against them, and such men's authority is not likely to be shaken off. Hooker.

And therewithal he fiercely at him flew,
And with important outrage him assail'd;
Who, soon prepar'd to field, his sword forth drew,
And him with equal valour countervail'd.

Fairy Queen.
The outward streams, which descend, must be of so much force as to countervail all that weight whereby the ascending side does exceed the other.

Wilkins's Dædalus.
We are to compute, that, upon balancing the account, the profit at last will hardly countervail the inconveniencies that go along with it. L'Esfrange.
COUNTERVAİL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Equal weight; power or value sufficient to obviate any effect or objection.
2. That which has equal weight or value with something else.

Surely, the present pleasure of a sinful act is a poor countervail for the bitterness of the review, which begins where the action ends, and lasts for ever. South's Sermons.

COUNTERVIEW. n. f. [counter and view.]

1. Opposition; a posture in which two persons front each other.

Mean while, ere thus was sinn'd and judg'd on earth,

Within the gates of hell sat sin and death,
In counterview. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Contrast; a position in which two dissimilar things illustrate each other.

I have drawn some lines of Linger's character, on purpose to place it in counterview or contrast with that of the other company. Swift.

TO COUNTERWORK. v. a. [counter and work.] To counteract; to hinder any effect by contrary operations.

But heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole:

That counterworks each folly and caprice;
That disappoints th' effect of ev'ry vice. Pope.

CO'UNTESS. n. f. [comitissa, Lat. comitessa, French.] The lady of an earl or count.

I take it, she that carries up the train,
Is that old noble lady, the duchess of Norfolk.
—It is, and all the rest are countesses.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
It is the peculiar happiness of the countess of Abington to have been so truly loved by you while she was living, and so gratefully honoured after she was dead. Dryden.

CO'UNTING-HOUSE. n. f. [count and house.] The room appropriated by traders to their books and accounts.

Men in trade seldom think of laying out money upon land, till their profit has brought them in more than their trade can well employ; and their idle bags cambering their counting-houses, put them upon emptying them. Locke.

CO'UNTLESS. adj. [from count.] Innumerable; without number; not to be reckoned.

Ay, tear for tear, and loving kiss for kiss,
Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips:
O were the sum of these that I should pay Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them. Shak.
But oh, her mind, that ocean which includes Legions of mischief, countless multitudes
Of former curses. Dante.

By one countless sum of woes oppress'd,
Hoary with cares, and ignorant of rest,
We find the vital springs relax'd and worn;
Thus, thro' the round of age, to childhood we return. Prior.

I see, I cried, his woes, a countless train;
I see his friends o'erwhelm'd beneath the main.
Pope's Odyssey.

CO'UNTRY. n. f. [contrée, Fr. contrata, Low Latin; supposed to be contracted from contrerata.]

1. A tract of land; a region, as distinguished from other regions.

They require to be examined concerning the descriptions of those countries of which they would be informed. Spratt.

2. The parts of a region distant from cities or courts; rural parts.

Would I a house for happiness erect,
Nature alone should be the architect;
She'd build it more convenient than great,
And doubtless in the country chuse her seat. Cowley.
I see them hurry from country to town, and then from the town back again into the country. Spett.

3. The place which any man inhabits, or in which he at present resides.

Send out more horses, skirre the country round,
Hang those that talk of fear. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

4. The place of one's birth; the native soil.

The king set on foot a reformation in the ornaments and advantages of our country. Spratt.
O save my country, heav'n! shall be your last. Pope.

5. The inhabitants of any region.

All the country, in a general voice,
Cried hate upon him; all their pray'rs and love
Were set on Hareford. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

CO'UNTRY. adj.

1. Rustick; rural; villatick;

Cannot a country wench know, that, having received a shilling from one that owes her three, and a shilling also from another that owes her three, the remaining debts in each of their hands are equal? Locke.

I never meant any other, than that Mr. Trot should confine himself to country dances. Spectator.

He comes no nearer to a positive, clear idea of a positive infinite, than the country fellow had of the water which was yet to pass the channel of the river where he stood. Locke.

Talk but with country people, or young people, and you shall find that the notions they apply this name to, are so odd, that nobody can imagine they were taught by a rational man. Locke.

A country gentleman, learning Latin in the university, removes thence to his mansion-house. Locke.

The low mechanics of a country town do somewhat outdo him. Locke.

Come, we'll e'en to our country seat repair,
The native home of innocence and love. Norris.

2. Of an interest opposite to that of courts: as, the country party.

She laughing the cruel tyrant to scorn, spake in her country language. 2 Maccabees, vii. 27.

4. Rude; ignorant; untaught.

Wn make a country man dumb, whom we will not allow to speak but by the rules of grammar. Dryden's Dufresny.

CO'UNTRYMAN. n. f. [from country and man.]

1. One born in the same country, or tract of ground.

See, who comes here?
My countryman; but yet I know him not. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Homer, great bard! so fate ordain'd, arose;
And, bold as were his countrymen in fight,
Snatch'd their fair actions from degrading prose,
And set their battles in eternal light. Prior.

The British soldiers act with greater vigour under the conduct of one whom they do not consider only as their leader, but as their countryman. Addison on the War.

2. A rustick; one that inhabits the rural parts.

All that have business to the court, and all countrymen coming up to the city, leave their wives in the country. Graunt.

3. A farmer; a husbandman.

A countryman took a boar in his corn. L'Esfr.
CO'UNTY. n. f. [comté, Fr. comitatus, Latin.]

1. A shire; that is, a circuit or portion of the realm, into which the whole land is divided, for the administration of justice; so that there is no part of the kingdom but what lieth within some county. Every county is governed by a yearly officer, called a sheriff, who puts in execution all the commands and judgments of the king's courts. Of these counties four are termed county-palatines, as that of Lancaster, Chester, Durham, and Ely. A county-palatine is a jurisdiction of so high a nature, that the chief governors of these, by special charter from the king, sent out all writs in their own name, and did all things touching justice as absolutely as the prince himself, only acknowledging him their superior and sovereign. But this power has, by a statute in Henry VIII. his time, been much abridged. There are likewise counties corporate, which are certain cities or ancient boroughs upon which our princes have thought good to bestow extraordinary liberties. Of these London is one, York another, the city of Chester a third, and Canterbury a fourth. And to these may be added many more; as the county of the town of Kingston upon Hull, the county of the town of Haverfordwest, and the county of Litchfield. County is, in another signification, used for the county-court. Cowell.

Discharge your powers unto their several counties,
As we will ours. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

He caught his death the last county session, where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow-woman, and her fatherless children. Addison's Spectator.

2. An earldom.
3. [Compté.] A count; a lord. Now wholly obsolete.

The gallant, young, and noble gentleman,
The county Paris. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

He made Hugh Lupus county palatine of Chester, and gave that earldom to him and his heirs, to hold the same ita liber ad gladium, sicut rex tenebat Angliam ad coronam. Darwin.

COUPE'E. n. f. [French] A motion in dancing, when one leg is a little bent and suspended from the ground, and with the other a motion is made forwards. Chambers.

COUPLE. n. f. [couple, Fr. copula, Lat.]

1. A chain or tie that holds dogs together.

I'll keep my stable-stand where
I lodge my wife; I'll go in couples with her,
Than when I feel and see no further trust her. Shakespeare.

It is in some sort with friends as it is with dogs in couples; they should be of the same size and humour. L'Esfrange.

2. Two; a brace.

He was taken up by a couple of shepherds, and by them brought to life again. Sidney.

A schoolmaster, who shall teach my son and yours, I will provide; yea, though the three do cost me a couple of hundred pounds. Ascham.

A piece of chrystal inclosed a couple of drops, which looked like water when they were shaken, though perhaps they are nothing but bubbles of air.

Addison on Italy.

By adding one to one, we have the complex idea of a couple.

Locke.

3. A male and his female.

So shall all the couples three,
Ever true in loving be. Shak. Midf. Night's Dr.
Oh! alas!

I lost a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth Might thus have stood, begetting wonder, as You gracious couple do. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

I have read of a feigned commonwealth, where the married couple are permitted, before they contract, to see one another naked. Bar. New Atlantis.
He said: the careful couple join their tears,
And then invoke the gods with pious prayers.

Dryden.

All succeeding generations of men are the progeny of one primitive couple. Bentley's Sermons.

COUPLE. v. a. [copulo, Latin.]

1. To chain together.

Huntsman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds;
And couple Clowder with the deep-mouth'd Brach.

Shakespeare.

2. To join one to another.

What greater ills have the heavens in store,
To couple coming harms with sorrow past. Sidney.
And where'er we went, like Juno's swans,
Still we went coupled and inseparable.

Shakespeare's As you like it.

Put the taches into the loops, and couple the tent together that it may be one. Exodus, xxvi. 11.

They behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear. 1 Peter, iii. 2.

Their concerns were so coupled, that if nature had not, yet their religions would have made them brothers. South.

That man makes a mean figure in the eyes of reason, who is measuring syllables and coupling rhymes, when he should be mending his own soul, and securing his own immortality. Pope.

3. To marry; to wed; to join in wedlock.

I shall rejoice to see you so coupled, as may be fit both for your honour and your satisfaction.

Sidney.

I am just going to assist with the archbishop, in degrading a parson who *couple*s all our beggars, by which I shall make one happy man. Swift.

COUPLE. v. n. To join in embraces.

Waters in Africa being rare, divers sorts of beasts come from several parts to drink; and so being refreshed, fall to couple, and many times with several kinds. Bacon.

Thou, with thy lusty crew,
Cast wanton eyes on the daughters of men,
And coupled with them, and begot a race.

Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

That great variety of brutes in Africa, is by reason of the meeting together of brutes of several species, at water, and the promiscuous couplings of males and females of several species.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

After this alliance,
Let tigers match with hinds, and wolves with sheep,
And every creature couple with his foe.

Dryden's Spanish Friar.

COUPLE-BEGGAR. n. f. [couple and beg- gar.] One that makes it his business to marry beggars to each other.

No couple-beggar in the land
E'er join'd such numbers hand in hand. Swift.

COUPLET. n. f. [French.]

1. Two verses; a pair of rhymes.

Then would they cast away their pipes, and holding hand in hand, dance by the only cadence of their voices, which they would use in singing some short couplets, whereto the one half beginning, the other half should answer. Sidney.

Then at the last, an only couplet fraughe
With some unmeaning thing they call a thought;

A needless Alexandrine ends the song,
That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length along. Pope.

In Pope I cannot read a line,
But with a sigh I wish it mine;
When he can in one couplet fix
More sense than I can do in six,
It gives me such a jealous fit,
I cry, pox take him and his wit! Swift.

2. A pair, as of doves.

Anon, as patient as the female dove,
Ere that her golden couplets are disclos'd,
His silence will sit drooping. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

CO'URAGE. n. f. [courage, Fr. from cor, Latin.] Bravery; active fortitude; spi- rit of enterprize.

The king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Their discipline

Now mingled with their courage. Shak. Cymbeline.
Hope arms their courage; from their tow'rs
they throw

Their darts with double force, and drive the foe.

Dryden.

Courage, that grows from constitution, very often forbakes a man when he has occasion for it; and when it is only a kind of instinct in the soul, it breaks out on all occasions, without judgment or discretion. That courage which arises from the sense of our duty, and from the fear of offending Him that made us, acts always in an uniform manner, and according to the dictates of right reason. Addison's Guardian.

Nothing but the want of common courage was the cause of their misfortunes. Swift.

COURAGEOUS. adj. [from courage.]

1. Brave; daring; bold; enterprising; adventurous; hardy; stout.

And he that is courageous among the mighty, shall flee away naked in that day. Amos, ii. 16.

Let us imitate the courageous example of St.
Paul, who chose then to magnify his office when ill men conspired to lessen it. Atterbury.

2. It is used ludicrously by Shakespeare for outrageous.

He is very courageous mad, about his throwing into the water. Shakespeare.

COURAGEOUSLY. adv. [from courageous.]

Bravely; stoutly; boldly.

The king the next day presented him battle upon the plain, the fields there being open and champaign: the earl courageously came down, and joined battle with him. Bacon's Henry VII.

COURAGEOUSNESS. n. f. [from coura- geous.] Bravery; boldness; spirit; cou- rage.

Nicenor hearing of the manliness and the coura- geousness that they had to fight for their country, durst not try the matter by the sword.

2 Maccabees, xiv. 18.

COURANT. } n. f. [courante, Fr.] See

COURANTO. } CORANT.

1. A nimble dance.

I'll like a maid the better, while I have a tooth in my head: why, he is able to lead her a couranto. Shakespeare.

2. Any thing that spreads quick, as a pa- per of news.

To COURB. v. n. [courber, French.] To bend; to bow; to stoop in supplication.
Not in use.

In the fatness of these purfy times,
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg,
Yea, courb and woo, for leave to do it good.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

CO'URIER. n. f. [courier, French.] A messenger sent in haste; an express; a runner.

I met a courier, one mine ancient friend.

Shakespeare's Titus.

This thing the wary bassa well perceiving, by speedy couriers advertised Solyman of the enemy's purpose, requesting him with all speed to repair with his army to Tauris. Knollet's History.

COURSE. n. f. [course, Fr. curfus, Latin.]

1. Race; career.

And some the arms with sinewy force,
And some with swiftness in the course. Cowley.

Their silent course to Ilium's well known shore.

Denham.

3. Tilt; act of running in the lists.

But this hot knight was cooled with a fall, which, at the third course, he received of Phalan-
tus. Sidney.

4. Ground on which a race is run.

5. Track or line in which a ship sails, or any motion is performed.

6. Sail; means by which the course is performed.

To the courses we have devised studding-sails, sprit-sails, and top-sails. Raleigh's Essays.

7. Progress from one gradation to another; process.

When the state of the controversy is plainly determined, it must not be altered by another disputant in the course of the disputation. Watts.

8. Order of succession: as, every one in his course.

If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course; and let one interpret. 1 Cor. xiv. 27.

9. Stated and orderly method, or manner.

If she live long,
And in the end meet the old course of death,
Women will all turn monsters. Shak. King Lear.
The duke cannot deny the course of law.

Shakespeare.

If God, by his revealed declaration, first gave rule to any man, he, that will claim by that title, must have the same positive grant of God for his succession; for, if it has not directed the course of its descent and conveyance, no body can succeed to this title of the first ruler. Locke.

10. Series of successive and methodical procedure.

The glands did resolve during her course of physick, and she continueth very well to this day.

Wise man's Surgery.

11. The elements of an art exhibited and explained, in a methodical series. Hence our courses of philosophy, anatomy, chy- mistry, and mathematicks. Chambers.

12. Conduct; manner of proceeding.

Gritus perceiving the danger he was in, began to doubt with himself what course were best for him to take. Knollet.

That worthy deputy finding nothing but a common misery, took the best course he possibly could to establish a commonwealth in Ireland.

Davies on Ireland.

He placed commissioners there, who governed it only in a course of discretion, part martial, part civil. Davies on Ireland.

Give willingly what I can take by force;
And know, obedience is your safest course.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.

But if a right course be taken with children,
there will not be so much need of common rewards and punishments. Locke.

'Tis time we should decree
What course to take. Addison's Cato.

The senate observing how, in all contentions,
they were forced to yield to the tribunes and people, thought it their wisest course to give way also to time. Swift.

13. Method.

13. Method of life ; train of actions.

A woman of so working a mind, and so vehement spirits, as it was happy she took a good course; or otherwise it would have been terrible. Sidney.

His addiction was to courses vain;
His companies unletter'd, rude, and shallow;
His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports.
Shakespeare's Henry V.

As the dropsy-man, the more he drinks, the drier he is, and the more he still desires to drink; even so a sinner, the more he sins, the apter is he to sin, and more desirous to keep still a course in wickedness. Perkins.

Men will say,

That beauteous Emma vagrant courses took,
Her father's house and civil life forsook. Prior.

14. Natural bent; uncontrolled will.

It is best to leave nature to her course, who is the sovereign physician in most diseases. Temple.

So every servant took his course,
And, bad at first, they all grew worse. Prior.

15. Catamenia.

The stoppage of women's courses, if not suddenly looked to, sets them undoubtedly into a consumption, dropsy, or some other dangerous disease. Harvey on Consumptions.

16. Orderly structure.

The tongue delicteth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature. James, iii. 6.

17. [In architecture.] A continued range of stones, level or of the same height, throughout the whole length of the building, and not interrupted by any aperture. Harris.

18. Series of consequences.

19. Number of dishes set on at once upon the table.

Worthy Sir, thou bleed'st:

Thy exercise hath been too violent

For a second course of fight. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Then with a second course the tables load,
And with full chargers offer to the god. Dryd. Æn.

You are not to wash your hands till after you have sent up your second course.

Swift's Directions to the Cook.

So quick retires each flying course, you'd swear
Sancho's dread doctor and his wand were there. Pope.

20. Regularity ; settled rule.

21. Empty form.

Men talk as if they believed in God, but they live as if they thought there was none; their vows and promises are no more than words of course. L'Estrange.

22. Of course. By consequence.

With a mind unprepossessed by doctors and commentators of any sect, whose reasonings, interpretation, and language, which I have been used to, will of course make all chime that way; and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strained, and uncouth to me. Locke.

23. Of course. By settled rule.

Sense is of course annex'd to wealth and power;
No muse is proof against a golden shower. Garth.

Neither shall I be so far wanting to myself, as not to desire a patent, granted of course to all useful projectors. Swift.

To COURSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hunt ; to pursue.

The big round tears
Cours'd one another down his innocent nose
In piteous chase. Shakespeare's As you like it.

The king is hunting the deer; I am coursing myself.
Shakespeare's Love's Labour Lost.

Where 's the thane of Cawdor?

We cours'd him at the heels, and had a purpose
To be his purveyor. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. To pursue with dogs that hunt in view.

It would be tried also in flying of hawks, or in coursing of a deer, or hart, with greyhounds. Bacon's Natural History.

I am continually starting hares for you to course: we were certainly cut out for one another; for my temper quits an amour just where thine takes it up. Congreve's Old Bachelor.

3. To put to speed ; to force to run.

When they have an appetite
To venery, let them not drink nor eat,
And course them oft, and tire them in the heat. May's Virgil.

To COURSE. v. n. To run; to rove about.

Swift as quicksilver it courses through
The natural gates and alleys of the body. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

The blood, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice; but the sherris warms it, and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

She did so course o'er my exteriours, with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning glass. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Ten brace and more of greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as flags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair. Dryden.

All, at once

Relapsing quick, as quickly re-ascend
And mix, and thwart, extinguish, and renew,
All ether coursing in a maze of light. Thomson's Autumn.

CO'URSER. n. f. [from course; coursier, French.]

1. A swift horse ; a war horse : a word not used in prose.

He proudly pricketh on his coursier strong,
And Atin ay him pricks with spurs of shame and wrong. Spenser.

Then to his absent guest the king decreed
A pair of coursers, born of heav'nly breed;
Who from their nostrils breath'd ethereal fire,
Whom Circe stole from her celestial fire. Dryden's Æneid.

Th' impatient coursier pants in every vein,
And, pawing, seems to beat the distant plain;
Hills, vales, and floods appear already cross'd,
And, ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost. Pope.

2. One who pursues the sport of coursing hares.

A leash is a leathern thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a coursier leads his greyhound. Hanmer.

COURT. n. f. [cour, Fr. koert, Dut. curtis, low Latin.]

1. The place where the prince resides ; the palace.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires,
Men so disorderly, so debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn; epicurism and lust
Make it more like a tavern, or a brothel,
Than a grac'd palace. Shakespeare's King Lear.

It shall be an habitation of dragons, and a court for owls. Isaiah, xxvi. 13.

His exactness, that every man should have his due, was such, that you would think he had never seen a court: the politeness with which this justice was administered, would convince you he never had lived out of one. Prior's Dedication.

A suppliant to your royal court I come. Pope's Odyssey.

2. The hall or chamber where justice is administered.

Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the court? Shakespeare.

St. Paul being brought unto the highest court in Athens, to give an account of the doctrine he had preached concerning Jesus and the resurrection, took occasion to imprint on those magistrates a future state. Asterbury.

3. Open space before a house.

You must have, before you come to the front, three courts; a green court plain, with a wall about it; a second court of the same, but more garnished with little turrets, or other embellishments, upon the wall; and a third court, to square with the front, not to be built but inclosed with a naked wall. Bacon.

Suppose it were the king's bedchamber, yet the meanest man in the tragedy must come and dispatch his business, rather than in the lobby or court yard (which is fitter for him) for fear the stage should be cleared, and the scenes broken. Dryden.

4. A small opening inclosed with houses, and paved with broad stones, distinguished from a street.

5. Persons who compose the retinue of a prince.

Their wisdom was so highly esteemed, that some of them were always employed to follow the courts of their kings, to advise them. Temple.

CO'WARDICE. n. s. [from coward.] Fear; habitual timidity; pusillanimity; want of courage.

Certes, Sir knight, ye been too much to blame,
Thus for to blot the honour of the dead;

And with foul cowardice his carcase shame,
Whose living hands immortaliz'd his name.

Fairy Queen.

Gallant and fearless courage will turn into a native and herolick valour, and make them hate the cowardice of doing wrong.

None was disgrac'd; for falling is no shame,
And cowardice alone is loss of fame;

The venturesome knight is from the saddle thrown,
But 'tis the fault of fortune, not his own.

Dryden's Fables.

This great, this holy, this terrible Being, is present to all our affections; fees every treacherous inclination of our heart to desert his service; and treasures up, against the day of his wrath, the secret cowardice which deters us from asserting his cause, which prevails on us to compliment the vices of the great, to applaud the libertine, and laugh with the prophane.

Rogers's Sermons.

What if I please to lengthen out his date
A day, and take a pride to cozen fate. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Children may be cozened into a knowledge of the letters, and be taught to read, without perceiving it to be any thing but a sport. Locke on Education.

Co'ZENAGE. n. f. [from cozen.] Fraud; deceit; artifice; fallacy; trick; cheat; the practice of cheating.

They say this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Disguised cheaters. Shakespeare.

Wisdom without honesty is meer craft and cozenage; and therefore the reputation of honesty must first be gotten, which cannot be but by living well: a good life is a main argument. Ben Jon's Disc.

There's no such thing as that we beauty call,
It is meer cozenage all;
For though some long ago
Lik'd certain colours mingled so and so,
That doth not tie me now from chusing new. Suckling.

Imaginary appearances offer themselves to our impatient minds, which entertain these counterfeits, without the least suspicion of their cozenage. Glanville's Scepsis.

Strange cozenage! none would live past year again,
Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remain;
And from the dregs of life think to receive
What the first sprightly running could not give. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

But all these are trifles, if we consider the fraud and cozenage of trading men and shopkeepers. Swift.

Co'ZENER. n. f. [from cozen.] A cheater; a defrauder.

Indeed, Sir, there are cozeners abroad, and therefore it behoves men to be wary. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Hakewill on Providence.

CRAVA'T. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]
A neckcloth; any thing worn about the neck.

Less delinquents have been scourg'd,
And hemp on wooden anvils forg'd;
Which others for cravats have worn
About their necks, and took a turn.

Hudibras.

The restrictives were applied, one over another,
to her throat: then we put her on a cravat.

Wise man's Surgery.

To CRAVE. v. a. [cravian, Saxon.]

1. To ask with earnestness; to ask with submission; to beg; to entreat.

What one petition is there found in the whole Litany, whereof we shall ever be able at any time to say, that no man living needeth the grace or benefit therein craved at God's hands?

Hooker.

As for my nobler friends, I crave their pardons;
But for the mutable rank-scented many,
Let them regard me as I do not flatter.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

The poor people, not knowing where to hide themselves from the fury of their enemies, nor of whom to crave help, fled as men and women dismayed.

Knolles.

I would crave leave here, under the word action,
to comprehend the forbearance too of any action proposed.

Locke.

Each ardent nymph the rising current craves,
Each shepherd's pray'r retards the parting waves.

Prior.

2. To ask insatiably.

The subjects arm'd, the more their princes gave,
Th' advantage only took the more to crave.

Denham.

Him dost thou mean, who, spite of all his store,
Is ever craving, and will still be poor?

Who cheats for halfpence, and who doffs his coat
To save a farthing in a ferry-boat?

Dryden. Persius.

3. To long; to wish unreasonably.

Levity pushes us on from one vain desire to another, in a regular vicissitude and succession of cravings and satiety.

L'Estrange.

He is actually under the power of a temptation, and the sway of an impetuous lust; both hurrying him to satisfy the cravings of it by some wicked action.

South.

4. To call for importunately.

Bestow

Your needful counsel to our businesses,
Which crave the instant use.

Shakespeare. King Lear.

The antecedent concomitants and effects of such a constitution, are acids, taken in too great quantities; sour eruptions, and a craving appetite, especially of terrestrial and absorbent substances.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

5. Sometimes with for before the thing sought.

Once one may crave for love,
But more would prove

This heart too little, that too great.

Suckling.

CRA'VEN. n. f. [derived by Skinner from crave, as one that craves or begs his life: perhaps it comes originally from the noise made by a conquered cock.

1. A cock conquered and dispirited.

What, is your crest a cockcomb?

—A comble's cock, so Kate will be my hen.

—No cock of mine; you crow too like a craven.

Shakespeare.

2. A coward; a recreant; a weak-hearted spiritless fellow.

Is it fit this soldier keep his oath?

—He is a craven and a villain else.

Shakespeare. H. V.

CRA'VEN. adj. Cowardly; base.

Upon his coward breast

A bloody cross, and on his craven crest

A bunch of hairs discolour'd diversly.

Spenser.

Whether it be
Bestial oblivion, or some craven scruple,
Of thinking too precisely on th' event;
A thought which, quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom,

And ever three parts coward.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Yet if the innocent some mercy find,

From cowardice, not ruth, did that proceed;

His noble foes durst not his craven kind

Exasperate by such a bloody deed.

Fairfax.

To CRA'VEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To make recreant or cowardly.

'Gainst self-slaughter

There is a prohibition so divine,

That cravens my weak hand.

Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

CRA'VER. n. f. [from crave.] An insatiable asker. It is used in Clarissa.

To CRAUNCH. v. a. [schransen, Dutch; whence the vulgar say more properly to screunch.] To crush in the mouth. The word is used by Swift.

CRAW. n. f. [kroe, Danish.] The crop or first stomach of birds.

In birds there is no mastication or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but, in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw, or at least into a kind of ante-stomach.

Stomach, which I have observed in many, especially piscivorous birds. Ray on the Creation.

CRAWFISH. n. f. [sometimes written crayfish, properly crevice; in French, ecrevisse.] A small crustaceous fish found in brooks; the small lobster of fresh water.

Those that cast their shell are the lobster, the crab, the crawfish, the hoddmandod or dodman, and the tortoise. Bacon.

Let me to crack live crawfish recommend. Pope.

The common crawfish, and the large sea crawfish, both produce the stones called crabs eyes. Hill.

TO CRAWL. v. n. [krielen, Dutch.]

1. To creep; to move with a slow motion; to move without rising from the ground, as a worm.

I saw them under a green mantling vine,
That crawls along the side of yon small hill. Milton.

That crawling insect, who from mud began;
Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man! Dryden.

The streams, but just contain'd within their bounds,
By slow degrees into their channels crawl;
And earth increaseth as the waters fall. Dryden.

A worm finds what it searches after, only by feeling, as it crawls from one thing to another. Grew's Cosmologia.

The vile worm, that yesterday began
To crawl; thy fellow-creature, abject man. Prior.

2. To move weakly and slowly, or timorously.

'Tis our first intent
To shake all cares and business from our age,
While we unburthen'd crawl toward death. Shakespeare's King Lear.

They like tall fellows crept out of the holes;
and secretly crawling up the battered walls of the fort, got into it. Kneller.

For the fleets of Solomon and the kings of Egypt, it is very apparent they went with great leisure, and crawled close by the shore-side. Helynn.

A look so pale no quartan ever gave;
Thy dwindled legs seem crawling to a grave. Dryden's Juvenal.

He was hardly able to crawl about the room, far less to look after a troublesome business. Arbutnot's John Bull.

Man is a very worm by birth,
Vile reptile, weak and vain!
A while he crawls upon the earth,
Then shrinks to earth again. Pope.

It will be very necessary for the threadbare gownman, and every child who can crawl, to watch the fields at harvest-time. Swift.

3. To advance slowly and sily.

Hath crawl'd into the favour of the king,
And is his oracle. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

4. To move about hated and despised.

Reflect upon that litter of absurd opinions that crawl about the world, to the disgrace of reason. South.

How will the condemned sinner then crawl forth, and appear in his filth, before that undefined tribunal? South.

Behold a rev'rend sire, whom want of grace
Has made the father of a nameless race,
Crawl through the street, shov'd on, or rudely press'd

By his own sons, that pass him by unblest! Pope.

CRAWLER. n. f. [from crawl.] A creeper; any thing that creeps.

CRAWFISH. n. f. [See CRAWFISH.] The river lobster.

The cure of the muriatick and armoniack salt-ness requires slimy meats; as snails, tortoises, jellies, and crayfishes. Floyer.

CRA'YON. n. f. [crayon, French.]

1. A kind of pencil; a roll of paste to draw lines with.

Let no day pass over you without drawing a line; that is, to say, without working, without giving some strokes of the pencil or the crayon. Dryden's Disfranchisement.

2. A drawing or design done with a pencil or crayon.

TO CRAZE. v. a. [ecrafer, French, to break to pieces.]

1. To break; to crush; to weaken.

In this consideration, the answer of Calvin unto Farrel, concerning the children of popish parents, doth seem crazed. Hooker.

Relent, sweet Hermia; and, Lyfander, yield Thy crazed title to my certain right. Shakespeare.

Till length of years,
And sedentary numbness, craze my limbs. Milton.
Then through the fiery pillar, and the cloud,
God looking forth, will trouble all his host,
And craze their chariot wheels. Milton.

2. To powder.

The tin ore passeth to the crazing mill, which, between two grinding stones, bruiseeth it to a fine sand. Carew's Survey.

3. To crack the brain; to impair the intellect.

I lov'd him, friend,
No father his son dearer, true, to tell thee,
That grief hath craz'd my wits. Shak. K. Lear.

Wickedness is a kind of voluntary frenzy, and a chosen distraction; and every sinner does wilder and more extravagant things than any man can do that is crazed and out of his wits; only with this sad difference, that he knows better what he does. Tillotson.

CRA'ZENNESS. n. f. [from crazed.] Decreptitude; brokenness; diminution of intellect.

The nature, as of men that have sick bodies, so likewise of the people in the crazedness of their minds, possessed with dislike and discontentment at things present, is to imagine that any thing would help them. Hooker.

CRA'ZINESS. n. f. [from crazy.]

1. State of being crazy; imbecility; weakness.

Touching other places, she may be said to hold them as one should do a wolf by the ears; nor will I speak now of the craziness of her title to many of them. Howell's Vocal Forest.

2. Weakness of intellect.

CRA'ZY. adj. [ecrazé, French.]

1. Broken; decrepit.

Come, my lord,
We will bestow you in some better place,
Fitter for sickness and for crazy age. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

When people are crazy, and in disorder, it is natural for them to groan. L'Estrange.

2. Broken-witted; shattered in the intellect.

The queen of night, whose large command
Rules all the sea and half the land,
And over moist and crazy brains,
In high spring-tides, at midnight reigns. Hudibras.

3. Weak; feeble; shattered.

Physick can but mend our crazy state,
Patch an old building, not a new create. Dryden.

Were it possible that the near approaches of eternity, whether by a mature age, a crazy constitution, or a violent sickness, should amaze so many, had they truly considered. Wake.

CREAGHT. n. f. [An Irish word.]

In these fast places, they kept their creaghts, or herds of cattle, living by the milk of the cow, without husbandry or tillage. Davies on Ireland.

TO CREAGHT. v. n.

It was made penal to the English to permit the Irish to creaght or graze upon their lands, or present them to ecclesiastical benefices. Davies on Ireland.

TO CREAK. v. n. [corrupted from crack.]

1. To make a harsh protracted noise.

Let not the creaking of shoes, nor the rustling of silks, betray thy poor heart to women. Shakespeare's King Lear.

No door there was th' unguarded house to keep,
On creaking hinges turn'd, to break his sleep. Dryden.

2. It is sometimes used of animals.

The creaking locusts with my voice conspire,
They fried with heat, and I with fierce desire. Dryden.

CREAM. n. f. [cremor, Latin.]

1. The unctuous or oily part of milk, which, when it is cold, floats on the top, and is changed by the agitation of the churn into butter; the flower of milk.

It is not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship. Shakespeare.

I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Cream is matured and made to rise speedily, by putting in cold water; which, as it seemeth, getteth down the whey. Bacon's Natural History.

How the drudging goblin sweats,
To earn his cream-bowl duly set;
When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn. Milton.

Let your various creams incirled be
With swelling fruit, just ravish'd from the tree. King.

Milk, standing some time, naturally separates into an oily liquor called cream; and a thinner, blue, and more ponderous liquor, called skimmed milk. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. It is used for the best part of any thing: as, the cream of a jest.

TO CREAM. v. n. [from the noun.] To gather cream.

There are a sort of men, whose visages
Do cream and mantle like a standing pond;
And do a wilful stiffness entertain,
With purpose to be dress'd in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

TO CREAM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To take off the cream.
2. To take the flower and quintessence of any thing: so used somewhere by Swift.

CREAM-FACED. adj. [cream and faced.] Pale; coward-looking.

Thou cream-fac'd lown,
Where got'st thou that goose-look? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

CRE'AMY. adj. [from cream.] Full of cream; having the nature of cream.

CRE'ANCE. n. f. [French.] Is, in falconry, a fine small line, fastened to a hawk's leash when she is first lured.

CREASE. n. f. [from creta, Latin, chalk. Skinner.] A mark made by doubling any thing.

Men of great parts are unfortunate in business, because they go out of the common road: I once desired lord Bolingbroke to observe, that the clerks used an ivory knife, with a blunt edge, to divide paper, which cut it even, only requiring a strong hand; whereas a sharp penknife would go out of the crease, and disfigure the paper. Swift.

TO CRE'ASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark any thing by doubling it, so as to leave the impression.

TO CREATE. v. a. [creo, Latin.]

1. To form out of nothing; to cause to exist.

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. [Genesis.]

We having but imperfect ideas of the operations of our minds, and much imperfecter yet of the operations of God, run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of. Locke.

2. To produce; to cause; to be the occasion of.

Now is the time of help: your eye in Scotland Would create soldiers, and make women fight. Shakespeare.

His abilities were prone to create in him great confidence of undertakings, and this was like enough to betray him to great errors and many enemies. King Charles.

They eclipse the clearest truths by difficulties of their own creating, or no man could miss his way to heaven for want of light. Decay of Piety.

None knew, till guilt created fear,
What darts or poison'd arrows were.

Roscommon.

Must I new bars to my own joy create,
Refuse myself what I had forc'd from fate?

Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Long abstinence is troublesome to acid constitutions, by the uneasiness it creates in the stomach. Arbutnot.

3. To beget.

And the issue there create
Ever shall be fortunate.

Shakespeare.

4. To invest with any new character.

Arise, my knights o' th' battle: I create you Companions to our person, and will fit you
With dignities becoming your estates.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

5. To give any new qualities; to put any thing in a new state.

The best British undertaker had but a proportion of three thousand acres for himself, with power to create a manor, and hold a court-baron.

Davies on Ireland.

CREATION, n. f. [from create.]

1. The act of creating or conferring existence.

Consider the immensity of the Divine Love, expressed in all the emanations of his providence; in his creation, in his conservation of us. Taylor.

2. The act of investing with new qualities or character: as, the creation of peers.

3. The things created; the universe.

As subjects then the whole creation came,
And from their natures Adam them did name.

Denham.

Such was the saint, who shone with ev'ry grace,
Reflecting, Milton-like, his master's face:
God saw his image lively was express'd,
And his own work as his creation blest'd.

Dryden's Fables.

Nor could the tender new creation bear
Th' excessive heats or coldness of the year.

Dryden's Virgil.

In days of yore, no matter where or when,
Before the low creation swarm'd with men. Parnel.

4. Any thing produced, or caused.

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible To feeling as to sight? Or art thou but
A dagger of the mind, a false creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

CREATIVE, adj. [from create.]

1. Having the power to create.

But come, ye generous minds, in whose wide thought,
Of all his works, creative beauty burns
With warmest beam.

Thomson's Spring.

2. Exerting the act of creation.

To trace the outgoings of the ancient of days in the first instance, and of his creative power, is a research too great for mortal enquiry. South.

CREATOR, n. f. [creator, Latin.] The being that bestows existence.

Open, ye heavens, your living doors; let in
The great creator, from his work return'd Magnificent; his six days work, a world. Milton.

When you lie down, close your eyes with a short prayer, commit yourself into the hands of your faithful creator; and when you have done, trust him with yourself, as you must do when you are dying. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

CREATURE, n. f. [creatura, low Latin.]

1. A being not self-existent, but created by the supreme power.

Were these persons idolaters for the worship they did not give to the creator, or for the worship they did give to his creatures? Stillingfleet.

2. Any thing created.

God's first creature was light. Bacon's New Atl.
Imperfect the world, and all the creatures in it, must be acknowledged in many respects to be.

Tillotson.

3. An animal, not human.

The queen pretended satisfaction of her knowledge only in killing creatures vile, as cats and dogs.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

4. A general term for man.

Yet crime in her could never creature find;
But for his love, and for her own self sake,
She wander'd had from one to other Ind. Spenser.

Most cursed of all creatures under sky,
Lo, Tantalus, I here tormented lie, Spenser.

Though he might burst his lungs to call for help,
No creature would assist or pity him. Roscommon.

5. A word of contempt for a human being.

Hence; home, you idle creatures, get you home;
Is this a holiday? Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

He would into the stews,
And from the common creatures pluck a glove,
And wear it as a favour. Shakespeare's Richard III.

I've heard that guilty creatures at a play,
Have, by the very cunning of the scene,
Been struck so to the soul, that presently
They have proclaim'd their misdeeds.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Nor think to-night of thy ill nature,
But of thy follies, idle creatures.

Prior.

A good poet no sooner communicates his works,
but it is imagin'd he is a vain young creature,
given up to the ambition of fame. Pope.

6. A word of petty tenderness.

And then, Sir, would he gripe and wring my hand;
Cry, Oh sweet creatures, and then kiss me hard.

Shakespeare.

Ah, cruel creature, whom dost thou despise?
The gods, to live in woods, have lost the skies.

Dryden's Virgil.

Some young creatures have learnt their letters and syllables by having them pasted upon little tablets.

Watts.

7. A person who owes his rise or his fortune to another.

He sent to colonel Maffey to send him men, which he, being a creature of Essex's, refused.

Clarendon.

The duke's creature he desired to be esteemed.

Clarendon.

Great princes thus, when favouritess they raise,
To justify their grace, their creatures praise.

Dryden.

The design was discovered by a person whom every body knows to be the creature of a certain great man. Swift.

CREATURELY, adj. [from creature.]

Having the qualities of a creature.

The several parts of relatives, or creaturely infinities, may have finite proportions to one another.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

CREBRITUDE, n. f. [from creber, frequent, Latin.] Frequency.

DiA.

CREBROUS, adj. [from creber, Lat.] Frequent.

DiA.

CRE'DENCE, n. f. [from credo, Lat. cre- dence, Norman Fr.]

1. Belief; credit.

Ne let him seem that credence this exceeds,
For he that made the same was known right well
To have done much more admirable deeds;
It Merlin was. Spenser.

Love and wisdom,

Approv'd so to your majesty, may plead
For ample credence. Shakespeare.

They did not only underhand give out that this was the true earl; but the friar, finding some cre- dence in the people, took boldness in the pulpit to declare as much. Bacon.

2. That which gives a claim to credit or belief.

After they had delivered to the king their letters of credence, they were led to a chamber richly furnished. Hayward.

GRE'DENDA, n. f. [Latin.] Things to be believed; articles of faith; distinguished in theology from agenda, or practical duties.

These were the great articles and credenda of Christianity, that so much startled the world. South.

CRE'DENT, adj. [credens, Latin.]

1. Believing; easy of belief.

Then weigh what loss your honour may sustain,
If with too credent ear you list' his songs.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. Having credit; not to be questioned. Less proper.

My authority bears a credent bulk,
That no particular scandal once can touch,
But it confounds the breather. Shak. Meas. for M.

CRE'DENTIAL, n. f. [from credens, Lat.]

That which gives a title to credit; the warrant upon which belief or authority is claimed.

A few persons of an odious and despised country could not have filled the world with believers, had they not shown undoubted credentials from the Divine Person who sent them on such a message.

Addison on the Christian Religion.

CREDIBILITY, n. f. [from credible.]

Claim to credit; possibility of obtaining belief; probability.

The first of those opinions I shall shew to be altogether incredible, and the latter to have all the credibility and evidence of which a thing of that nature is capable. Tillotson.

Calculate the several degrees of credibility and conviction, by which the one evidence surpasseth
the other. Atterbury.

CRE'DIBLE, adj. [credibilis, Lat.]

Worthy of credit; deserving of belief; having a just claim to belief.

The ground of credit is the credibility of things credited; and things are made credible, either by the known condition and quality of the utterer, or by the manifest likelihood of truth in themselves.

Hooker.

None can demonstrate to me, that there is such an island as Jamaica; yet, upon the testimony of credible persons, I am free from doubt. Tillotson.

CRE'DIBLENESS, n. f. [from credible.]

Credibility; worthiness of belief; just claim to belief.

The credibility of a good part of these narratives has been confirmed to me by a practitioner of physick. Boyle.

CRE'DIBLY, adv. [from credible.] In a manner that claims belief.

This, with the loss of so few of the English as is scarce credible; being, as hath been rather confidently than credibly reported, but of one man, though not a few hurt. Bacon.

CRE'DIT, n. f. [credit, French.]

1. Belief of; faith yielded to another.

When the people heard these words, they gave no credit unto them, nor received them.

1 Mac. x. 46.

I may give credit to reports. Addison's Spectator.

Some

Some secret truths, from learned pride conceal'd,
To maids alone and children are reveal'd:
What though no credit doubting wits may give,
The fair and innocent shall still believe. Pope.

2. Honour; reputation.

I published, because I was told I might please
Such as it was a credit to please. Pope.

3. Esteem; good opinion.

There is no decaying merchant, or inward beggar, Bath so many tricks to uphold the credit of their wealth, as these empty persons have to maintain the credit of their sufficiency. Bacon.

His learning, though a poet said it,
Before a play, would lose no credit. Swift.

Yes, while I live, no rich or noble knave Shall walk the world in credit to his grave.

Pope's Horace.

4. Faith; testimony; that which procures belief.

We are contented to take this upon your credit,
and to think it may be. Hooker.

The things which we properly believe, be only such as are received upon the credit of divine testimony.

Hooker.

The author would have done well to have left so great a paradox only to the credit of a single assertion.

Locke.

5. Trust reposed, with regard to property: correlative to debt.

Credit is nothing but the expectation of money, within some limited time. Locke.

6. Promise given.

They have never thought of violating the public credit, or of alienating the revenues to other uses than to what they have been thus assigned.

Addison.

7. Influence; power not compulsive; interest.

She employed his uttermost credit to relieve us, which was as great as a beloved son with a mother.

Sidney.

They sent him likewise a copy of their supplication to the king, and desired him to use his credit that a treaty might be entered into. Clarendon.

Having credit enough with his master to provide for his own interest, he troubled not himself for that of other men. Clarendon.

To CREDIT. v. a. [credo, Latin.]

1. To believe.

Now I change my mind,
And partly credit things that do presage.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

To credit the unintelligibility both of this union and motion, we need no more than to consider it.

Glanville.

2. To procure credit or honour to any thing.

May here her monument stand so,
To credit this rude age; and show
To future times, that even we
Some patterns did of virtue see. Waller.

It was not upon design to credit these papers,
nor to compliment a society so much above flattery.

Glanville.

At present you credit the church as much by your government, as you did the school formerly by your wit. South.

3. To trust; to confide in.

4. To admit as a debtor.

CREDITABLE. adj. [from credit.]

1. Reputable; above contempt.

He settled him in a good creditable way of living, having procured him by his interest one of the best places of the country. Arbutnot's John Bull.

2. Honourable; estimable.

The contemplation of things, that do not serve to promote our happiness, is but a more specious sort of idleness, a more pardonable and creditable kind of ignorance. Tillotson.

CREDITABLENESS. n. s. [from credit-able.] Reputation; estimation.

Among all these snares, there is none more entangling than the creditableness and repute of customary vices. Decay of Piety.

CREDITABLY. adv. [from creditable.]

Reputably; without disgrace.

Many will chuse rather to neglect their duty safely and creditably, than to get a broken pate in the church's service, only to be rewarded with that which will break their hearts too. South.

CREDITOR. n. s. [creditor, Latin.]

1. He to whom a debt is owed; he that gives credit: correlative to debtor.

There came divers of Antonio's creditors in my company to Venice, that swear he cannot chuse but break. Shakespeare.

I am so used to consider myself as creditor and debtor, that I often state my accounts after the same manner, with regard to heaven and my own soul.

Addison's Spectator.

No man of honour, as that word is usually understood, did ever pretend that his honour obliged him to be chaste or temperate, to pay his creditors, to be useful to his country, to do good to mankind, to endeavour to be wise or learned, to regard his word, his promise, or his oath. Swift.

2. One who credits, one who believes. Not used.

Many sought to feed

The easy creditors of novelties,

By voicing him alive. Shakespeare.

CREDULITY. n. s. [credulité, French; credulitas, Latin.] Easiness of belief; readiness of credit.

The poor Plangus, being subject to that only disadvantage of honest hearts, credulity, was persuaded by him. Sidney.

The prejudice of credulity may, in some measure, be cured, by learning to set a high value on truth. Watts's Logic.

CREDULOUS. adj. [credulus, Latin.]

Apt to believe; unsuspecting; easily deceived.

A credulous father, and a brother noble,
Whose nature is so far from doing harm,
That he suspects none. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Who now enjoys thee credulous all gold,
Who always vacant, always amiable,
Hopes thee, of flattery gales
Unmindful, hapless he,
T' whom thou untry'd seem'st fair. Milton.

CREDULOUSNESS. n. s. [from credulous.]

Aptness to believe; credulity.

CREED. n. s. [from credo, the first word of the apostles creed.]

1. A form of words in which the articles of faith are comprehended.

The larger and fuller view of this foundation is set down in the creeds of the church.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

Will they, who decry creeds and creedmakers, say that one who writes a treatise of morality ought not to make in it any collection of moral precepts?

Fiddes's Sermons.

2. Any solemn profession of principles or opinion.

For me, my lords,
I love him not, nor fear him; there's my creed.

Shakespeare.

To CREEK. v. a. [See To CREAK.] To make a harsh noise.

Creaking my shoes on the plain masonry? Shakespeare.

CREEK. n. s. [crecca, Sax. kreke, Dut.]

1. A prominence or jut in a winding coast.

As streams, which with their winding banks do play,

Stopp'd by their creeks, run softly through the plain. Davies.

They on the bank of Jordan, by a creek,
Where winds with reeds and osiers whisp'ring play,
Their unexpected loss and plaints outbreath'd.

Milton.

2. A small port; a bay; a cove.

A law was made here to stop their passage in every port and creek. Davies on Ireland.

3. Any turn, or alley.

A back-friend, a shoulder-clapper; one that commands the passages of alleys, creeks, and narrow lands. Shakespeare.

CREEKY. adj. [from creek.] Full of creeks; unequal; winding.

Who, leaning on the belly of a pot,
Pour'd forth a water, whose outgushing flood Run bathing all the creaky shore a-flot,
Whereon the Trojan prince spilt Turnus' blood.

Spenser.

To CREEP. v. n. pret. crept. [crypan, Sax. krepan, Germ.]

1. To move with the belly to the ground, without legs, as a worm.

Ye that walk

The earth, and stately tread, or lowly creep! Milt.
And every creeping thing that creeps the ground.

Milton.

If they cannot distinguish creeping from flying, let them lay down Virgil, and take up Ovid de Ponto. Dryden.

2. To grow along the ground, or on other supports.

The grotto cool, with shady poplars crown'd,
And creeping vines on arbours weav'd around.

Dryden.

3. To move forward without bounds or leaps, as insects.

4. To move slowly and feebly.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Why should a man

Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice
By being peevish? Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

He who creeps after plain, dull, common sense, is safe from committing absurdities, but can never reach the excellence of wit. Dryden's Tyrant Love.

5. To move secretly and clandestinely.

I'll creep up into the chimney.—
—There they always used to discharge their birding-pieces: creep into the kiln-hole.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Whate'er you are,

That in this desert inaccessible,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs,
Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time. Shak.

Of this sort are they which creep into houses,
and lead captive silly women. 2 Timothy, iii. 6.

Thou makest darkness, and it is night, wherein all the beasts of the forest do creep forth.

Psalms civ. 20.

Now and then a work or two has crept in, to keep his first design in countenance. Atterbury.

6. To move timorously without soaring, or venturing into dangers.

Paradise Lost is admirable; but am I therefore bound to maintain, that there are no flats amongst his elevations, when it is evident he creeps along sometimes for above an hundred lines together?

Dryden.

We here took a little boat, to creep along the sea-shore as far as Genoa. Addison on Italy.

7. To come unexpected; to steal forward unheard and unseen.

By those gifts of nature and fortune he creeps, nay he flies, into the favour of poor silly women.

Sidney.

It seems, the marriage of his brother's wife
Has crept too near his conscience.—

—No, his conscience
Has crept too near another lady. Shak. H. VIII.

Necessity enforced them, after they grew full of people, to spread themselves, and creep out of Shinar, or Babylonia. Raleigh's History.

None pretends to know from how remote corners of those frozen mountains some of those fierce nations first crept out. Temple.

Bacon.

The Ethiopian black, flat nosed, and crisp haired.

Hale.

2. Indented; winding.

You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the winding brooks,

With your sedge'd crowns, and ever harmless looks,
Leave your crisp channels, and on this green land
Answer your summons; Juno does command.

Shakespeare.

3. Brittle; friable.

In frosty weather, musick within doors soundeth better; which may be by reason, not of the disposition of the air, but of the wood or string of the instrument, which is made more crisp, and so more porous and hollow. Bacon's Natural History.

To CRISP. v. a. [crispo, Latin.]

1. To curl; to contract into knots or curls.

Severn, affrighted with their bloody looks,
Ran fearfully among the trembling reeds,
And hid his crisp'd head in the hollow bank.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Young I'd have him too;

Yet a man, with crisp'd hair,

Cast in thousand snares and rings,

For love's fingers, and his rings. Ben Jonson.

Spirit of wine is not only unfit for inflammations in general, but also crisps up the vessels of the dura mater and brain, and sometimes produces a gangrene. Sharp's Surgery.

So are those crispy snaky locks, oft known
To be the dowry of a second head.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

CRITERION. n. f. [κρίτηριον.] A mark by which any thing is judged of, with regard to its goodness or badness.

Mutual agreement and endearments was the badge of primitive believers; but we may be known by the contrary criterion. Glauville's Sceptis.

We have here a sure infallible criterion, by which every man may discover and find out the gracious or ungracious disposition of his own heart. South.

By what criterion do you eat, d'ye think,
If this is priz'd for sweetness, that for stink?

Pope's Horace.

CRITICK. n. f. [κριτικος.]

1. A man skilled in the art of judging of literature; a man able to distinguish the faults and beauties of writing.

This settles truer ideas in men's minds of several things, whereof we read the names in ancient authors, than all the large and laborious arguments of criticks. Locke.

Now learn what morals criticks ought to show,
For 'tis but half a judge's task to know. Pope.

2. An examiner; a judge.

But you with pleasure own your errors past,
And make each day a critick on the last. Pope.

3. A snarler; a carper; a caviller.

Criticks I saw, that others names deface,
And fix their own with labour in their place. Pope.

Where an author has many beauties consistent with virtue, piety, and truth, let not little criticks exalt themselves, and shower down their ill-nature. Watts.

4. A censurer; a man apt to find fault.

My chief design, next to feeding you, is to be a severe critick on you and your neighbour. Swift.

CRITICK. adj. Critical; relating to criticism; relating to the art of judging of literary performances.

Thence arts o'er all the northern world advance,
But critick learning flourish'd most in France. Pope.

CRITICK. n. f.

1. A critical examination; critical remarks; animadversions.

I should be glad if I could persuade him to continue his good offices, and write such another critick on any thing of mine. Dryden.

I should as soon expect to see a critique on the poetry of a ring, as on the inscription of a medal.

Addison on Medals.

2. Science of criticism.

If ideas and words were distinctly weighed, and duly considered, they would afford us another sort of logic and critick than what we have been hitherto acquainted with. Locke.

What is every year of a wise man's life, but a censure and critique on the past? Pope.

Not that my quill to criticks was confin'd;
My verse gave ampler lessons to mankind. Pope.

To CRITICK. v. n. [from critick.] To play the critick; to criticize.

They do but trace over the paths that have been beaten by the ancients; or comment, critick, and flourish upon them. Temple.

CRITICAL. adj. [from critick.]

1. Exact; nicely judicious; accurate; diligent.

It is submitted to the judgment of more critical ears, to direct and determine what is graceful and what is not. Holder.

Virgil was so critical in the rites of religion, that he would never have brought in such prayers as these, if they had not been agreeable to the Roman customs. Swillingfleet.

2. Relating to criticism: as, he wrote a critical dissertation on the last play.

3. Captious; inclined to find fault.

What wouldst thou write of me, if thou shouldst praise me?—

—O, gentle lady, do not put me to 't;
For I am nothing, if not critical. Shakespeare. Othello.

4. [from crisis.] Comprising the time at which a great event is determined.

The moon is supposed to be measured by sevens, and the critical or decretory days to be dependent on that number. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

5. Decisive; nice.

Opportunity is in respect to time, in some sense, as time is in respect to eternity: it is the small moment, the exact point, the critical minute, on which every good work so much depends.

Spratt's Sermons.

The people cannot but resent to see their apprehensions of the power of France, in so critical a juncture, wholly laid aside. Swift.

6. Producing a crisis or change of the disease: as, a critical sweat.

CRITICALLY. adv. [from critical.]

1. In a critical manner; exactly; curiously.

Difficult it is to understand the purity of English, and critically to discern good writers from bad, and a proper stile from a corrupt one. Dryden.

These shells which are dug up out of earth, several hundreds of which I now keep by me, have been nicely and critically examined by very many learned men. Woodward.

2. At the exact point of time.

CRITICALNESS. n. f. [from critical.] Exactness; accuracy; nicety; incidence at a particular point of time.

To CRITICISE. v. n. [from critick.]

1. To play the critick; to judge; to write remarks upon any performance of literature; to point out faults and beauties.

They who can criticise so weakly, as to imagine I have done my worst, may be convinced, at their own cost, that I can write severely with more ease than I can gently. Dryden.

Know well each ancient's proper character;
Without all this at once before your eyes,
Cavil you may, but never criticise. Pope.

2. To animadvert upon as faulty.

Nor would I have his father look so narrowly into these accounts, as to take occasion from thence to criticise on his expences. Locke.

To CRITICISE. v. a. [from critick.] To censure; to pass judgment upon.

Nor shall I look upon it as any breach of charity, to criticise the author, so long as I keep clear of the person. Addison.

CRITICISM. n. f. [from critick.]

1. Criticism, as it was first instituted by Aristotle, was meant a standard of judging well. Dryden's Innocence, Preface.

2. Remark; animadversion; critical observations.

There is not a Greek or Latin critick, who has not shewn, even in the stile of his criticisms, that he was a master of all the eloquence and delicacy of his native tongue. Addison.

To CROAK. v. n. [cracezzan, Saxon; crocare, Italian; crocitare, Latin.]

1. To make a hoarse low noise, like a frog.

The subtle swallow flies about the brook,
And querulous frogs in muddy pools do croak.

May's Virgil.

So when Jove's block descended from on high,
Loud thunder to its bottom shook the bog,
And the hoarse nation croak'd. Pope.

Blood, stuff'd in skins, is British christians food;
And France robs marshes of the croaking brood.

Gay.

2. To caw, or cry as a raven or crow.

The raven himself is hoarse,
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements. Shakespeare.

The hoarse raven, on the blasted bough,
By croaking from the left, presag'd the coming blow. Dryden.

At the same time the walk of elms, with the croaking of the ravens, looks exceeding solemn and venerable. Addison.

3. It may be used in contempt for any disagreeable or offensive murmur.

Their understandings are but little instructed, when all their whole time and pains is laid out to still the croaking of their own bellies. Locke.

CROAK. n. f. [from the verb.] The cry or voice of a frog or raven.

The swallow skims the river's watry face;
The frogs renew the croaks of their loquacious race. Dryden.

Was that a raven's croak, or my son's voice?
No matter which, I'll to the grave and hide me.
Lee.

and δῆλον, fearing.] An amphibious voracious animal, in shape resembling a lizard, and found in Egypt and the Indies. It is covered with very hard scales, which cannot, without great difficulty,
be pierced; except under the belly,
where the skin is tender. It has a wide throat, with several rows of teeth, sharp and separated, which enter one another.
It runs with great swiftness; but does not easily turn itself. It is long lived, and is said to grow continually to its death. Some are fifteen or eighteen cubits long. Crocodiles lay their eggs, resembling goose-eggs, sometimes amounting to sixty, near the water-side, covering them with the sand, that the heat of the sun may hatch them. Calmet.

Gloster's show
Beguiles him; as the mournful crocodile
With sorrow snares relenting passengers.

Crocodiles were thought to be peculiar unto the Nile. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Cæsar will weep, the crocodile will weep. Dryd.
Enticing crocodiles, whose tears are death;
Syræns, that murder with enchanting breath.

Crocodile is also a little animal, otherwise called finx, very much like the lizard, or small crocodile.
It lives by land and water; has four short small legs, a very sharp muzzle, and a short small tail.
It is pretty enough to look at, being covered all over with little scales of the colour of silver, intermixt with brown, and of a gold colour upon the back. It always remains little. Trevoux.

CRO'CODILINE. adj. [crocodilinus, Lat.]
Like a crocodile. *Diſc.CRO'CUS. n. f. A flower.

Fair-handed Spring unbosoms every grace,
Throws out the snow-drop and the crocus first.

CROFT. n. f. [crofte, Saxon.] A little close joining to a house, that is used for corn or pasture.

This have I learn'd,
Tending my flocks hard by, i' th' hilly crofts
That brow this bottom glade. Milton.

CROISA'DE. n. f. [croisade, French, from CROISA'DO. n. f. [croix, a cross.] A holy war; a war carried on against infidels under the banner of the cross.

See that he take the name of Urban, because a pope of that name did first institute the croisade;
and, as with an holy trumpet, did stir up the voyage for the Holy Land. Bacon.

CRO'ISES. n. f.

1. Pilgrims who carry a cross.

2. Soldiers who fight against infidels under the banner of the cross.CRONE. n. f. [crone, Sax. according to

With fatted crones, and such old things. Tupper.

2. In contempt, an old woman.

Take up the bastard,
Take 't up, I say; give 't to thy crone.
Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

The crone being in bed with him on the wedding night, and finding his aversion, endeavours to win his affection by reason. Dryden.

CRO'NET. n. f. The hair which grows over the top of an horse's hoof.CRO'NY. n. f. [a cant word.] An old acquaintance; a companion of long standing.

So when the Scots, your constant cronies,
Th' espousers of your cause and monies. Hudibras.

To oblige your crony Swift,
Bring our dame a new year's gift. Swift.

Strange, an astrologer should die
Without one wonder in the sky!
Not one of all his crony stars

To pay their duty at his herse! Swift.

CROOK. n. f. [croc, French.]

1. Any crooked or bent instrument.

2. A shephook.

I sing the man who Judah's sceptre bore
In that right hand which held the crook before.
Gayley.

He left his crook, he left his flocks,
And wand'ring through the lonely rocks,
He nourish'd endless woe. Prior.

3. Any thing bent; a meander.

There fall those saphire-colour'd brooks,
Which, conduit-like, with curious crooks,
Sweet islands make in that sweet land. Sidney.

TO CROOK. v. n. [crocher, French.]

1. To bend; to turn into a hook.

It is highly probable, that this disease proceeds from a redundant acidity, because vinegar will soften and crook tender bones. Arbutnot on Diet.

2. To pervert from rectitude; to divert from the original end.

Whatever affairs pass such a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends; which must needs be often eccentric to the ends of his master or state. Bacon.

TO CROOK. v. n. To be bent; to have a curvature.

Their shoes and pattens are snouted and piked
more than a finger long, crooking upwards. Cumden.

CRO'OKBACK. n. f. [crook and back.] A term of reproach for a man that has gibbous shoulders.

Aye, crookback, here I stand to answer thee,
Or any he the proudest of thy fort. Shak. Hen. VI.

CRO'OKBACKED. adj. Having bent shoulders.

A dwarf as well may for a giant pass,
As negroe for a swan; a crookback'd lark
Be call'd Europa. Dryden's Juvenal.

There are millions of truths that a man is not,
or may not think himself concerned to know; as whether our king Richard III. was crookbacked or no. Locke

CROO'KED. adj. [crocher, French.]

1. Bent; not straight; curved.

A bell or a cannon may be heard beyond a hill which intercepts the sight of the sounding body;
and sounds are propagated as readily through crooked
pipes, as through straight ones. Newt. Opticks.

Mathematicians say of a straight line, that it is as well an index of its own rectitude as of the ob-liquity of a crooked one. Woodward's Natural Hist.

2. Winding; oblique; anfractuons.

A man shall never want crooked paths to walk in, if he thinks that he is in the right way, wherever he has the footsteps of others to follow. Locke.

Among the crooked lanes, on every hedge,
The glow-worm lights his gem. Thomf. Summer.

3. Perverse; untoward; without rectitude of mind; given to obliquity of conduct.

They have corrupted themselves: they are a perverse and crooked generation. Deut. xxxii. 5.

Hence, heap of wrath; soul, indigested lump!
As crooked in thy manners as thy shape.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.
We were not born crooked; we learned those windings and turnings of the serpent. South.

CROO'KEDLY. adv. [from crooked.]

1. Not in a straight line.

2. Untowardly; not compliantly.

If we walk perversely with God, he will walk crookedly towards us. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

CROO'KEDNESS. n. f. [from crooked.]1. Deviation from straightness; curvity;
the state of being inflected; inflection.

He that knoweth what is straight, doth even thereby discern what is crooked; because the absence of straightness, in bodies capable thereof, is crookedness. Hesker.

2. Deformity of a gibbous body.

When the heathens offered a sacrifice to their false gods, they would make a severe search to see if there were any crookedness or spot, any uncleanness or deformity, in their sacrifice.

Taylor's Worby Communicant.

CROP. n. f. [crop, Saxon.] The craw of a bird; the first stomach into which its meat descends.

In birds there is no mastication or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but, in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw. Ray.

But fluttering there, they nestle near the throne,
And lodge in habitations not their own,
By their high crops and corny gizzards known. Dr.

CRO'PFULL. adj. [crop and full.] Sa-tiated; with a full belly.

He, stretch'd out all the chimney's length,
Basks at the fire his hairy strength;
And, crop-full, out of door he flings
Ere the first cock his matin rings. Milton.

CRO'PSICK. adj. [crop and sick.] Sick with repletion; sick with excess and debauchery.

Strange odds! where crop-sick drunkards must engage

A hungry foe, and arm'd with sober rage.
Tate's Juvenal.

CROP. n. f. [croppa, Saxon.]1. The highest part or end of any thing; as the head of a tree, the ear of corn.2. The harvest; the corn gathered off a field; the product of the field.

And this of all my harvest hope I have,
Nought reaped but a weedy crop of care.

Spenser's Pastoral.
Lab'ring the soil, and reaping plenteous crop,
Corn, wine, and oil. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The fountain which from Helicon proceeds,
That sacred stream, should never water weeds,
Nor make the crop of thorns and thistles grow.

Bofcommon.
Nothing

Nothing is more prejudicial to your crop than mowing of it too soon. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. Any thing cut off.

Guileless of steel, and from the razor free,
It falls a plenteous crop reserv'd for thee.
Dryden's Fables.

TO CROP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cut off the ends of any thing; to mow; to reap; to lop.

Cropp'd are the flower-de-luces in your arms;
Of England's coat, one half is cut away.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

He, upon whose side
The fewest roses are cropp'd from the tree,
Shall yield the other in the right opinion.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

All the budding honours on thy crest
I'll crop, to make a garland for my head.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

I will crop off from the top of his young twigs a tender one, and will plant it upon an high mountain.
Ezekiel, xvii. 22.

There are some tears of trees, which are combed from the beards of goats; for when the goats bite and crop them, especially in the mornings, the dew being on, the tear cometh forth, and hangeth upon their beards.
Bacon's Natural History.

No more, my goats, shall I behold you climb
The steepy cliffs, or crop the flow'ry thyme!
Dryden's Virgil.

2. To gather before it falls.

O fruit divine!
Sweet of thyself, but much more sweet thus cropp'd.
Milton.

Age, like ripe apples, on earth's bosom drops;
White force our youth, like fruits, untimely cropp.
Denham.

Death destroys
The parent's hopes, and *cropp*s the growing boys.
Greuch.

TO CROP. v. n. To yield harvest.

Royal wench!
She made great Caesar lay his sword to-bed;
He plough'd her, and she *cropp*d. Shak. Ant. & Cleop.

CROPPER. n. s. [from crop.] A kind of pigeon with a large crop.

There be tame and wild pigeons; and of tame these be croppers, carriers, runts. Walton's Angler.

CRO'SIER. n. s. [croiser, Fr. from croix, a cross.] The pastoral staff of a bishop, which has a cross upon it.

When prelates are great, there is also danger from them; as in the times of Anselmus and Thomas Becket, who, with their cro'siers, did almost try it with the king's sword. Bacon.

Grievances there were, I must confess, and some incongruities in my civil government; wherein some say the cro'sier, some say the distaff, was too busy.
Howel's England's Tears.

Her front erect with majesty she bore,
The cro'sier wielded, and the mitre wore. Dryden.

CRO'SLET. n. s. [croisset, French.]

1. A small cross.

Then Una 'gan to ask, if aught he knew,
Or heard abroad, of that her champion true,
That in his armour bare a cro'slet red, Spenser.

Here an unfinish'd diamond cro'slet lay,
To which soft lovers adoration pay. Gay's Fan.

2. It seems to be printed in the following passage, by mistake, for corselet.

The cro'slet some, and some the cushions mould,
With silver plated, and with ductile gold.
Dryden's Æneid.

CROSS. n. s. [croix, Fr. croce, Ital. crux, Latin.]

1. One straight body laid at right angles over another; the instrument by which the Saviour of the world suffered death.

They make a little cross of a quill, longways of that part of the quill which hath the pith, and crossways of that piece of the quill without pith.
Bacon's Natural History.

You are first to consider seriously the infinite love of your Saviour, who offered himself for you as a sacrifice upon the cross.
Taylor's Guide to the Penitent.

5. Any thing that thwarts or obstructs; misfortune; hindrance; vexation; opposition; misadventure; trial of patience.

Wishing unto me many crosses and mischances in my love, whensoever I should love. Sidney.

Then let us teach our trial patience,
Because it is a customary cross. Shakespeare.

Heaven prepares good men with crosses; but no ill can happen to a good man. Ben Jonson's Discov.

A great estate hath great crosses, and a mean fortune hath but small ones.
Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

6. Money, so called because marked with a cross.

He was laid to make soldiers spring up out of the very earth to follow him, though he had not a cross to pay them salary. Howel's Vocal Forest.

Whereas we cannot much lament our loss,
Who neither carried back nor brought one cross.
Dryden.

7. Cross and Pile, a play with money; at which it is put to chance whether the side, which bears a cross, shall lie upward, or the other.

Whacum had neither cross nor pile;
His plunder was not worth the while. Hudibras.

This I humbly conceive to be perfect boys' play;
cross, I win, and pile, you lose; or, what's your's is mine, and what's mine is my own. Saunders.

8. Church lands in Ireland.

The absolute palatines made their own judges,
so as the king's writ did not run in those counties, but only in the church lands lying within the same, which were called the *cross*s; wherein the king made a sheriff: so in each of these counties palatines there was one sheriff of the liberty, and another of the *cross*s. Sir J. Davies.

CROSS. adj. [from the substantive.]

1. Transverse; falling athwart something else.

Whatsoever penumbra should be made in the circles by the cross refraction of the second prism, that penumbra would be conspicuous in the right lines which touch those circles. Newton.

The sun, in that space of time, by his annual contrary motion eastward, will be advanced near a degree of the ecliptick, cross to the motion of the equator. Holder on Time.

The ships must needs encounter, when they either advance towards one another in direct lines, or meet in the intersection of cross ones.
Bentley.

2. Oblique; lateral.

Was this a face?
To stand against the deep dread-bolted thunder,
In the most terrible and nimble stroke
Of quick cross lightning? Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. Adverse; opposite: often with to.

We're both love's captives; but with fate so cross,
One must be happy by the other's loss. Dryden.

Cross to our interests, curbing sense and sin;
Oppress'd without, and undermin'd within,
It thrives through pain. Dryden.

It runs cross to the belief and apprehension of the rest of mankind; a difficulty which a modest and good man is scarce able to encounter. Atter.

4. Perverse; untractable.

When, through the cross circumstances of a man's temper or condition, the enjoyment of a pleasure would certainly expose him to a greater inconvenience, then religion bids him quit it.
South.

5. Peevish; fretful; ill-humoured.

Did ever any man upon the rack afflict himself, because he had received a cross answer from his mistress? Taylor.

All cross and distasteful humours, and whatever else may render the conversation of men grievous and uneasy to one another, must be shunned.
Tillotson.

6. Contrary; contradictory.

The mind brings all the ends of a long and various hypothesis together; sees how one part coheres with, and depends upon, another; and so clears off all the appearing contrarieties and contradictions, that seemed to lie cross and uncouth, and to make the whole unintelligible. South.

7. Contrary to wish; unfortunate.

We learn the great reasonableness of not only a contented, but also a thankful, acquiescence in any condition, and under the *cross*est and severest passages of Providence. South.

I cannot, without some regret, behold the cross and unlucky issue of my design; for, by my dislike of disputes, I am engaged in one. Glanville.

8. Interchanged.

Evarchus made a cross marriage also with Dorilaus's sister, and shortly left her with child of the famous Pyrocles. Sidney.

Cross marriages, between the king's son and the archduke's daughter; and again, between the archduke's son and the king's daughter.
Bacon's Henry VII.

CROSS. prep.

1. Athwart; so as to intersect any thing; transversely.

The enemy had, in the woods before them, cut down great trees cross the ways, so that their horse could not possibly pass that way. Knollys.

Between the midst and these, the gods assign'd
Two habitable seats of human kind;
And cross their limits cut a sloping way,
Which the twelve signs in beauteous order sway.
Dryden's Virgil.

Cross his back, as in triumphant scorn,
The hope and pillar of the house was born.
Dryden's Fables.

2. Over; from side to side.

A fox was taking a walk one night cross a village.
L'Estrange.

TO CROSS. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To lay one body, or draw one line, athwart another.

This forc'd the stubborn 'st, for the cause,
To cross the cudgels to the laws;
That what by breaking them 't had gain'd,
By their support might be maintain'd. Hudibras.

The loxia, or cross-bill, whose bill is thick and strong, with the tips crossing one another, with great readiness breaks open fir-cones, apples, and other fruit, to come at their kernels; as if the crossing of the bill was designed for this service.
Derham's Physico-Theology.

I shall most carefully observe, not to cross over or deface the copy of your papers for the future, and only to mark in the margin. Pope.

A hunted hare treads back her mazes, and *cross*s and confounds her former track. Watts.

2. To sign with the cross.

Friars
Resort to farmers rich, and bless their halls,
And exercise the beds, and cross the walls. Dryden.

3. To cancel: as, to cross an article.

4. To pass over.

He conquered this proud Turk as far as the Hellespont, which he *cross*d, and made a visit to the Greek emperor at Constantinople. Temple.

We found the hero, for whose only sake
We sought the dark abodes, and *cross*d the bitter lake. Dryden.

5. To

5. To move laterally, obliquely, or athwart; not in opposition; not in the same line.

But he them spying, 'gan to turn aside,
For fear, as seem'd, or for some feined loss;
More greedy they of news, fast towards him do cross. Spenser.

6. To thwart; to interpose obstruction; to embarrass; to obstruct; to hinder; to counteract.

Still do I cross this wretch, whatso he taketh in hand. Hooker.

The king no longer could endure
Thus to be cross'd in what he did intend. Daniel.

He was so great an enemy to Digby and Colepeper, who were only present in debates of the war with the officers, that he crossed all they proposed. Clarendon.

Buried in private, and so suddenly I
It crosses my design, which was to allow
The rites of funeral sitting his degree. Dryden.

Swell'd with our late successes on the foe,
Which France and Holland wanted power to cross,
We urge an unseen foe. Dryden.

The firm patriot there,
Though still by faction, vice, and fortune cross'd,
Shall find the generous labour was not lost. Addison's Cato.

7. Not to concur; to be inconsistent with.

Then their wills clash with their understandings, and their appetites cross their duty. Locke.

8. To contravene; to hinder by authority; to countermand.

No governor is suffered to go on with any one course, but upon the least information he is either stopped and crossed, or other courses appointed him from hence. Spenser on Ireland.

It may make my case dangerous, to cross this in the smallest. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

9. To contradict.

In all this there is not a syllable which any ways crosses us. Hooker.

It is certain, howsoever it cross the received opinion, that sounds may be created without air. Bacon's Natural History.

10. To debar; to preclude.

From his loins no hopeful branch shall spring,
To cross me from the golden time I look for. Shakespeare.

- To CROSS. v. n.

1. To lie athwart another thing.

2. To be inconsistent.

Men's actions do not always cross with reason. Sidney.

To CROSS-EXAMINE. v. a. [cross and examine.] To try the faith of evidence by captious questions of the contrary party.

If we may but cross-examine and interrogate their actions against their words, these will soon confess the invalidity of their solemnest confessions. Decay of Piety.

The judges shall, as they think fit, interrogate or cross-examine the witnesses. Speilator.

CROSS-STAFF. n. f. [from cross and staff.]

An instrument commonly called the forestaff, used by seamen to take the meridian altitude of the sun or stars. Harris.

CROSS-BITE. n. f. [cross and bite.] A deception; a cheat.

The fox, that trusted to his address and manage, without so much as dreaming of a cross-bite from so silly an animal, fell himself into the pit that he had digged for another. L'Estrange.

To CROSS-BITE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To contravene by deception.

No rhetoric must be spent against cross-biting a country evidence, and frightening him out of his senses. Colley.

That many knotty points there are,
Which all discuss, but few can clear;
As nature slyly had thought fit,
For some by-ends, to cross-bite wit. Prior.

CROSS-BOW. n. f. [cross and bow.] A missile weapon, formed by placing a bow athwart a stock.

Gentlemen suffer their beasts to run wild in their woods and waste ground, where they are hunted and killed with cross-bows and pieces, in the manner of deer. Carew of Cornwall.

The master of the cross-bows, lord Rambures. Shakespeare.

Testimony is like the shot of a long bow, which owes its efficacy to the force of the shooter; argument is like the shot of the cross-bow, equally forcible whether discharged by a giant or a dwarf. Boyle.

CROSS-BOWER. n. f. [from cross-bow.] A shooter with a cross-bow.

The French assisted themselves by land with the crossbowmen of Genoa against the English. Raleigh's Essays.

CROSSGRAINED. adj. [cross and grain.]

We find in sullen wits,
And cross grain'd works of modern wits,
The wonder of the ignorant. Hudibras.

The spirit of contradiction, in a cross-grained woman, is incurable. L'Estrange.

She was none of your cross-grained, termagant, scolding jades, that one had as good be banged as live in the house with. Arbutnot's John Bull.

But wisdom, peevish and cross-grain'd,
Must be oppos'd, to be sustain'd. Prior.

CROSSLY. adv. [from cross.]

1. Athwart; so as to intersect something else.

2. Oppositely; adversely; in opposition to.

He that provides for this life, but takes no care for eternity, is wise for a moment, but a fool for ever; and acts as untowardly and crossly to the reason of things, as can be imagined. Tilley.

3. Unfortunately.

CROSSNESS. n. f. [from cross.]

1. Transverseness; intersection.

2. Perverseness; peevishness.

The lighter sort of malignity turneth but to a crossness or aptness to oppose; but the deeper sort, to envy, or mere mischief. Bacon.

I deny nothing, fit to be granted, out of crossness or humour. King Charles.

Who would have imagined that the stiff crossness of a poor captive should ever have had the power to make Haman's seat so uneasy to him? L'Estr.

They help us to forget the crossness of men and things, compose our cares and our passions, and lay our disappointments asleep. Collier of the Entertainment of Books.

CROSSROW. n. f. [cross and row.] Alphabet; so named because a cross is placed at the beginning, to shew that the end of learning is piety.

He hearkens after prophecies and dreams,
And from the crossrow plucks the letter G;
And says a wizard told him, that by G
His issue disinherited should be. Shak. Richard III.

The least unhappy persons do, in so fickle and so tempestuous a sea as this world, meet with many more either crosswinds or stormy gusts than prosperous gales. Boyle.

Selby is crowing, and, though always defeated by his wife, still crowing on. Grandison.

CROWD. n. f. [cruð, Saxon.]

1. A multitude confusedly pressed together.

2. A promiscuous medley, without order or distinction.

He could then compare the confusion of a multitude to that tumult he had observed in the Icarian sea, dashing and breaking among its crowd of islands. Pope.

3. The vulgar; the populace.

He went not with the crowd to see a shrine,
But fed us by the way with food divine. Dryden's Fables.

4. [From crwth, Welsh.] A fiddle.

Hark how the minstrels 'gin to shrill aloud
Their merry musick that resounds from far,
The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling crowd,
That wall agree withouten breach or jar. Spenser's Epith.

His fiddle is your proper purchase,
Won in the service of the churches;
And by your doom must be allow'd
To be, or be no more, a crowd. Hudibras.

To CROWD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fill with confused multitudes.

A mind which is ever crowding its memory with things which it learns, may cramp the invention itself. Watts.

2. To press close together.

The time misorder'd, doth in common sense
Crowd us and crush us to this monstrous form,
To hold our safety up. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

It seems probable that the sea doth still grow narrower from age to age, and sinks more within its channel and the bowels of the earth, according as it can make its way into all those subterraneous cavities, and crowd the air out of them. Burnet's Theory.

As the mind itself is thought to take up no space, so its actions seem to require no time; but many of them seem to be crowded into an instant. Locke.

Then let us fill
This little interval, this pause of life,
With all the virtues we can crowd into it. Addison's Cato.

3. To incumber by multitudes.

How short is life! Why will vain courtiers toil,
And crowd a vainer monarch for a smile? Granville.

Vain is the force of man, and heav'n's as vain,

To crush the pillars which the pile sustain.

Dryden's Æneid.

4. To subdue; to conquer beyond resistance.

They use them to plague their enemies, or to oppress and crush some of their own too stubborn freeholders. Spenser on Ireland.

Mine emulation

Hath not that honour in 't it had; for

I thought to crush him in an equal force,

True sword to sword. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

This act

Shall bruise the head of Satan, crush his strength,

Defeating sin and death, his two main arms. Milt.

What can that man fear, who takes care to please a Being that is so able to crush all his adversaries? a Being that can divert any misfortune from befalling him, or turn any such misfortune to his advantage? Addison's Guardian.

To CRUSH. v. n. To be condensed; to come in a close body.

CRUSH. n. f. [from the verb.] A collision; the act of rushing together.

1. Any shell, or external coat, by which any body is enveloped.

I have known the statue of an emperor quite hid under a crust of dross. Addison on Medals.

2. An incrustation; collection of matter into a hard body.

Were the river a confusion of never so many different bodies, if they had been all actually dissolved, they would at least have formed one continued crust; as we see the scorium of metals always gathers into a solid piece. Addison on Italy.

The viscous crust stops the entry of the chyle into the lacteals. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. The case of a pie, made of meal, and baked.

He was never suffered to go abroad, for fear of catching cold: when he should have been hunting down a buck, he was by his mother's side, learning how to season it, or put it in crust. Addison's Spectator.

4. The outer hard part of bread.

Th' impenetrable crust thy teeth defies,

And, petrified with age, securely lies. Dryden's Juven.

5. A waste piece of bread.

Y' are liberal now; but when your turn is sped,

You'll wish me choak'd with every crust of bread. Dryden.

Men will do tricks, like dogs, for crusts. L'Estr.

To CRUST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To envelop; to cover with a hard case.

Why gave you me a monarch's soul,

And crusted it with base plebeian clay? Dryden.

Nor is it improbable but that, in process of time, the whole surface of it may be crusted over,

as the islands enlarge themselves, and the banks

close in upon them. Addison on Italy.

And now their legs, and breasts, and bodies stood

Crusted with bark, and hard'ning into wood. Addison.

In some, who have run up to men without education, we may observe many great qualities darkened and eclipsed; their minds are crusted over, like diamonds in the rock. Felton.

2. To foul with concretions.

If your master hath many musty, or very foul and crusted bottles, let those be the first you truck

at the alehouse. Swift.

To CRUST. v. n. To gather or contract a crust; to gain a hard covering.

I contented myself with a plaster upon the place that was burnt, which crusted and healed in very few days. Temple.

CRUSTACEOUS. adj. [from crusta, Lat.]

Shelly, with joints; not testaceous; not with one continued uninterrupted shell.

Lobster is crustaceous, oyster testaceous.

It is true that there are some shells, such as those of lobsters, crabs, and others of crustaceous kinds, that are very rarely found at land. Woodward's Natural History.

The egg itself deserves our notice: its parts within, and its crusty coat without, are admirably well fitted for the business of incubation. Darwin's Physico-Theology.

2. Sturdy; morose; snappish: a low word.

CRUTCH. n. f. [crozza, Italian; crutche, German.]

1. A support used by cripples.

Ah, thus king Henry throws away his crutch,

Before his legs be firm to bear his body. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Hence, therefore, thou nice crutch:

A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,

Must glove this hand. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

On these new crutches let them learn to walk. Dryden's Georgicks.

This fair defect, this helpless aid call'd wife,

The bending crutch of a decrepit life. Dryden.

Rhyme is a crutch that lifts the weak along,

Supports the feeble, but retards the strong. Smith.

The

The dumb shall sing, the lame his crutch forego,
And leap exulting like the bounding roe.

Pope's Messiah.

2. It is used for old age.

Shakespeare.

What's the matter,
That in the several places of the city
You cry against the noble senate?

Shak. Coriolanus.

If dressing, miffressing, and compliment,
Take up thy day, the sun himself will cry
Against thee.

Herbert.

Lysimachus having obtained the favour of seeing his ships and machines, surprised at the contrivance, cried out, that they were built with more than human art.

Arbutnot on Coins.

6. To utter lamentations.

We came criing hither:
Thou know'st, the first time that we smell the air,
We wail and cry.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart;
but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation of spirit.

Isaiah, lxx. 14.

When any evil has been upon philosophers, they groan as pitifully, and cry out as loud, as other men.

Tillotson.

Then let us meet them like necessities;
And that same word even now cries out on us.

Shak.

Giddy censure
Will then cry out of Marcius: oh, if he Had borne the business.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Behold, I cry out of wrong, but I am not heard.

Job, xix. 7.

Cry out upon the stars for doing
Ill offices, to cross their wooing.

Hudibras.

Epiphanius cries out upon it, as rank idolatry, and destructive to their souls who did it.

Stillingfleet.

Tumult, sedition, and rebellion, are things that the followers of that hypothesis cry out against.

Locke.

I find every sect, as far as reason will help them, make use of it gladly; and where it fails them, they cry out, it is matter of faith, and above reason.

Locke.

4. To declare loud.

5. To be in labour.

What! is the criing out? —
—So said her woman; and that her sufferance made

Each pang a death.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

To CRY up. v. a.

1. To applaud; to exalt; to praise.

Instead of criing up all things which are brought from beyond sea, let us advance the native commodities of our own kingdom.

Bacon to Villiers.

The philosopher deservedly suspected himself of vanity, when cried up by the multitude.

Glanville's Sceptis.

The astrologer, if his predictions come to pass, is cried up to the stars from whence he pretends to draw them.

South.

They slight the strongest arguments that can be brought for religion, and cry up very weak ones against it.

Tillotson.

He may, out of interest, as well as conviction, cry up that for sacred, which, if once trampled on and profaned, he himself cannot be safe, nor secure.

Locke.

Poets, like monarchs on an eastern throne,
Confin'd by nothing but their will alone,
Here can cry up, and there as boldly blame,

And, as they please, give infamy or fame.

Watts.

Those who are fond of continuing the war, cry up our constant success at a most prodigious rate.

Swift.

2. To raise the price by proclamation.

All the effect that I conceive was made by criing up the pieces of eight, was to bring in much more of that species, instead of others current here.

Temple.

CRY. n. f. [cri, French.]

And all the first-born in the land of Egypt shall die, and there shall be a great cry throughout all the land.

Exodus.

2. Weeping; mourning.

3. Clamour; outcry.

Amazement seizes all; the general cry
Proclaims Laocoon justly doom'd to die.

Dryden's Virgil.

These narrow and selfish views have so great an influence in this cry, that there are several of my fellow freeholders who fancy the church in danger upon the rising of bank-stock.

Addison.

4. Exclamation of triumph or wonder, or any other passion.

In miraculous countries some impostor cries out, a miracle! a miracle! to confirm the deluded vulgar in their errors; and so the cry goes round, without examining into the cheat.

Swift.

5. Proclamation.

6. The hawkers proclamation of wares to be sold in the street: as, the cries of London.

7. Acclamation; popular favour.

The cry went once for thee,
And still it might, and yet it may again.

Shakespeare.

8. Voice; utterance; manner of vocal expression.

Sounds also, besides the distinct cries of birds and beasts, are modified by diversity of notes of different length, put together, which make that complex idea called tune.

Locke.

9. Importunate call.

Pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them.

Jer. vii. 13.

10. Yelping of dogs.

He scorns the dog, resolves to try
The combat next; but if their cry
Invades again his trembling ear,
He strait resumes his wonted care.

Waller.

11. Yell; inarticulate noise.

There shall be the noise of a cry from the fishgate, and an howling from the second, and a great crashing from the hills.

Zeeph. i. 10.

12. A pack of dogs.

About her middle round,
A cry of hell-hounds never ceasing bark'd.

Milton.

You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate
As reek o' th' rotten fens; whose loves I prize
As the dead carcasses of unburied men,
That do corrupt my air.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

CRY'AL. n. f. The heron. Ainsworth.

CRY'ER. See CRIER.

CRY'ER. n. f. A kind of hawk, called the falcon gentle, an enemy to pigeons, and very swift.

Ainsworth.

CRYPTICAL. } adj. [κρυπτός.] Hidden;

CRYPTICK. } secret; occult; private; unknown; not divulged.

The students of nature, conscious of her more cryptick ways of working, resolve many strange effects into the near efficiency of second causes.

Glanville's Apol.

Speakers, whose chief business is to amuse or delight, do not confine themselves to any natural order, but in a cryptical or hidden method adapt every thing to their ends.

Watts.

CRYPTICALLY. adv. [from cryptical.]

Occultly; secretly: perhaps, in the following example, the author might have written critically.

We take the word acid in a familiar sense, without cryptically distinguishing it from those vapors that are a-kin to it.

Boyle.

CRYPTOGRAPHY. n. f. [κρυπτός and γραφω.]

1. The act of writing secret characters.

2. Secret characters; cyphers.

CRYPTO-

CRYPTOLOGY. n. f. [κρυπτο and λόγος.] Enigmatical language.

CRYSTAL. n. f. [κρύσταλλος.]

1. Crystals are hard, pellucid, and naturally colourless bodies, of regularly angular figures, composed of simple, not filamentous plates, not flexible or elastic, giving fire with steel, not fermenting with acid menstrua, and calcining in a strong fire. There are many various species of it produced in different parts of the globe. Hill on Fossils.

Island crystal is a genuine spar, of an extremely pure, clear, and fine texture, seldom either blemished with flaws or spots, or stained with any other colour. A remarkable property of this body, which has much employed the writers on opticks, is its double refraction; so that if it be laid over a black line, drawn on paper, two lines appear in the place of one. Hill.

Water, as it seems, turneth into crystal; as is seen in divers caves, where the crystal hangs in silicidius. Bacon.

If crystal be a stone, it is not immediately concreated by the efficacy of cold, but rather by a mineral spirit. Brown.

Crystal is certainly known and distinguished by the degree of its diaphaneity and of its refraction, as also of its hardness, which are ever the same. Woodward.

2. Crystal is also used for a facitious body cast in the glass-houses, called also crystal glass, which is carried to a degree of perfection beyond the common glass; though it comes far short of the whiteness and vivacity of the natural crystal. Chambers.

3. Crystals [in chymistry] express salts or other matters shot or congealed in manner of crystal. Chambers.

If the menstruum be overcharged, within a short time the metals will shoot into certain crystals. Bacon.

CRYSTAL. adj.

1. Consisting of crystal.

Then, Jupiter, thou king of Gods,
Thy crystal window ope, look out. Shakespeare's Cymb.

2. Bright; clear; transparent; lucid; pellucid.

In groves we live, and lie on mossy beds,
By crystal streams that murmur through the meads. Dryden.

CRYSTALLINE. adj. [crystallinus, Latin.]

1. Consisting of crystal.

Mount eagle to my palace crystalline. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

We provided ourselves with some small receivers, blown of crystalline glass. Boyle.

2. Bright; clear; pellucid; transparent.

The clarifying of water is an experiment tending to the health; besides the pleasure of the eye, when water is crystalline. It is effected by casting in and placing pebbles at the head of the current, that the water may strain through them. Bacon's Natural History.

He on the wings of cherub rode sublime
On the crystalline sky, in saphir thron'd Illustrious far and wide. Milton.

CRYSTALLINE Humour. n. f. The second humour of the eye, that lies immediately next to the aqueous behind the uvea, opposite to the papilla, nearer to the fore part than the back part of the globe. It is the least of the humours, but much more solid than any of them. Its figure, which is convex on both sides, resembles two unequal segments of spheres, of which the most convex is on its backside, which makes a small cavity in the glassy humour in which it lies. It is covered with a fine coat, called aranea.

The parts of the eye are made convex, and especially the crystalline humour, which is of a lenticular figure, convex on both sides.

Ray on the Creation.

CRYSTALLIZATION. n. f. [from crystallize.]

1. Congelation into crystals.

Such a combination of saline particles as resembles the form of a crystal, variously modified, according to the nature and texture of the salts. The method is by dissolving any saline body in water, and filtering it, to evaporate, till a film appear at the top, and then let it stand to shoot; and this it does by that attractive force which is in all bodies, and particularly in salt, by reason of its solidity: whereby, when the menstruum or fluid, in which such particles flow, is sated enough or evaporated, so that the saline particles are within each other's attractive powers, they draw one another more than they are drawn by the fluid, then will they run into crystals. And this is peculiar to those, that, let them be ever so much divided and reduced into minute particles, yet when they are formed into crystals, they each of them reassume their proper shapes; so that one might as easily divest them of their saltiness, as of their figure. This being an immutable and perpetual law, by knowing the figure of the crystals, we may understand what the texture of the particles ought to be, which can form those crystals; and, on the other hand, by knowing the texture of the particles, may be determined the figure of the crystals. Quincy.

2. The mass formed by congelation or concretion.

All natural metallick and mineral crystallizations were effected by the water, which first brought the particles, whereof each consists, out from amongst the matter of the strata. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

To CRYSTALLIZE. v. a. [from crystal.]

To cause to congeal or concrete in crystals.

If you dissolve copper in aqua fortis, or spirit of nitre, you may, by crystallizing the solution, obtain a goodly blue. Boyle.

To CRYSTALLIZE. v. n. To coagulate, congeal, concrete, or shoot into crystals.

Recent urine will crystallize by inspissation, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CUB. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. The young of a beast; generally of a bear or fox.

I would outstare the sternest eyes that look,
Pluck the young suckling cubs from the she-bear. Shakespeare.

This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear would couch,

The lion, and the belly-pinched wolf,
Keep their fur dry. Shakespeare's King Lear.

In the eagle's destroying one fox's cubs, there's power executed with oppression. L'Estrange.

2. The young of a whale, perhaps of any viviparous fish.

Two mighty whales, which swelling seas had toft,

One as a mountain vast, and with her came
A cub, not much inferior to his dame. Waller.

3. In reproach or contempt, a young boy or girl.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?
Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow? Shakespeare.

O most comical fight! a country squire, with the equipage of a wife and two daughters, came to Mr. Snipwel's shop last night; but, such two unlicked cubs!

Congreve.

To CUB. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth: used of beasts, or of a woman in contempt.

Cub'd in a cabin, on a mattress laid,
On a brown george with lousy swabbers fed;
Dead wine, that stinks of the Borrachi, sup
From a foul jack, or greasy maple cup.

Dryden's Persius.

CUBATION. n. f. [cubatio, Latin.] The act of lying down. DiB.

CUBATORY. adj. [from cubo, Lat.] Recumbent. DiB.

CUBATURE. n. f. [from cube.] The finding exactly the solid content of any proposed body. Harris.

CUBE. n. f. [from κῦβος, a die.]

1. [In geometry.] A regular solid body, consisting of six square and equal faces or sides, and the angles all right, and therefore equal. Chambers.

2. [In arithmetick.] See CUBICK Number.

All the master planets move about the sun at several distances, as their common centre, and with different velocities. This common law being observed in all of them, that the squares of the times of the revolutions are proportional to the cubes of their distances. Grew's Cosmologia.

CUBE Root. } n. f. The origin of a

CUBICK Root. } cubick number; or a number, by whose multiplication into itself, and again into the product, any given number is formed: thus two is the cube-root of eight. Chambers.

CUBEBS. n. f. A small dried fruit resembling pepper, but somewhat longer, of a greyish brown colour on the surface. It has an aromattick smell, and is acrid to the taste. Cubebs are brought from Java. Hill.

Aromatticks, as cubebs, cinnamon, and nutmegs, are usually put into crude poor wines, to give them more oily spirits. Floyer on the Humours.

CUBICAL. } adj. [from cube.]

1. Having the form or properties of a cube.

A close vessel, containing ten cubical feet of air, will not suffer a wax candle of an ounce to burn in it above an hour before it be suffocated. Wilkins's Math. Mag.

It is above a hundred to one, against any particular throw, that you do not cast any given set of faces with four cubical dice; because there are so many several combinations of the six faces of four dice. Bentley's Sermons.

2. It is applied to numbers.

The number of four, multiplied into itself, produceth the square number of sixteen; and that again multiplied by four, produceth the cubical number of sixty-four. If we should suppose a multitude actually infinite, there must be infinite roots, and square and cubical numbers; yet, of necessity, the root is but the fourth part of the square, and the sixteenth part of the cubical number. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The number of ten hath been as highly extolled, as containing even, odd, long and plain, quadrated and cubical numbers. Brown's Vulgar Err.

CUBICALNESS. n. f. [from cubical.] The state or quality of being cubical.

CUBICULARY. adj. [cnbiculum, Latin.] Fitted for the posture of lying down.

Custom, by degrees, changed their cubiculary beds into discubitory, and introduced a fashion to go from the baths unto these. Brown's Vulg. Err.

CUBIFORM. adj. [from cube and form.] Of the shape of a cube.

CUBIT. n. f. [from cubitus, Latin.] A measure in use among the ancients; which was originally the distance from the elbow, bending inwards, to the extremity of the middle finger. This measure is the fourth part of a well-proportioned man's stature. Some fix the Hebrew cubit at twenty inches and a half, Paris measure; and others at eighteen. Calmet.

From the tip of the elbow to the end of the long finger, is half a yard, and a quarter of the stature; and makes arabiz, the first measure we read of, the ark of Noah being framed and measured by cubits. Holder on Time.

Measur'd by cubit, length, and breadth, and height. Milton.

The Jews used two sorts of cubits; the sacred, and the profane or common one. Arbutnot on Measures.

When on the goddess first I cast my sight, Scarce seem'd her stature of a cubit height. Pope.

CUBITAL. adj. [cubitalis, Latin.] Containing only the length of a cubit.

The watchmen of Tyre might well be called pygmies, the towers of that city being so high, that unto men below they appeared in a cubital stature. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CUCKINGSTOOL. n. f. An engine invented for the punishment of scolds and unquiet women, which, in ancient times, was called tumbrel. Cowell.

These mounted on a chair-corule,
Which moderns call a cucking-stool,
March proudly to the river's side. Hudibras.

CUCKOLD. n. f. [cocu, Fr. from cuckoo.] One that is married to an adulteress; one whose wife is false to his bed.

But for all the whole world; why, who would not make her husband a cuckold, to make him a monarch? I should venture purgatory for't. Shakespeare's Othello.

There have been,
Or I am much deceiv'd, cuckolds ere now;
And many a man there is, ev'n at this present,
Now while I speak this, holds his wife by th' arm,
That little thinks she has been sluic'd in 'a absence. Shakespeare.

For though the law makes null th' adulterer's deed

Of lands to her, the cuckold may succeed. Dryden's Juvenal.

Ever since the reign of king Charles II. the alderman is made a cuckold, the deluded virgin is debauched, and adultery and fornication are committed behind the scenes. Swift.

To CUCKOLD. v. a.

1. To corrupt a man's wife; to bring upon a man the reproach of having an adulterous wife; to rob a man of his wife's fidelity.

If thou canst cuckold him, thou do'st thyself a pleasure, and me a sport. Shakespeare's Othello.

2. To wrong a husband by unchastity.
But suffer not thy wife abroad to roam,
Nor strut in streets with amazonian pace;
For that's to cuckold thee before thy face. Dryden's Juvenal.

CUCKOLDLY. adj. [from cuckold.] Having the qualities of a cuckold; poor; mean; cowardly; sneaking.

Poor cuckoldly knave, I know him not: yet I wrong him to call him poor; they say the jealous knave hath masses of money. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

CUCKOLDMAKER. n. f. [cuckold and make.] One that makes a practice of corrupting wives.

If I spared any that had a head to hit, either young or old, he or she, cuckold, or cuckoldmaker, let me never hope to see a child again. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

One Hernando, cuckoldmaker of this city, contrived to steal her away. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

CUCKOLDOM. n. f. [from cuckold.]

1. The act of adultery.

She is thinking on nothing but her colonel, and conspiring cuckoldom against me. Dryd. Spanish Fr.

2. The state of a cuckold.

It is a true saying, that the last man of the parish that knows of his cuckoldom, is himself. Arbutnot's John Bull.

CUCKOO. n. f. [cuculus, Lat. cuccu, Welsh; cocu, French; cokkoek, Dutch.]

1. A bird which appears in the spring, and is said to suck the eggs of other birds, and lay her own to be hatched in their place: from which practice, it was usual to alarm a husband, at the approach of an adulterer, by calling cuckoo; which, by mistake, was in time applied to the husband. This bird is remarkable for the uniformity of his note, from which his name in most tongues seems to have been formed.

Finding Mopla, like a cuckoo by a nightingale, alone with Pamela, I came in. Sidney.

The merry cuckoo, messenger of spring,
His trumpet shrill hath thrice already sounded. Spenser.

The plain song cuckoo gray,
Whose note full many a man doth mark,
And dares not answer, nay. Shakespeare.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night,

Take heed ere summer comes, or cuckoo birds afright. Shakespeare.

I deduce,
From the first note the hollow cuckoo sings,
The symphony of spring; and touch a theme Unknown to fame, the passion of the grove. Tbomson.

2. It is a name of contempt.
Why, what a rascal art thou, then, to praise him so for running! — A horseback, ye cuckoo; — but a-foot, he will not budge a foot. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

CUCKOO-BUD. } n. f. [cardaminus,
CUCKOO-FLOWER. } Lat.] The name of a flower.

When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakespeare.

Nettles, cuckoo-flowers,
Dandel, and all the idle weeds. Shak. King Lear.

CUCKOO-SPITTLE. n. f. [cuckoo and spittle.]

Cuckoo-spittle, or woodsear, is that spumous dew or exudation, or both, found upon plants, especially about the joints of lavender and rosemary; observable with us about the latter end of May. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CUCULLATE. } adj. [cucullatus, hooded, CUCULLATED. } Latin.]

1. Hooded; covered as with a hood or cowl.

2. Having the resemblance or shape of a hood.

They are differently cucullated, and capuched upon the head and back. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CUCUMBER. n. f. [cucumis, Latin.] The name of a plant, and also of the fruit of that plant.

It hath a flower consisting of one single leaf, bell shaped, and expanded toward the top, and cut into many segments; of which some are male, or barren, having no embryo, but only a large style in the middle, charged with the farina; others are female, or fruitful, being salted to an embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fleshy fruit, for the most part oblong and turbinate, which is divided into three or four cells, inclosing many oblong seeds. The species are, 1. The common cucumber. 2. The white cucumber. 3. The long Turkey cucumber. Miller.

How cucumbers along the surface creep,
With crooked bodies and with bellies deep. Dryden's Virgil.

CUCURBITACEOUS. adj. [from cucurbita, Latin, a gourd.]

Cucurbitaceous plants are those which resemble a gourd; such as the pumpkin and melon. Chambers.

CUCURBITE. n. f. [cucurbita, Latin.]

A chymical vessel, commonly called a body, made of earth or glass, in the shape of a gourd, and therefore called cucurbite. Quincy.

I have, for curiosity's sake, distilled quicksilver in a cucurbite, fitted with a capacious glass head. Boyle on Colours.

Let common yellow sulphur be put into a cucurbite glass, upon which pour the strongest aqua fortis. Mortimer.

CUD. n. f. [cud, Saxon.] That food which is repositied in the first stomach in order to rumination, or to be chewed again.

Many times, when my master's cattle came hither to chew their cud in this fresh place, I might see the young bull testify his love. Sidney.

You range the pathless wood,
While on a flow'ry bank he chews the cud. Dryd.

CUDDEN. } n. f. [without etymology.] A CUDDY. } clown; a stupid rustick; a low dolt: a low bad word.

The flustering cudden, propp'd upon his staff,
Stood ready gaping with a grinning laugh. Dryden.

To CUDDLE. v. n. [a low word, I believe, without etymology.] To lie close; to squat.

Have you mark'd a partridge quake,
Viewing the tow'ring falcon nigh?
She cuddles low behind the brake;
Nor would she stay, nor darts she fly. Prior.

CUDGEL. n. f. [kudse, Dutch.]

1. A stick to strike with, lighter than a club, shorter than a pole.

Vine twigs, while they are green, are brittle; yet the wood, dried, is extreme tough; and was used by the captains of armies, amongst the Romans, for their cudgels. Bacon.

Do not provoke the rage of stones
And cudgels to thy hide and bones:
Tremble and vanish. Hudibras.

The ass was quickly given to understand, with a good cudgel, the difference betwixt the one playful and the other. L'Estrange.

His surly officer ne'er fail'd to crack
His knotty cudgel on his tougher back. Dryden's Juvenal.

This, if well reflected on, would make people more wary in the use of the rod and the cudgel. Locke.

The wise Cornelius was convinced, that these, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgel-playing. Arbutnot and Pope.

2. To cross the CUUGELS, is to forbear the contest, from the practice of cudgel-players to lay one over the other.

It is much better to give way, than it would be to contend at first, and then either to cross the cudgels, or to be baffled in the conclusion. L'Estr.

To CUUGEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a stick.

My lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouthed man as he is; and said he would cudgel you. Shakesp. Henry IV.

The ass courting his master, just as the spaniel had done, instead of being stroked and made much of,

of, is only rated off and cudgelled for all his courtship. South.

Three duels he fought, thrice ventur'd his life;
Went home, and was cudgell'd again by his wife. Swift.

2. To beat in general.

Cudgel thy brains no more about it; for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

A good woman happened to pass by, as a company of young fellows were cudgelling a walnut-tree, and asked them what they did that for. L'Esfran.

CUDGEL-PROOF. adj. Able to resist a stick.

His doublet was of sturdy buff,
And though not sword, yet cudgel-proof. Hudibras.

CUDLE. n. f. A small sea-fish.

Of round fish there are brett, sprat, cudles, eels. Carew.

CUDWEED. n. f. [from cud and weed.] A plant. Miller.

CUE. n. f. [queue, a tail, French.]

1. The tail or end of any thing; as, the long curl of a wig.

2. The last word of a speech, which the player, who is to answer, catches, and regards as intimation to begin.

Pyramus, you begin: when you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake; and so every one according to his cue. Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.

3. A hint; an intimation; a short direction.

What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,
That he should weep for her? What would he do,
Had he the motive and the cue for passion
That I have? He would drown the stage with tears. Shakespeare.

Let him know how many servants there are, of both sexes, who expect vails; and give them their cue to attend in two lines, as he leaves the house. Swift.

4. The part which any man is to play in his turn.

Hold your hands,
Both you of my inclining, and the rest:
Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it Without a prompter. Shakespeare's Othello.

Neither is Otto here a much more taking gentleman: nothing appears in his cue to move pity, or any way make the audience of his party. Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.

5. Humour; temper of mind: a low word.

CUERPO. n. f. [Spanish.] To be in cuervo, is to be without the upper coat or cloke, so as to discover the true shape of the cuervo or body.

Expos'd in cuervo to their rage,
Without my arms and equipage. Hudibras.

CUFF. n. f. [cuffa, a battle; cuffare, to fight, Ital.]

1. A blow with the fist; a box; a stroke.

The priest let fall the book,
And as he stoop'd again to take it up,
The mad-brain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff,
That down fell priest and book, and book and priest. Shakespeare.

There was no money bid for argument, unless the poet and the player went to cuffs in the question. Shakespeare.

He gave her a cuff on the ear, and she would prick him with her knitting-needle. Arbutnot's John Bull.

Their own sects, which now lie dormant, would be soon at cuffs again with each other about power and preferment. Swift.

2. It is used of birds that fight with their talons.

To CUFF. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight; to scuffle.

Clapping forces acted by the court,
While the peers cuff to make the rabble sport. Dryden's Juvenal.

To CUFF. v. a.

1. To strike with the fist.

I'll after him again, and beat him. —
—Do, cuff him soundly; but never draw thy sword. Shakespeare.

Were not you, my friend, abused, and cuffed, and kicked? Congreve's Old Bachelor.

2. To strike with the talons.

Those lazy owls, who, perch'd near fortune's top,
Sit only watchful with their heavy wings
To cuff down new-fledg'd virtues, that would rise
To nobler heights, and make the grove harmonious. Otway.

The dastard crow, that to the wood made wing,
With her loud kaws her craven kind does bring,
Who, safe in numbers, cuff the noble bird. Dryden.
They with their quills did all the hurt they cou'd,
And cuff'd the tender chickens from their food. Dryden.

3. To strike with the wings. This seems improper.

Hov'ring about the coast, they make their moan,
And cuff the cliffs with pinions not their own. Dryden's Æneid.

CUFF. n. f. [coffe, French.] Part of the sleeve.

He railed at fops; and, instead of the common fashion, he would visit his mistress in a morning gown, band, short cuffs, and a peaked beard. Arbutnot.

CUI'NAGE. n. f. The making up of twine into such forms, as it is commonly framed into for carriage to other places. Cowell.

CUI'RASS. n. f. [cuirasse, Fr. from cuir, leather; coraccio, Ital.] A breastplate.

The lance pursued the voice without delay,
And pierc'd his cuirass, with such fury sent,
And sign'd his bosom with a purple dint. Dryden.

CUIRASSIER. n. f. [from cuirass.] A man at arms; a soldier in armour.

The field, all iron, cast a gleaming brown,
Nor wanted clouds of foot, nor on each horn
Cuirassiers, all in steel, for standing fight. Milton.

The picture of St. George, wherein he is described like a cuirassier, or horseman completely armed, is rather a symbolical image than any proper figure. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CUISS. n. f. [cuiffe, French.] The armour that covers the thighs.

I saw young Harry, with his beaver on,
His cuisse on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,
Rise from the ground like a feather'd Mercury. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

The croslet some, and some the cuisse mould,
With silver plated, and with ductile gold. Dryden's Æneid.

But what had our author to wound Æneas with at so critical a time? And how came the cuisse to be worse tempered than the rest of his armour? Dryden.

CULDEES. n. f. [colidei, Lat.] Monks in Scotland.

CULERAGE. n. f. The same plant with ARSE-SMART. Ainsworth.

CULINARY. adj. [culina, Latin.] Relating to the kitchen; relating to the art of cookery.

Great weight may condense those vapours and exhalations, as soon as they shall at any time begin to ascend from the sun, and make them presently fall back again into him, and by that action increase his heat; much after the manner that, in our earth, the air increases the heat of a culinary fire. Newton.

To those who, by reason of their northern exposition, will be still forced to be at the expence of culinary fires, it will reduce the price of their manufacture. Arbutnot.

To CULL. v. a. [cueillir, French.] To select from others; to pick out of many.

The best of every thing they had being cull'd out for themselves, if there were in their flocks any poor diseased thing not worth the keeping, they thought it good enough for the altar of God. Hooker.

Our engines shall be bent
Against the brows of this resisting town:
Call for our chiefest men of discipline,
To cull the plots of best advantage. Shak. K. John.

Like the bee, culling from ev'ry flower,
Our thighs are packt with wax, our mouths with honey. Shakespeare.

I do remember an apothecary
In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brows, Culling of simples. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Then in a moment fortune shall cull forth,
Out of one side, her happy minion. Shak. K. John.

The choicest of the British, the Roman, Saxon, and Norman laws, being cull'd, as it were, this grand charter was extracted.

When false flow'rs of rhetorick thou would'st cull,
Trust nature, do not labour to be dull. Dryden.

From his herd he culls,
For slaughter, four the fairest of his bulls. Dryden's Virgil.

When the current pieces of the same denomination are of different weights, then the traders in money cull out the heavier, and melt them down with profit. Locke.

With humble duty, and officious haste,
I'll cull the farthest mead for thy repast. Prior.

The various off'rings of the world appear:
From each she nicely culls with curious toil,
And decks the goddess with the glitt'ring spoils. Pope.

CULLER. n. f. [from cull.] One who picks or chooses.

CULLION. n. f. [coglione, a fool, Ital. or perhaps from scullion. It seems to import meanness rather than folly.] A scoundrel; a mean wretch.

Such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

Up to the breach, you dogs; avant, you cullions. Shakespeare.

CULLIONLY. adj. [from cullion.] Having the qualities of a cullion; mean; base.

I'll make a fop o' th' moonshine of you: you whorson, cullionly, barber-monger, draw. Shakespeare's King Lear.

CULLUMBINE. n. f. [more properly spelt COLUMBINE.] The flowers of this plant are beautifully variegated with blue, purple, red, and white. Miller.

Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry bed;
Her neck, like to a bunch of cullumbines. Spenser.

CULLY. n. f. [coglione, Ital. a fool.] A man deceived or imposed upon; as by sharpers, or a strumpet.

Why should you, whose mother-wits
Are furnish'd with all perquisites,
B' allow'd to put all tricks upon
Our cully sex, and we use none? Hudibras.

Yet the rich cullies may their boasting spare:
They purchase but sophisticated ware. Dryden.

He takes it in mighty dudgeon, because I won't let him make me over by deed as his lawful cully. Arbutnot.

To CULLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To beset; to cheat; to trick; to deceive; to impose upon.

CULMIFEROUS. adj. [culmus and fero, Latin.]

Culmiferous plants are such as have a smooth jointed stalk, and usually hollow; and at each joint the stalk is wrapped about with single, narrow, long, sharp-pointed leaves, and their seeds are contained in chaffy husks. Quincy.

There are also several sorts of grasses, both of the Cyprus and culmiferous kinds; some with broader, others with narrower leaves.

Woodward on Fossils.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom is taken from the farinaceous or mealy seeds of some culmiferous plants; as oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, panic, millet. Arbutnot.

To CULMINATE. v. n. [culmen, Lat.]

To be vertical; to be in the meridian.

Far and wide his eye commands.

For fight no obstacle found here, or shade,

But all sunshine; as when his beams at noon

Culminate from th' equator. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CULMINATION. n. f. [from culminate.]

The transit of a planet through the meridian.

CULPABILITY. n. f. [from culpable.]

Blameableness.

CULPABLE. adj. [culpabilis, Latin.]

1. Criminal.

Proceed no straiter 'gainst our uncle Glo'ster,

Than from true evidence of good esteem

He be approv'd in practice culpable. Shak. Hen. VI.

2. Guilty: with of.

These being perhaps culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends. Spenser's State of Irel.

3. Blameable; blameworthy.

The wisdom of God setteth before us in Scripture so many admirable patterns of virtue, and no one of them without somewhat noted wherein they were culpable; to the end that to Him alone it might always be acknowledged, Thou only art holy,
Thou only art just. Hooker.

All such ignorance is voluntary, and therefore culpable; forasmuch as it was in every man's power to have prevented it. South.

CULPABLENESS. n. f. [from culpable.]

Blame; guilt.

CULPABLY. adv. [from culpable.] Blame-ably; criminally.

If we perform this duty pitifully and culpably, it is not to be expected we should communicate holily.
Taylor.

CULPRIT. n. f. [About this word there is great dispute. It is used by the judge at criminal trials, who, when the prisoner declares himself not guilty, and puts himself upon his trial, answers,
Culprit, God send thee a good deliverance.
It is likely that it is a corruption of Qu'il paroît, may it so appear; the wish of the judge being that the prisoner may be found innocent.] A man arraigned before his judge.

The knight appear'd, and silence they proclaim
Then first the culprit answer'd to his name;

And, after forms of law, was last requir'd
To name the thing that woman most desir'd. Dryd.

An author is in the condition of a culprit; the public are his judges: by allowing too much, and condescending too far, he may injure his own cause; and, by pleading and asserting too boldly, he may displease the court. Prior's Preface to Solomon.

CULTER. n. f. [culter, Latin.] The iron of the plough perpendicular to the share.

It is commonly written coulter.

Her fallow lies

The dandel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,
Doth root upon; while that the culter rusts
That should deracinate such savagery.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

To CULTIVATE. v. a. [cultiver, Fr.]

1. To forward or improve the product of the earth by manual industry.

Those excellent seeds implanted in your birth, will, if cultivated, be most flourishing in production; and, as the soil is good, and no cost nor care wanting to improve it, we must entertain hopes of the richest harvest. Felton on the Classics.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

Were we but less indulgent to our faults,

And patience had to cultivate our thoughts,

Our muse would flourish. Waller.

To make man mild and sociable to man,

To cultivate the wild licentious savage

With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,

Th' embellishments of life. Addison's Cato.

CULTIVATION. n. f. [from cultivate.]

1. The art or practice of improving soils, and forwarding or meliorating vegetables.

2. Improvement in general; promotion;
melioration.

An innate light discovers the common notions of good and evil, which, by cultivation and improvement, may be advanced to higher and brighter discoveries. South.

A foundation of good sense, and a cultivation of learning, are required to give a seasoning to retirement, and make us taste the blessing. Dryden.

CULTIVATOR. n. f. [from cultivate.] One who improves, promotes, or meliorates; or endeavours to forward any vegetable product, or any thing else capable of improvement.

It has been lately complained of, by some cultivators of clover grass, that from a great quantity of the seed not any grass springs up. Boyle.

CULTURE. n. f. [cultura, Latin.]

1. The act of cultivation; the act of tilling the ground; tillage.

Give us seed unto our heart, and culture to our understanding, that there may come fruit of it.

a. Esdras, viii. 6.

These three last were slower than the ordinary wheat of itself, and this culture did rather retard than advance. Bacon.

The plough was not invented till after the deluge; the earth requiring little or no care or culture, but yielding its increase freely, and without labour and toil. Woodward.

Where grows?—Where grows it not? If vain
our toil,

We ought to blame the culture, not the soil.

Fix'd to no spot in happiness sincere. Pope.

They rose as vigorous as the sun;

Then to the culture of the willing glebe. Thomson.

2. Art of improvement and melioration.

One might wear any passion out of a family by culture, as skilful gardeners blot a colour out of a tulip that hurts its beauty. Tatler.

To CULTURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cultivate; to manure; to till. It is used by Thomson, but without authority.

CULVER. n. f. [columba, Lat. culpe, Sax.]

A pigeon. An old word.

Had he so done, he had him snatch'd away,
More light than culver in the falcon's fist. Spenser.

Whence, borne on liquid wing,

The sounding culver shoots. Thomson's Spring.

CULVERIN. n. f. [colouvrine, French.]

A species of ordnance: originally a hawk.

A whole cannon requires, for every charge, forty pounds of powder, and a bullet of sixty-four pounds; a culverin, sixteen pounds of powder, and a bullet of nineteen pounds; a demi-culverin, nine pounds of powder, and a bullet of twelve pounds.
Wilkins's Math. Magic.

Here a well polish'd mall gives us the joy
To see our prince his matchless force employ:
No sooner has he touch'd the flying ball,
But 'tis already more than half the mall;
And such a fury from his arm 't has got,
As from a smoking culverin were shot. Waller.

CULVERKEY. n. f. A flower.

Looking down the meadows I could see a girl cropping culverkeys and cowslips, to make gar-lands. Walton's Angler.

To CUMBER. v. a. [kommeren, komberen, to disturb, Dutch.]

1. To embarrass; to entangle; to obstruct.

Why asks he what avails him not in fight,

And would but cumber and retard his flight,

In which his only excellence is plac'd?

You give him death, that intercept his haste.

Dryden's Fables.

Hardly his head the plunging pilot rears, Clogg'd with his cloaths, and cumber'd with his years. Dryden.

The learning and mastery of a tongue, being uneasy and unpleasant enough in itself, should not be cumbered with any other difficulties, as is done in this way of proceeding. Locke.

2. To crowd or load with something useless.

Let it not cumber your better remembrance.

Shakespeare's Timon.

The multiplying variety of arguments, especially frivolous ones, is not only lost labour, but cumbers
the memory to no purpose. Locke.

3. To involve in difficulties and dangers;
to distress.

Domestick fury, and fierce civil strife,

Shall cumber all the parts of Italy.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

4. To busy; to distract with multiplicity of cares.

Martha was cumbered about much serving. Luke.

5. To be troublesome in any place.

Doth the bramble cumber a garden? It makes the better hedge; where, if it chances to prick
the owner, it will tear the thief. Grew's Cosmologia.

CUMBER. n. f. [komber, Dutch.] Vexation; burdensomeness; embarrassment;
obstruction; hindrance; disturbance;
distress.

By the occasion thereof I was brought to as great cumber and danger, as lightly any might escape.

Sidney.

Thus fade thy helps, and thus chy cumbers spring.

Spenser.

The greatest ships are least serviceable, go very deep in water, are of marvellous charge and fearful cumber. Raleigh.

CUMBERSOME. adj. [from cumber.]

1. Troublesome; vexatious.

Thinking it too early, as long as they had any day, to break off so pleasing a company, with going to perform a cumbersome obedience. Sidney.

2. Burdensome; embarrassing.

I was drawn in to write the first part by accident, and to write the second by some defects in the first: these are the cumbersome perquisites of authors. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. Unwieldy; unmanageable.

Very long tubes are cumbersome, and scarce to be readily managed. Newton's Opticks.

CUMBERSOMELY. adv. [from cumbersome.] In a troublesome manner; in a manner that produces hindrance and vexation.

CUMBERSOMENESS. n. f. [from cumbersome.] Encumbrance; hindrance; obstruction.

CUMBRANCE. n. f. [from cumber.]

Burden; hindrance; impediment.

Extol not riches then, the toil of fools,

The wise man's cumbrance, if not snare; more apt
To slacken virtue, and abate her edge,

Than prompt her to do aught may merit praise.
Milton.

CUMEROUS. adj. [from cumber.]

1. Troublesome; vexatious; disturbing.

A cloud

CUN

A cloud of cumbrous gnats do him molest,
All striving to infix their feeble stings,
That from their noyance he no where can rest.
Spenser.

2. Oppressive; burdensome.

Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong Life much! Beat rather, how I may be quit, Fairest and easiest, of this cumbrous charge. Milton.

They rear'd him from the ground,
And from his cumbrous arms his limbs unbound;
Then lanc'd a vein. Dryden.

Possession's load was grown so great,
He sunk beneath the cumbrous weight. Swift.

kennen, Dut. to know.]

1. Skilful; knowing; well instructed;
learned.

Schoolmasters will I keep within my house,
Fit to instruct her youth.—To cunning men
I will be very kind; and liberal
To mine own children, in good bringing up. Shak.

CUP

I do present you with a man of mine,
Cunning in musick and the mathematicks,
To instruct her fully in those sciences. Shakesp.

Wherein is he good, but to taste sack and drink it? Wherein cunning, but in craft? Wherein crafty, but in villainy? Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Send me now therefore a man cunning to work in gold and in silver, and that can skill to cut and to grave. 2 Chronicles.

When Pedro does the lute command,
She guides the cunning artist's hand. Prior.

2. Performed with skill; artful.

And over them Arachne high did lift
Her cunning web, and spread her subtle net, Enwrapped in foul smock, and clouds more black than jet. Spenser.

And there beside of marble stone was built
An altar, car'd with cunning imagery;
On which true Christians blood was often spilt,
And holy martyrs often done to die. Spenser.

Once put out thy light,
Thou cunning'st pattern of excelling nature,
I know not where is that Promethean heat
That can thy light relumine. Shakespeare's Othello.

3. Artfully deceitful; sly; designing; trickish; full of fetches and strata-gems; subtle; crafty; subdulous.

These small wares and petty points of cunning are infinite, and it were a good deed to make a list of them; for nothing doth more hurt than that cunning men pass for wise. Bacon.

Men will leave truth and misery to such as love it; they are resolved to be cunning: let others run the hazard of being sincere. Soub.

4. Acted with subtilty.

The more he protested, the more his father thought he dissembled, accounting his integrity to be but a cunning face of falsehood. Sidney.

CUNNING. n. f. [cuninge, Saxon.]

1. Artifice; deceit; siness; sleight; craft; subtilty; dissimulation; fraudulent dexterity.

What if I be not so much the poet, as even that miserable subject of his cunning, whereof you speak? Sidney.

We take cunning for a sinister or crooked wisdom; and certainly there is great difference between a cunning man and a wise man, not only in point of honesty, but in point of ability. Bacon.

Discourage cunning in a child; cunning is the ape of wisdom. Locke.

2. Art; skill; knowledge; right-hand cunning.

CUNNINGLY. adv. [from cunning.] Artfully; sily; subtly; by fraudulent connivance; craftily.

Amongst other crimes of this nature, there was diligent enquiry made of such as had raised and disperst a bruit and rumour, a little before the field fought, that the rebels had the day, and that the king's army was overthrown, and the king sied; whereby it was supposed, that many succours were cunningly put off and kept back. Bacon's Henry VII.

I must meet my danger, and destroy him first;
But cunningly and closely. Denham's Sophy.

When stock is high, they come between,
Making by second hand their offers;
Then cunningly retire unseen,
With each a million in his coffers. Swift.

CUNNINGMAN. n. f. [cunning and man.]

A man who pretends to tell fortunes, or teach how to recover stolen goods.

He sent him for a strong detachment
Of beadle, constable, and watchmen,
T' attack the cunningman, for plunder
Committed falsely on his lumber. Hudibras.

The wages of their virtue, and all foes
The cups of their deservings. Shakesp. King Lear.
Will 't please your lordship, drink a cup of sack?
Shakespeare.

They that never had the use
Of the grape's surprising juice,
To the first delicious cup
All their reason render up. Waller.

The best, the dearest fav'rite of the sky
Must taste that cup; for man is born to die.
Pope's Odyssey.

3. [In the plural.] Social entertainment; merry bout.

Then shall our names,
Familiar in their mouth as household words,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd.
Shakespeare's Henry V.

Let us suppose that I were reasoning, as one friend with another, by the fireside, or in our cups, without care, without any great affection to either party. Knolles.

It was near a miracle to see an old man silent, since talking is the disease of age; but, amongst cups, makes fully a wonder. Ben Jonson's Discreet.
Thence from cups to civil broils! Milton.

Amidst his cups with fainting shiv'ring seiz'd,
His limbs disjointed, and all o'er diseas'd,
His hand refuses to sustain the bowl.
Dryden's Persius.

4. Any thing hollow like a cup: as, the husk of an acorn; the bell of a flower.

A pyrites of the same colour and shape placed in the cavity of another of an hemispherick figure, in much the same manner as an acorn in its cup.
Woodward on Fossils.

5. Cup and Can. Familiar companions. The can is the large vessel out of which the cup is filled, and to which it is a constant associate.

You boasting tell us where you din'd,
And how his lordship was so kind;
Swear he 's a most facetious man;
That you and he are cup and can:
You travel with a heavy load,
And quite mistake preferment's road. Swift.

6. [couper, French, to scarify.] A glass to draw the blood in scarification.

Hippocrates tells you, that in applying of cups, the scarification ought to be made with crooked instruments. Arbutnot.

TO CUP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with cups. This sense is obsolete.

Plumpy Bacchus, with pink eyne,
In thy vats our cares be drown'd;

2. [couper, to cut, Fr.] To fix a glass bell or cucurbite upon the skin, to draw the blood in scarification.

The clotted blood lies heavy on his heart,
Corrupts, and there remains in spite of art:
Nor breathing veins nor cupping will prevail;
All outward remedies and inward fail. Dryd. Fab.

You have quartered all the foul language upon me, that could be raked out of the air of Billings-gate, without knowing who I am, or whether I deserve to be cupped and scarified at this rate.

Spektator,
Blistering,

Blistering, cupping, and bleeding, are seldom of use but to the idle and intemperate.

Addison's Spectator.

Him the dam'd doctors and his friends immur'd;

They blas'd, they cupp'd, they purg'd; in short they cur'd.

Pope.

CUPBEARER. n. f.

physician.

He is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies: If you should fight, you go against the bair of your professions. Shakespeare.

The indexterity and worse success of the most famous of our consumption curers, do evidently demonstrate their dimness in beholding its causes.

Harvey on Consumptions.

CUR'FEW. n. f. [couvre feu, French.]

1. An evening-peal, by which the Con-querer willed that every man should rake up his fire, and put out his light; so that in many places, at this day, where a bell is customarily rung towards bedtime, it is said to ring curfew. Coowell.

You, whose pastime

Is to make midnight mushrooms, that rejoice
To hear the solemn curfew. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Oft on a plat of rising ground
I hear the far off curfew sound,
Over some wide-water'd shore,
Swinging slow with sullen roar. Milton.

2. A cover for a fire; a fireplate.

But now for pans, pots, curfews, counters, and the like, the beauty will not be so much respected, so as the compound stuff is like to pass. Bacon.

1. Inquisitiveness; inclination to enquiry.

2. Nicety; delicacy.

When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, they mocked thee for too much curio'sity; in thy rage thou knowest none, but art despised for the contrary. Shakespeare's Timon.

3. Accuracy; exactness.

Qualities are so weighed, that curio'sity in neither can make choice of either's moiety. Shak. K. Lear.
Our senses, however armed or assisted, are too gross to discern the curio'sity of the workmanship of nature. Ray.

4. An act of curiosity; nice experiment.

There hath been practis'd also a curio'sity, to set a tree upon the north side of a wall, and, at a little height, to draw it through the wall, and spread it upon the south side; conceiving that the root and lower part of the stock should enjoy the freshness of the shade, and the upper boughs and fruit, the comfort of the sun; but it sort'd not.

Bacon's Natural History.

5. An object of curiosity; rarity.

We took a ramble together to see the curio'sities of this great town. Addison's Freeholder.

CURIOUS. adj. [curiosus, Latin.]

1. Inquisitive; desirous of information; addicted to enquiry.

Be not curious in unnecessary matters; for more things are shewn unto thee than men understand.

Eccles. iii. 23.

Even then to them the spirit of lyes suggests
That they were blind, because they saw not ill;
And breath'd into their uncorrupted breasts
A curious wish, which did corrupt their will. Davies.

If any one too curious should enquire
After a victory which we disdain,

Then let him know the Belgians did retire
Before the patron saint of injur'd Spain. Dryden.

Reader, if any curious stay
To ask my hated name,

Tell them, the grave that hides my clay
Conceals me from my shame. Wesley.

2. Attentive to; diligent about: sometimes with after.

It is pity a gentleman so very curious after things that were elegant and beautiful, should not have been as curious as to their origin, their uses, and their natural history. Woodward.

1. Inquisitively; attentively; studiously.

He looked very curiously upon himself, sometimes fetching a little skip, as if he said his strength had not yet forsaken him. Sidney.

At first I thought there had been no light reflected from the water in that place; but observing it more curiously, I saw within it several smaller round spots, which appeared much blacker and darker than the rest. Newton's Opticks.

2. Elegantly; neatly.

Nor is it the having of wheels and springs, tho' never so curiously wrought, and artificially set, but the winding of them up, that must give motion to the watch. South.

3. Artfully; exactly.

4. Captiously.

CURL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A ringlet of hair.

She apparelled herself like a page, cutting off her hair, leaving nothing but the short curls to cover that noble head. Sidney.

Just as in act he stood, in clouds enshrin'd,
Her hand she fasten'd on his hair behind,
Then backward by his yellow curls she drew;
To him, and him alone, confess'd in view.

Dryden's Fables.

2. Undulation; wave; sinuosity; flexure.

Thus it happens, if the glass of the prisms be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plain and well polished, without those numberless waves or curls, which usually arise from the sand holes.

Newton's Opticks.

TO CURL. v. a. [krollen, Dutch; cynpan, Sax. krille, Dan.]

1. To turn the hair in ringlets.

What hast thou been?—

—A serving man, proud in heart and mind, that curled my hair, wore gloves in my cap, served the lust of my mistress's heart; and did the act of darkness with her. Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. To writhe; to twist.

If she first meet the curled Antony,
He'll make demand of her a kiss. Shakespeare.
They, up the trees

Climbing, fat thicker than the snaky locks
That curl'd Megzra. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. To raise in waves, undulations, or sinu-osities.

The visitation of the winds,
Who take the ruffian billows by the top,
Curling their monstrous heads.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Seas would be pools, without the brushing air
To curl the waves. Dryden's Fables.

TO CURL. v. n.

1. To shrink into ringlets.

Those slender aerial bodies are separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibility and weight, would flag or curl. Boyle.

2. To rise in undulations.

To every nobler portion of the town
The curling billows rowl their restless tide;
In parties now they straggle up and down,
As armies, unoppos'd, for prey divide. Dryden.
While curling smoke from village tops are seen.

3. To

5. To twist itself.

Then round her slender waist he curl'd,
And stamp'd an image of himself, a sov'reign of the world. Dryden's Fables.

CURLER. n. f. [curlier, Fr. arguata,
Lat.]

1. A kind of water-fowl, with a large beak, of a grey colour, with red and black spots.

Among birds we reckon cressets, curlews, and puffins. Curlew.

2. A bird larger than a partridge, with longer legs. It runs very swiftly, and frequents the corn-fields in Spain, in Sicily, and sometimes in France.

Trochus.

CURMUDGEON. n. f. [It is a vitious manner of pronouncing cœur méchant, Fr. An unknown correspondent.] An avaricious churlish fellow; a miser; a niggard; a churl; a griper.

And when he has it in his claws,
He'll not be hide-bound to the cause;
Nor shalt thou find him a curmudgeon,
If thou dispatch it without grudging. Hudibras.

A man's way of living is commended, because he will give any rate for it; and a man will give any rate rather than pass for a poor wretch, or a penurious curmudgeon. Locke.

CURMUDGEONLY. adj. [from curmudgeon.] Avaricious; covetous; churlish;
niggardly.

In a country where he that killed a hog invited the neighbourhood, a curmudgeonly fellow advised with his companions how he might save the charge. L'Estrange.

CURRENT. n. f. [ribes, Lat.]

1. The tree hath no prickles; the leaves are large: the flower consists of five leaves, placed in form of a rose: the ovary, which arises from the centre of the flowercup, becomes a globular fruit, produced in bunches.

2. A small dried grape: properly written corinth.

They butter'd currants on fat veal bestow'd,
And rumps of beef with virgin honey stew'd;
Insipid taste, old friend, to them who Paris know, Where rocombole, shallot, and the rank garlick grow. King.

CURRENCY. n. f. [from current.]

1. Circulation; power of passing from hand to hand.

The currency of those half-pence would, in the universal opinion of our people, be utterly destructive to this kingdom. Swift.

2. General reception: as, the report had a long currency.

3. Fluency; readiness of utterance; easiness of pronunciation.

4. Continuance; constant flow; uninterrupted course.

The currency of time to establish a custom, ought to be with a continuando from the beginning to the end of the term prescribed. Ayliffe's Paragon.

5. General esteem; the rate at which any thing is vulgarly valued.

He that thinketh Spain to be some great overmatch for this estate, assisted as it is, and may be,
is no good mintman, but takes greatness of kingdoms according to their bulk and currency, and not after intrinsic value. Baron.

6. The papers stamped in the English colonies by authority, and passing for money.

CURRENT. adj. [current, Latin.]

1. Circulatory; passing from hand to hand.

Shekels of silver, current money with the merchant. Gen.

That there was current money in Abraham's time, is past doubt, though it is not sure that it was stamped; for he is said to be rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold. Arbutnot.

2. Generally received; uncontradicted; authoritative.

Many strange bruits are received for current.

Sidney.

Because such as openly reprove supposed disorders of state are taken for principal friends to the common benefit of all, under this fair and plausible colour, whatsoever they utter passeth for good and current. Hooker.

I have collected the facts, with all possible impartiality, from the current histories of those times.
Swift.

3. Common; general.

They have been trained up from their infancy in one set of notions, without ever hearing or knowing what other opinions are current among mankind. Watts.

About three months ago we had a current report of the king of France's death. Addison.

4. Popular; such as is established by vulgar estimation.

We are also to consider the difference between worth and merit, strictly taken: that is a man's intrinsic, this his current, value; which is less or more, as men have occasion for him. Grew's Cosmologia.

5. Fashionable; popular.

Of leaving what is natural and fit,
The current folly proves our ready wit;
And authors think their reputation safe,
Which lives as long as fools are pleas'd to laugh.
Pope.

6. Passable; such as may be allowed or admitted.

Fouler than heart can think thee, thou canst make
No excuse current, but to hang thyself.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

7. What is now passing; what is at present in its course: as, the current year.

CURRENT. n. f.

1. A running stream.

The current, that with gentle murmur glides,
Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
But his fair course is not hindered;
He makes sweet music with th' enamell'd stones. Shakespeare.

These inequalities will vanish in one place, and presently appear in another, and seem perfectly to move like waves, succeeding and destroying one another; save that their motion oftentimes seems to be quickest, as if in that vast sea they were carried on by a current, or at least by a tide. Boyle.

Heav'n her Eridanus no more shall boast,
Whose fame in thine, like lesser current, 's lost;
Thy nobler streams shall visit Jove's abodes,
To shine among the stars, and bathe the gods. Denham.

Not fabled Po more swells the poet's lays,
While through the sky his shining current strays. Pope.

2. [In navigation.] Currents are certain progressive motions of the water of the sea in several places, either quite down to the bottom, or to a certain determinate depth; by which a ship may happen to be carried more swiftly, or retarded in her course, according to the direction of the current, with or against the way of the ship. Harris.

3. Course; progression.

The castle of Cadmus was taken, and Thebes invested by Pheidias the Lacedemonian insidiously; which drew on a surprize of the castle, a recovery of the town, and a current of the war, even into the walls of Sparta. Bacon.

CURRENTLY. adv. [from current.]

1. In a constant motion.

2. Without opposition.

The very cause which maketh the simple and ignorant to think they even see how the word of God runneth currently on your side, is, that their minds are forestalled, and their conceits perverted beforehand. Hooker, Preface.

3. Popularly; fashionably; generally.

4. Without ceasing.

CURRENTNESS. n. f. [from current.]

1. Circulation.

2. General reception.

3. Easiness of pronunciation.

When substantialness combineth with delightfulness, and currentness with stayedness, how can the language sound other than most full of sweetness? Camden's Remains.

CURRIER. n. f. [coriarius, Latin.] One who dresses and pares leather for those who make shoes, or other things.

A currier bought a bear-skin of a huntsman, and laid him down ready money for it. L'Estrange.

Warn'd by frequent ills, the way they found
To lodge their loathsome carrion under ground;
For useless to the currier were their hides,
Nor could their tainted flesh with ocean tides
Be freed from filth. Dryden's Virgil.

CURRISH. adj. [from car.] Having the qualities of a degenerate dog; brutal;
sour; quarrelsome; malignant; churlish; uncivil; untractable; impracticable.

Sweet speaking oft a currish heart reclaims. Sidney.

No care of justice, nor no rule of reason,
Did thenceforth ever enter in his mind,
But cruelty, the sign of currish kind. Hubb. Tale.

In fashion's wayward, and in love unkind;
For Cupid deigns not wound a currish mind. Baird.
I would she were in heaven, so she could Entreat some power to change this currish Jew. Shakespeare.

She says your dog was a cur; and tells you, cur-rish thanks is good enough for such a present. Shakespeare.

TO CURRY. v. a. [corium, leather, Lat.]

1. To dress leather, by beating and rubbing it.

2. To beat; to drub; to thresh; to chaffice.

A deep design in't to divide
The well-affected that confide;
By setting brother against brother,
A claw and curry one another. Hudibras.

I may expect her to take care of her family, and curry her hide in case of refusal. Addison's Spectator.

3. To rub a horse with a scratching instrument, so as to smooth his coat, and promote his flesh.

Frictions make the parts more fleshy and full;
as we see both in men, and in the currying of horses: the cause is, for that they draw a greater quantity of spirits and blood to the parts. Bacon.

4. To scratch in kindness; to rub down with flattery; to tickle.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men; if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow. Shakespeare.

5. TO CURRY FAVOUR. To become a favourite by petty officiousness, slight kindnesses, or flattery.

He judg'd them still over-ably to fawn upon the heathens, and to curry favour with infidels. Hooker.

This humour succeeded so with the puppy, that an ass would go the same way to work to curry favour for himself. L'Estrange.

CURRY COME. n. f. [from curry and comb.]

An iron instrument used for currying or cleaning horses.

He has a clearer idea from a little print than from a long definition; and so he would have of strigil and sistrum, if, instead of a currycomb and cymbal, he could see stamped in the margin small pictures of these instruments. Locke.

To CURSE. v. a. [currian, Saxon.]

1. To wish evil to; to execrate; to devote.

Curse me this people; for they are too mighty for me. Numbers.

After Solymán had looked upon the dead body, and bitterly curst the same, he caused a great weight to be tied unto it, and so cast into the sea. Knolles.

What, yet again! the third time hast thou curst me:

This imprecation was for Laius' death, And thou hast wished me like him. Dry. and Lxx.

2. To mischief; to afflict; to torment.

On impious realms and barbarous kings impose Thy plagues, and curse 'em with such sons as those. Pope.

To CURSE. v. n. To imprecate; to deny or affirm with imprecation of divine vengeance.

The silver about which thou curstest, and speakest of also in my ears, behold the silver is with me. Jud. xvi. 2.

CURSE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Malediction; wish of evil to another.

Neither have I suffered my mouth to sin, by wishing a curse to his soul. Job.

I never went from your lordship but with a longing to return, or without a hearty curse to him who invented ceremonies, and put me on the necessity of withdrawing. Dryden.

2. Affliction; torment; vexation.

Curse on the stripling! how he aces his fire! Ambitiously sententious! Addison's Cato.

CURSED. participial adj. [from curse.]

1. Deserving a curse; hateful; detestable; abominable; wicked.

Merciful pow'rs!

Refrain in me the curst thoughts that nature Gives way to in repose. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. Unholy; unsanctified; blasted by a curse.

Come, lady, while heav'n lends us grace, Let us fly this curst place, Lest the forebier us enice With some other new device; Not a waste or needlets found, Till we come to holier ground. Milton.

3. Vexations; troublesome.

This curst quarrel be no more renew'd; Be, as becomes a wife, obedient still, Though griev'd, yet subject to her husband's will. Dryden.

One day, I think, in Paradise he liv'd; Destin'd the next his journey to pursue, Where wounding thorns and curst thistles grew. Prior.

CURSEDLY. adv. [from curst.] Miserably; shamefully; a low cant word.

Satisfaction and restitution lies so *curst*ly hard on the glazards of our publicans. L'Estrange.

Sure this is a nation that is *curst*ly afraid of being over-run with too much politeness, and cannot regain one great genius but at the expense of another. Pope.

CURSEDNESS. n. f. [from curst.] The state of being under a curse.

CURSHIP. n. f. [from cur.] Dogship; meanness; scoundrelship.

How durst he, I say, oppose thy curship, 'Gainst arms, authority, and worship? Hudibras.

CURSITOR. n. f. [Latin.] An officer or clerk belonging to the Chancery, that makes out original writs. They are called clerks of course, in the oath of the clerks of Chancery. Of these there are twenty-four in number, which have certain shires allotted to each of them, into which they make out such original writs as are required. They are a corporation among themselves.

VOL. I.

Cowell.

Then is the recognition and value, signed with the handwriting of that justice, carried by the curfitor in Chancery for that shire where those lands do lie, and by him is a writ of covenant thereupon drawn, and ingrossed in parchment. Bacon.

CURSORY. adj. [from curfus, Latin.]

Curfory; hasty; careless. A word, I believe, only found in the following line.

I have but with a curfory eye O'erglanc'd the articles. Shakespeare's Henry V.

CURSORYLY. adv. [from curfory.] Hastily; without care; without solicitous attention.

This power, and no other, Luther disowns, as any one that views the place but *curfory*ly must needs see. Atterbury.

CURSORYNESS. n. f. [from curfory.] Slight attention.

CURSORY. adj. [from curforius, Latin.]

Hasty; quick; inattentive; careless.

The first, upon a curfory and superficial view, appeared like the head of another man. Addison.

CURST. adj. Froward; peevish; malignant; mischievous; malicious; snarling.

Mr. Mason, after his manner, was very merry with both parties; pleasantly playing both with the shrewd touches of many curst boys, and with the small discretion of many lewd schoolmasters. Ajcham's Schoolmaster.

Curst crows have short horns. Proverb.

I pray you, though you mock me, gentlemen, Let her not hurt me: I was never curst; I have no gift at all in shrewishness; I am a right maid, for my cowardice; Let her not strike me. Shak. Midf. Night's Dream.

I'll go see if the bear be gone from the gentleman, and how much he hath eaten: they are never curst but when they are hungry. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Her only fault; and that is fault enough, Is, that she is intolerably curst, And shrewd and froward, so beyond all measure, That, were my state far worse than it is, I would not wed her for a mine of gold. Shakespeare.

When I dissuaded him from his intent, And found him pight to do it with curst speech, I threaten'd to discover him. Shak. King Lear.

And though his mind Be ne'er so curst, his tongue is kind. Cressbon.

CURSTNESS. n. f. [from curst.] Peevishness; frowardness; malignity.

Then, noble parmes, Touch you the sourest points with sweetest terms, Nor curstness grow to the matter. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

Her mouth she writh'd, her forehead taught to frown,

Her eyes to sparkle sites to love unknown; Her fallow cheeks her envious mind did shew, And ev'ry feature spoke aloud the curstness of a shrew. Dryden.

CURT. adj. [from curtus, Latin.] Short.

To CURTAIL. v. a. [curto, Latin.] It was anciently written curtal, which perhaps is more proper; but dogs that had their tails cut being called curtal dogs, the word was vulgarly conceived to mean originally to cut the tail, and was in time written according to that notion.

1. To cut off; to cut short; to shorten.

I, that am curtail'd of all fair proportion, Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time Into this breathing world. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Then why should we ourselves abridge, And curtail our own privilege? Hudibras.

Scribblers send us over their trash in prose and verse, with abominable curtailings and quaint modernisms. Swift.

This general employ, and expence of their time, would as assuredly curtail and retrench the ordinary means of knowledge and erudition, as it would shorten the opportunities of vice. Woodward.

Perhaps this humour of speaking no more than we must, has so miserably curtailed some of our words; and, in familiar writings and conversations, they often lose all but their first syllables.

Addison's Spectator.

2. It has of before the thing cut off.

The count assured the court, that Fact his antagonist had taken a wrong name, having curtailed it of three letters; for that his name was not Fact, but Faction. Addison.

CURTAL Dog. n. f. A dog lawed, or mutilated according to the forest laws, whose tail is cut off, and who is therefore hindered in coursing. Perhaps this word may be the original of cur.

I, amazed, ran from her as a witch; and I think if my breast had not been made of faith, and my heart of steel, she had transformed me to a curtail dog, and made me turn i' th' wheel.

Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

CURTAIN. n. f. [cortina, Latin.]

1. A cloth contracted or expanded at pleasure, to admit or exclude the light; to conceal or discover any thing; to shade a bed; to darken a room.

Their curtains ought to be kept open, so as to renew the air. Arbutnot on Diet.

Sol through white curtains shot a tim'rous ray, And op'd those eyes that must eclipse the day. Pope.

Thy hand, great Dulcenis! less the curtain fall, And universal darkness buries all. Pope.

2. To draw the CURTAIN. To close it, so as to shut out the light, or conceal the object.

I vault draw a curtain before the work, for a while, and keep your patience a live in suspense.

Burnet's Theory.

Once more I write to you, and this once will be the last: the curtain will soon be drawn between my friend and me, and nothing left but to wish you a long good night. Pope.

3. To open it, so as to discern the object.

So soon as the all-cheering sun Should in the farthest east begin to draw The shady curtain from Aurora's bed.

Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Let them sleep, let them sleep on, Till this stormy night be gone, And th' eternal morrow dawn; Then the curtain will be drawn. Cressbon.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the wall or rampart that lies between two bastions.

Military Dict.

The governour, not discouraged, suddenly of timber and boards raised up a curtain twelve foot high, at the back of his soldiers. Knolles.

CURTAIN-LECTURE. n. f. [from curtain and lecture.] A reproof given by a wife to her husband in bed.

What endless brawls by wives are bred! The curtain-lecture makes a mournful bed.

Dryden's Juvenal.

She ought to exert the authority of the curtain-lecture, and, if she finds him of a rebellious disposition, to tame him. Addison.

To CURTAIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose or accommodate with curtains.

Now o'er one half the world Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse The curtain'd sleep. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The wand'ring prince and Dido, When with a happy storm they were surpris'd, And curtain'd with a counsel-keeping cave. Shak.

But,

But, in her temple's last recess inclod'd,
On Dolours' lap th' anointed head repos'd:
Him close the curtain'd round with vapours blue,
And soft besprinkled with cimmerian dew. Pope.

CURTATE Distance. n. f. [In astronomy.] The distance of a planet's place from the sun, reduced to the ecliptick.

CURTATION. n. f. [from curto, to shorten, Latin.] The interval between a planet's distance from the sun and the curtate distance. Chambers.

CURVATURE. n. f. [from curve.] Crookedness; inflexion; manner of bending.

It is bent after the manner of the catenarian curve, by which it obtains that curvature that is safest for the included marrow.

Cibola's Philosophical Principles.

Flaccid it was beyond the activity of the muscle, and curvature of the ossicles, to give it a due tension. Holder.

CURVE. adj. [from curvus, Latin.] Crooked; bent; inflected; not straight.

Unless an intrinsic principle of gravity or attraction may make it describe a curve line about the attracting body. Bentley.

CURVE. n. f. Any thing bent; a flexure or crookedness of any particular form.

And as you lead it round, in artful curve,
With eye intentive mark the springing game. Thomson.

To CURVE. v. a. [from curvo, Latin.] To bend; to crook; to inflect.

And the tongue is drawn back and curved.

Holder.

To CURVE'T. v. n. [from corvettare, Italian.]

1. To leap; to bound.

Cry holla! to thy tongue, I pry'thee: it curve'ts unseasonably. Shakespeare's As you like it.

Himself he on an earwig set,
Yet scarce he on his back could get,
So oft and high he did curve't,
Ere he himself could settle. Drayt. Nymphid.
Seiz'd with unwonted pain, surpris'd with fright,
The wounded steed curve'ts; and, rais'd upright,
Lights on his feet before: his hoofs behind
Spring up in air aloft, and lash the wind. Dryden's Æneid.

2. To frisk; to be licentious.

CURVE'T. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A leap; a bound.

2. A frolick; a prank.

CURVILINEAR. adj. [from curvus and linea, Lat.]

1. Consisting of a crooked line.

The impulse continually draws the celestial body from its rectilinear motion, and forces it into a curvilinear orbit; so that it must be repeated every minute of time. Cibola.

2. Composed of crooked lines.

CURVITY. n. f. [from curve.] Crookedness.

The joined ends of that bone and the incus receding, make a more acute angle at that joint, and give a greater curvity to the posture of the ossicles. Holder on Speech.

CUSHION. n. f. [from kussen, Dutch; coussin, French.] A pillow for the seat; a soft pad placed upon a chair.

Call Claudius, and some other of my men;
I'll have them sleep on cushions in my tent.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

If you are learn'd,
Be not as common fools; if you are not,
Let them have cushions by you. Shak. Coriolanus.

But, ere they sat, officious Baucis lays
Two cushions stuff'd with straw, the seat to raise;
Coarse, but the best she had. Dryden's Fables.

An eastern king put a judge to death for an iniquitous sentence; and ordered his hide to be stuffed into a cushion, and placed upon the tribunal, for the son to sit on. Swift.

CUSHIONED. adj. [from cushion.] Seated on a cushion; supported by cushions.

Many, who are cushioned upon thrones, would have remained in obscurity. Dissertation on Parties.

CUSP. n. f. [from cuspis, Latin.] A term used to express the points or horns of the moon, or other luminary. Harris.

CUSPATED. } adj. [from cuspis, Lat.]

CUSPIDATED. } A word expressing the leaves of a flower ending in a point. Quincy.

CUSTARD. n. f. [from custard, Welsh.] A kind of sweetmeat made by boiling eggs with milk and sugar till the whole thickens into a mass. It is a food much used in city feasts.

He cram'd them, till their guts did ache,
With cawle, custard, and plumb cake. Hudibras.

Now may'rs and shrieves all hush'd and satiate lay;
Yet eat, in dreams, the custard of the day. Pope.

CUSTODY. n. f. [from custodia, Latin.]

1. Imprisonment; restraint of liberty.

The council remonstrated unto queen Elizabeth the conspiracies against her life, and therefore they advised her, that she should go less abroad weakly attended; but the queen answered, she had rather be dead than put in custody. Bacon.

For us enslav'd, is custody severe,
And stripes, and arbitrary punishment Insisted? Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Care; guardianship; charge.

Under the custody and charge of the sons of Merari, shall be the boards of the tabernacle. Numb. iii. 36.

We being strangers here, how dar'st thou trust
So great a charge from thine own custody? Shak.
An offence it were, rashly to depart out of the city committed to their custody. Knolles.

There is generally but one coin stamp'd upon the occasion, which is made a present to the person who is celebrated on it: by this means the whole fame is in his own custody. Addison.

3. Defence; preservation; security.

There was prepared a fleet of thirty ships for the custody of the narrow seas. Bacon.

CUSTOM. n. f. [from coutume, French.]

1. Habit; habitual practice.

Blood and destruction shall be so in use,
That mothers shall but smile when they behold
Their infants quarter'd by the hands of war;
All pity choak'd with custom of fell deeds. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Custom, a greater power than nature, seldom fails to make them worship. Locke.

2. Fashion; common way of acting.

And the priest's custom with the people was, that when any man offered sacrifice, the priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh-hook of three teeth in his hands. 1 Sam. ii.

3. Established manner.

According to the custom of the priest's office, his lot was to burn incense when he went into the temple of the Lord. Luke i.

4. Practice of buying of certain persons.

You say he is assiduous in his calling, and is he not grown rich by it? Let him have your custom, but not your votes. Addison.

5. Application from buyers: as, this trader has good custom.

6. [In law.] A law or right not written, which, being established by long use, and the consent of our ancestors, has been, and is daily, practised. We cannot say that this or that is a custom, except we can justify that it hath continued so one hundred years; yet, because that is hard to prove, it is enough for the proof of a custom, if two or more can depose that they heard their fathers say, that it was a custom all their time; and that their fathers heard their fathers also say, that it was likewise a custom in their time. If it is to be proved by record, the continuance of a hundred years will serve. Custom is either general or particular: general, that which is current through England; particular, is that which belongs to this or that county; as gavelkind to Kent, or this or that lordship, city, or town. Custom differs from prescription; for custom is common to more, and prescription is particular to this or that man: prescription may be for a far shorter time than custom. Corwell.

7. Tribute; tax paid for goods imported or exported.

The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain, as be the escheats and forfeitures, the customs, butlerage, and imposts. Bacon.

Those commodities may be dispersed, after having paid the customs in England. Temple.

Customs to steal is such a trivial thing,
That 'tis their charter to defraud their king. Dryden.

Strabo tells you, that Britain bore heavy taxes, especially the customs on the importation of the Gallick trade. Arbutnot.

H. ker.

7. A lot made by cutting a stick.

My lady Zelmane and my daughter Mopsa may draw cuts, and the shortest cut speak first.

Sidney.

A man may as reasonably draw cuts for his tenets, and regulate his persuasion by the cast of a die.

Locke.

8. A near passage, by which some angle is cut off.

The ignorant took heart to enter upon this great calling, and instead of their cutting their way to it through the knowledge of the tongues, the fathers, and councils, they have taken another and a shorter cut.

South.

There is a shorter cut, an easier passage.

Decay of Piety.

The evidence of my sense is simple and immediate, and therefore I have but a shorter cut thereby to the assent to the truth of the things so evidenced.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

But the gentleman would needs see me part of my way, and carry me a short cut through his own ground, which saved me half a mile's riding.

Swift's Examiner.

9. A picture cut or carved upon a stamp of wood or copper, and impressed from it.

In this form, according to his description, he is set forth in the prints or cuts of martyrs by Cavalierius.

Brown.

It is, I believe, used improperly by Addison.

Madam Dacier, from some old cuts of Terence, fancies that the larva or persona of the Roman actors was not only a vizard for the face, but had false hair to it.

Addison on Italy.

10. The stamp on which a picture is carved, and by which it is impressed.

11. The act or practice of dividing a pack of cards.

How can the muse her aid impart,

Unskill'd in all the terms of art?

Or in harmonious numbers put

The deal, the shuffle, and the cut?

Swift.

12. Fashion; form; shape; manner of cutting into shape.

Their clothes are after such a Pagan cut too, That, sure, they've worn out Christendom.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

His tawny beard was th' equal grace

Both of his wisdom and his face;

In cut and dye so like a tile,

A sudden view it would beguile.

Hudibras.

They were so familiarly acquainted with him, as to know the very cut of his beard.

Stirling Fleet.

Children love breeches, not for their cut or case, but because the having them is a mark or step towards manhood.

Locke.

A third desires you to observe well the toga on such a reverse, and asks you whether you can in conscience believe the sleeve of it to be of the true Roman cut.

Addison.

Sometimes an old fellow shall wear this or that sort of cut in his clothes with great integrity.

Addison's Spectator.

Wilt thou buy there some high heads of the newest cut for my daughter?

Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

13. It seems anciently to have signified a fool or cully. To cut still signifies to cheat, in low language.

Send her money, knight: if thou hast her not in the end, call me cut.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

14. CUT and long tail. A proverbial expression for men of all kinds. It is borrowed from dogs.

He will maintain you like a gentlewoman. — Ay, that I will, come cut and long tail, under the degree of a squire.

Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.

At quintin he,

In honour of this bridegroom,

Hath challeng'd either wide cuntry:

Come cut and long tail; for there be

Six bachelors as bold as he.

Ben Jonson's Underwood.

CUTANEOUS. adj. [from cutis, Latin.] Relating to the skin.

This serous, nutritious mass is more readily circulated into the cutaneous or remotest parts of the body.

Floyer on Humours.

Some sorts of cutaneous eruptions are occasioned by seething much on acid unripe fruits and farinaceous substances.

Arbutnot.

CUTICLE. n. f. [cuticula, Latin.]

1. The first and outermost covering of the body, commonly called the scarf-skin. This is that soft skin which rises in a blister upon any burning, or the application of a blistering plaister. It sticks close to the surface of the true skin, to which it is also tied by the vessels which nourish it, though they are so small as not to be seen. When the scarf-skin is examined with a microscope, it appears to be made up of several lays of exceeding small scales.

Quincy.

In each of the very fingers there are bones and gristles, and ligaments and membranes, and muscles and tendons, and nerves and arteries, and veins and skin, and cuticle and nail.

Bentley's Sermons.

2. A thin skin formed on the surface of any liquor.

When any saline liquor is evaporated to cuticle, and let cool, the salt concretes in regular figures: which argues that the particles of the salt, before they concreted, floated in the liquor at equal distances in rank and file.

Newton's Opticks.

CUTICULAR. adj. [from cutis, Latin.] Belonging to the skin.

CUTH, signifies knowledge or skill. So Cuthwin is a knowing conqueror; Cuthred, a knowing counsellor; Cuthbert, famous for skill. Much of the same nature are Sophocles and Sophianus.

Gibson's Camden.

CUTLASS. n. f. [coutelas, French.] This word is written sometimes cutlase, sometimes cutleax; in Shakespeare, cutleaxe; and in Pope, cutlass. A broad cutting sword: the word is much in use among the seamen.

Were't not better

That I did suit me all points like a man?

A gallant cutleaxe upon my thigh,

A boar-spear in my hand.

Shakep. As you like it.

To the lodgments of his herd he run,

Where the fat porkers slept beneath the sun;

Of two his cutlass launch'd the spouting blood, These quarter'd, sing'd, and fix'd on forks of wood.

Pope.

CUTLER. n. f. [coutelier, French.] One who makes or sells knives.

A paucity ring

That she did give, whose poetry was

For all the world like cutlers poetry

Upon a knife; love me, and leave me not.

Shak.

In a bye cutler's shop he bought a tenpenny knife: so cheap was the instrument of this great attempt.

Waller.

He chose no other instrument than an ordinary knife, which he bought of a common cutler.

Clarendon.

CUTPURSE. n. f. [cut and purse.] One who steals by the method of cutting purses: a common practice when men wore their purses at their girdles, as was once the custom. A thief; a robber.

To have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a cutpurse.

Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

A vice of kings,

A cutpurse of the empire and the rule,

That from a shelf the precious diadem stole,

And put it in his pocket.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Was there no felony, no bawd,

Cutpurse, nor burglary abroad?

Hudibras.

If we could imagine a whole nation to be cut-purses and robbers, would there then be kept that square dealing and equity in such a monstrous den of thieves?

Bentley's Sermons.

CUTTER. n. f. [from cut.]

1. An agent or instrument that cuts any thing.

2. A nimble boat that cuts the water.

3. [Incisors.] The teeth that cut the meat.

The molares, or grinders, are behind, nearest the centre of motion, because there is a greater strength or force required to chew the meat than to bite a piece; and the cutters before, that they may be ready to cut off a morsel from any solid food, to be transmitted to the grinders.

Ray on the Creation.

4. An officer in the Exchequer that provides wood for the tallies, and cuts the sum paid upon them; and then casts the same into the court to be written upon.

Cowell.

CUT-THROAT. n. f. [cut and throat.] A ruffian; a murderer; a butcher of men; an assassin.

Will you then suffer these robbers, cut-throats, base people, gathered out of all the corners of Christendom, to waste your countries, spoil your cities, murder your people, and trouble all your seas?

Knolles.

Perhaps the cut-throat may rather take his copy from the Parisian massacre, one of the horrid instances of barbarous inhumanity that ever was known.

South.

The ruffian robbers by no justice aw'd, And unpaid cut-throat soldiers, are abroad; Those venal souls, who, harden'd in each ill, To save complaints and prosecution, kill.

Dryden's Juvenal.

CUT-THROAT. adj. Cruel; inhuman; barbarous.

If to take above fifty in the hundred be extremity, this in truth can be none other than cut-throat and abominable dealing.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

CUTTING. n. f. [from cut.] A piece cut off; a chop.

The burning of the cuttings of vines, and casting them upon land, doth much good.

Bacon's Natural History.

Many are propagated above ground by slips or cuttings.

Ray.

CUTTLE.

CUTTLE. n. f. [sepia.] A fish, which when he is pursued by a fish of prey, throws out a black liquor, by which he darkens the water and escapes.

It is somewhat strange, that the blood of all birds, and beasts, and fishes, should be of a red colour, and only the blood of the cuttle should be as black as ink. Bacon.

He that uses many words for the explaining any subject, doth, like the cuttle fish, hide himself for the most part in his own ink. Ray on the Creation.

CUTTLE. n. f. [from cuttle.] A foul-mouthed fellow; a fellow who blackens the character of others. Hanmer.

Away, you cutpurse rascal; you filthy bung, away: by this wine I'll thrust my knife in your mouldy chops, if you play the saucy cuttle with me. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

CYCLE. n. f. [syclus, Latin; κύκλος.]

1. A circle.

2. A round of time; a space in which the same revolutions begin again; a periodical space of time.

We do more commonly use these words, so as to stile a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period; and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof. Holder on Time.

3. A method, or account of a method, continued till the same course begins again.

We thought we should not attempt an unacceptable work, if here we endeavoured to present our gardeners with a complete cycle of what is requisite to be done throughout every month of the year. Evelyn's Kalendar.

4. Imaginary orbs; a circle in the heavens.

How build, unbuild, contrive
To save appearances; how gird the sphere
With centrick and excentrick, scribbled o'er Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb! Milton.

CYCLOID. n. f. [from κυκλοειδης, of κυκλος, and ειδος, shape.] A geometrical curve, of which the genesis may be conceived by imagining a nail in the circumference of a wheel: the line which the nail describes in the air, while the wheel revolves in a right line, is the cycloid.

CYCLOIDAL. adj. [from cycloid.] Relating to a cycloid; as the cycloidal space, is the space contained between the cycloid and its substance. Chambers.

CYCLOPÆDIA. n. f. [κύκλος and παιδία.] A circle of knowledge; a course of the sciences.

CYGNET. n. f. [from cygnus, Latin.] A young swan.

I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan,
Who chaunts a doleful hymn to his own death.

Shakespeare's King John.

So doth the swan her downy cygnets save,
Keeping them prisoners underneath her wings.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Cygnets, from grey, turn white.

Bacon's Natural History.

Young cygnets are good meat, if fattened with oats; but, fed with weeds, they taste fishy.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

CYLINDER. n. f. [κύλινδρον.] A body having two flat surfaces and one circular.

The quantity of water which every revolution does carry, according to any inclination of the cylinder, may be easily found. Wilkins.

The square will make you ready for all manner of compartments, bases, pedestals, plots, and buildings; your cylinder, for vaulted turrets, and round buildings. Peacbam.

CYLINDRICAL. adj. [from cylinder.]

CYLINDRICK. adj. Partaking of the nature of a cylinder; having the form of a cylinder.

Minera ferri stahetitia, when several of the cylindrick striz are contiguous, and grow together into one sheaf, is called brushiron ore.

Woodward's Natural History.

Obstructions must be most incident to such parts of the body where the circulation and the elastick fibres are both smallest, and those glands, which are the extremities of arteries formed into cylindrical canals. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CYMAR. n. f. [properly written finar.]

A slight covering; a scarf.

Her comely limbs compos'd with decent care,
Her body shaded with a slight cymar;
Her bosom to the view was only bare. Dryden.

CYMATIUM. n. f. [Lat. from κυμάτιον, a little wave.] A member of architecture, whereof one half is convex, and the other concave. There are two sorts, of which one is hollow below, as the other is above. Harris.

In a cornice, the gola, or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions, or dentelli, make a noble show by their graceful projections. Speflator.

CYMBAL. n. f. [cymbalum, Lat.] A musical instrument.

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries and fifes,
Tabors and cymbals, and the shouting Romans,
Make the iun dance. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

If mirth should fail, I'll busy her with cares,
Silence her clamorous voice with louder wars;
Trumpets and drums shall fright her from the throne,

As sounding cymbals aid the lab'ring moon.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.

CYNA'NTHROPY. n. f. [κυνανθρωπία, and ανθρωπος.] A species of madness in which men have the qualities of dogs.

CYNARCTOMACHY. [κυνων, αρκτος, μάχη.] A word coined by Butler, to denote bear-baiting with a dog.

That some occult design doth lie
In bloody cynarctomachy,
Is plain enough to him that knows
How saints lead brothers by the nose. Hudibras.

CYNEGETICKS. n. f. [κυνηγιτικά.] The art of hunting; the art of training and hunting with dogs.

There are extant, in Greek, four books of cynageticks, or venation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CYNICAL. adj. [κύνικος.] Having the qualities of a dog; currish; brutal; snarling; satirical.

He doth believe that some new-fangled wit (it is his cynical phrase) will some time or other find out his art. Wilkins.

CYNICK. n. f. [κύνικος.] A philosopher of the snarling or currish sort; a follower of Diogenes; a rude man; a snarler; a misanthrope.

How vilely doth this cynick chime!—
Get you hence, sirrah; saucy fellow, hence. Shak.

Without these precautions the man degenerates into a cynick, the woman into a coquette; the man grows sullen and morose, the woman impatient and fantastical. Addison.

CYNOSURE. n. f. [from κύνος and οὐρα.] The star near the north pole, by which sailors steer.

Towers and battlements it sees Bosom'd high in tufted trees,
Where perhaps some beauty lies,
The cynosure of neighbouring eyes. Milton.

CY'ON. See CION.

Gather cyons for grafts before the buds sprout.

Evelyn.

CY'PRESS-TREE. n. f. [cupressus, Latin.]

1. The cypress is a tall straight tree, produced with great difficulty. Its fruit is of no use; its leaves are bitter, and the very smell and shade of it are dangerous. Hence the Romans looked upon it to be a fatal tree, and made use of it at funerals, and in mournful ceremonies. The cypress-tree is always green, and never either rots or is worm-eaten. Calmet.

In ivory coffers I have stuff'd my crowns;
In cypress chests my arras counterpanes.

Shakespeare.

He taketh the cypress and the oak, which he strengtheneth for himself among the trees of the forest. Is. xlv. 14.

Poplars and alders ever quivering play'd,
And nodding cypresses form'd a fragrant shade.

Pope's Odyssey.

2. Being anciently used in funerals, it is the emblem of mourning.

Poison be their drink,
Their sweetest shade a grove of cypress trees.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

CY'PRUS. n. f. [I suppose from the place where it was made; or corruptly from cypress, as being used in mourning.] A thin transparent black stuff.

Lawn as white as driven snow,
Cyprus black as e'er was crow.

Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

A cyprus, not a bottom,
Hides my poor heart! Shakespeare.

CYST. n. f. [κύστις.] A bag containing some morbid matter.

In taking it out, the cystis broke, and shewed itself by its matter to be a meliceris.

Wifeman's Surgery.

There may be a consumption, with a purulent spitting, when the vomica is contained in a cyst or bag; upon the breaking of which the patient is commonly suffocated. Arbutnot on Diet.

CY'STICK. adj. [from cyst, a bag.] Contained in a bag.

The bile is of two sorts: the cystick, or that contained in the gall-bladder, a sort of repository for the gall; or the hepatick, or what flows immediately from the liver. Arbutnot.

CYSTOTOMY. n. f. [κύστις and τομή.] The act or practice of opening incysted tumours, or-cutting the bag in which any morbid matter is contained.

CZAR. n. f. [a Slavonian word, written more properly tzar.] The title of the emperor of Russia.

CZAR'NA. n. f. [from czar.] The empress of Russia.

D.

D A B

D, is a consonant nearly approaching in sound to T, but formed by a stronger appulse of the tongue to the upper part of the mouth. The sound of D in English is uniform, and it is never mute.

DA CAPO. [Ital.] A term in musick, which signifying from the head or the beginning, means that the first part of the tune should be repeated at the conclusion.

To DAB. v. a. [dauber, Fr.] To strike gently with something soft or moist.

Of flat fish there are rays, flouka, dabs, plaice.

Carew.

DA'B-CHICK. n. f. A small water fowl, called likewise Dobchick, and Didapper, and Dipchick. Colymbus. Ray.

A dab-chick waddles through the copse
On feet and wings, and flies, and wades, and hops.

Pope.

To DA'BBLE. v. a. [dabbelen, Dutch.] To smear; to daub; to spatter; to besprinkle; to wet.

A shadow like an angel, with bright hair
Dabbled in blood. Shakespeare's Richard III.

I scarified, and dabbled the wound with oil of turpentine. Wise man's Surgery.

Mean while the South, rising with dabbled wings,
A fable cloud athwart the welkin flings. Swift.

To DA'BBLE. v. n.

1. To play in water; to move in water or mud.

Neither will a spirit, that dwells with stars,
dabble in this impurer mud. Glanville's Apol.

The little one complained of her legs, that she could neither swim nor dabble with them. L'Estr.

But when he found the boys at play,
And saw them dabbling in their clay,
He stood behind a stall to lurk,
And mark the progress of their work. Swift.

2. To do any thing in a slight, superficial, or shallow manner; to tamper.

Shakespeare shall be put into your hands, as clear and as fair as it came out of them: though you, I think, have been dabbling here and there with the text, I have had more reverence for the writer and the printer, and left every thing standing. Auterbury to Pope.

DA'BBLER. n. f. [from dabble.]

1. One that plays in water.

D A P

2. One that meddles without mastery; one that never goes to the bottom of an affair; a superficial meddler.

He dares not complain of the tooth-ach, lest our dabblers in politicks should be ready to swear against him for disaffection. Swift.

DACE. n. f. [of uncertain derivation: in most provinces called dare. Lenciscus.] A small river fish, resembling a roach, but less.

Let me live harmlessly, and near the brink
Of Trent or Avon have a dwelling place;

Where I may see my quill or cork down sink
With eager bite of perch, or bleak, or dace.

Walton.

DA'CTYLE. n. f. [δακτυλος, a finger.] A poetical foot consisting of one long syllable and two short, like the joints of a finger; as cāndīdus.

DAD. } n. f. [The child's way of ex-DA'DDY. } pressing father. It is remarkable, that, in all parts of the world, the word for father, as first taught to children, is compounded of a and t, or the kindred letter d, differently placed; as tad, Welsh; ata, Greek; atta, Go-thick; tata, Latin.] Father.

I was never so bethumped with words,
Since first I call'd my brother's father dad. Shak.

His loving mother left him to my care;
Fine child, as like his dad as he could stare! Gay.

To DADE. v. a. To hold up by a leading string.

The little children when they learn to go,
By painful mothers daded to and fro. Drayton.

DAE'DAL. adj. [dædalus, Latin.]

1. Various; variegated.
2. Skilful: this is not the true meaning, nor should be imitated.

Nor hath

The dædal hand of Nature only pour'd
Her gifts of outward grace. Philips.

DA'FFODIL. } n. f. [Supposed DAFFODILLY. } by Skinner to be DAFFODOWNDILLY. } corrupted from asphodelus.]

This plant hath a lily-flower, consisting of one leaf, which is bell-shaped, and cut into six segments, which incircle its middle like a crown;
but the empalement, which commonly rises out of a membranous vagina, turns to an oblong or roundish fruit, which is triangular, and gapes in three parts; is divided into three cells, and full of roundish seeds. Miller.

Strew me the green ground with daffedownillies,
And cowslips, and king-cups, and loved lilies.

Spenser.

Bid amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And daffodillies fill their cups with tears,
To strew the laureat herse where Lycid lies.

Milton.

The daughters of the flood have search'd the mead
For violets pale, and cropp'd the poppy's head:

D A G

The short narcissus, and fair daffedit, Pancies to please the sight, and cassia sweet to smell. Dryden.

To DAFT. v. a. [contracted from do aft;
that is, to throw back, to throw off.] To toss aside; to put away with contempt;
to throw away slightly. Not now in use.

The nimble-footed mad-cap prince of Wales,
And his comrades, that daft the world aside,
And bid it pass. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

I would she had bestow'd this dotage on me: I would have daft all other respects, and made her half myself. Shakespeare.

DAG. n. f. [daguer, French.]

1. A dagger.
2. A handgun; a pistol: so called from serving the purposes of a dagger, being carried secretly, and doing mischief suddenly. It is in neither sense now used.

To DAG. v. a. [from daggle.] To daggle; to bemire; to let fall in the water: a low word.

DA'GGER. n. f. [daguer, French.]

1. A short sword; a poniard.

She ran to her son's dagger, and struck herself a mortal wound. Sidney.

This sword a dagger had his page,
That was but little for his age;

And therefore waited on him so

As dwarfs upon knights-errant do. Hudibras.

He strikes himself with his dagger; but being interrupted by one of his friends, he stabs him, and breaks the dagger on one of his ribs. Addison.

2. [In fencing schools.] A blunt blade of iron with a basket hilt, used for defence.
3. [With printers.] The ohelus; a mark of reference in form of a dagger; as
[†].

DA'GGERSDRAWING. n. f. [dagger and draw.] The act of drawing daggers;
approach to open violence.

They always are at daggerdrawing,

And one another clapperclawing. Hudibras.

I have heard of a quarrel in a tavern, where all were at daggerdrawing, till one desired to know the subject of the quarrel. Swift.

To DA'GGLE. v. a. [from dag, dew;
a word, according to Mr. Lye, derived from the Danish; according to Skinner, from dag, sprinkled, or deagan, to dip.
They are probably all of the same root.]
To dip negligently in mire or water;
to bemire; to besprinkle.

To DA'GGLE. v. n. To be in the mire;
to run through wet or dirt.

Nor like a puppy, daggled through the town,
To fetch and carry sing-song up and down. Pope.

DA'GGLEDTAIL. n. f. [daggle and tail.]
Bemired; dipped in the water or mud;
bespattered.

The gentlemen of wit and pleasure are apt to be choaked at the sight of so many daggledtail parsons, that happen to fall in their way. Swift.

DA'ILY.

DAILY. adj. [daglic, Saxon.] Happening every day, or very frequently; done every day; quotidian.

Much are bound to heaven
In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince. Shak.
Cease, man of woman born! to hope relief
From daily trouble, and continued grief. Prior.

DA'ILY. adv. Every day; very often.

Let that man with better sense advise,
That of the world least part to us is read;
And daily how through hardy enterprize
Many great regions are discovered. Fairy Queen.
A man with whom I conversed almost daily for years together. Dryden.

DA'INTILY. adv. [from dainty]

1. Elegantly; delicately.

Truth is a naked and open day-light, that doth not shew the masks and mummeries and triumphs of the world, half so stately and daintily as candlelight. Bacon.

2. Deliciously; pleasantly.

There is no region on earth so daintily watered,
with such great navigable rivers.

Huvel's Vocal Forest.

Those young suitors had been accustomed to nothing but to sleep well, and take daintily.

Broom's View of Epick Poems.

3. Nicely; ceremoniously; scrupulously.

4. Squeamishly; fastidiously.

DA'INTINESS. n. f. [from dainty.]

1. Delicacy; softness.

What should yet thy palate please?
Dainties and softer ease,
Sleek limbs and finest blood? Ben Jonson.

2. Elegance; nicety.

The duke excelled in the daintiness of his leg and foot, and the earl in the fine shape of his hands. Watson.

3. Delicacy; deliciousness.

It was more notorious for the daintiness of the provision which he served in it, than for the massiness of the dish. Hakewill on Providence.

4. Squeamishness; fastidiousness.

Or sand, and lime, and clay, Vitruvius hath discouraged without any daintiness. Watson.

5. Ceremoniousness; scrupulosity.

DAINTY. adj. [derived by Skinner from dain, an old French word for delicate;
which yet I cannot find in dictionaries.]

1. Pleasing to the palate; of exquisite taste; delicious.

Higher concoction is required for sweetness, or pleasure of taste, and therefore all your dainty plumbs are a little dry. Bacon.

2. Delicate; of acute sensibility; nice;
squeamish; soft; luxurious; tender.

This is the slowest, yet the daintiest sense;
For ev'n the ears of such as have no skill
Perceive a discord, and conceive offence;
And knowing not what's good, yet find the ill.

Davies.

They were a fine and dainty people; frugal and yet elegant, though not military. Bacon.

3. Scrupulous; ceremonious.

Which of you all
Will now deny to dance? She that makes dainty, I'll swear hath corns. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.
Therefore to horse;
And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
But shift away. Shakespere's Macbeth.

4. Elegant; tenderly, languishingly, or effeminately beautiful.

My house, within the city,
Is richly furnished with plate and gold,
Basons and ewers to lave her dainty hands. Shak.

Why should ye be so cruel to yourself,
And to those dainty limbs, which nature lent
For gentle usage and soft delicacy? Milton.

5. Nice; affectedly fine: in contempt.

Your dainty speakers have the curse,
To plead bad causes down to worse. Prior.

DA'INTY. n. f.

1. Something nice or delicate; a delicacy; something of exquisite taste.

Be not desirous of his dainties; for they are deceitful meat. Proverbs, xxiii. 3.

A worm breedeth in meal, of the shape of a large white maggot, which is given as a great dainty to nightingales. Bacon.

She then produc'd her dairy store,
And unbought dainties of the poor. Dryden.

The shepherd swains, with sure abundance blest,
On the fat flock and rural dainties feast. Pope.

2. A word of fondness formerly in use.

Why, that's my dainty; I shall miss thee:
But yet thou shalt have freedom. Shak. Tempest.

There is a fortune coming Towards you, dainty, that will take thee thus,
And set thee aloft. Ben Jonson.

DA'IRY. n. f. [from dai, an old word for milk. Mr. Lye.]

1. The occupation or art of making various kinds of food from milk.

Grounds were turned much in England either to feeding or dairy; and this advanced the trade of English butter. Temple.

2. The place where milk is manufactured.

You have no more worth
Than the coarse and country fairy,
That doth haunt the hearth or dairy. Ben Jonson.

What stores my dairies and my folds contain!
A thousand lambs that wander on the plain. Dryd.

She in pens his flocks will fold,
And then produce her dairy store. Dryden.

3. Pasturage; milk farm; ground where milch cattle are kept.

Dairies, being well housewired, are exceeding commodious. Bacon.

Children, in dairy countries, do wax more tall than where they feed more upon bread and flesh. Bacon.

DA'IRYMAID. n. f. [dairy and maid.] The woman servant whose business is to manage the milk.

The poorest of the sex have still an itch
To know their fortunes, equal to the rich:
The dairymaid enquires if she shall take

The trusty taylor, and the cook forsake. Dryden.

Come up quickly, or we shall conclude that thou art in love with one of Sir Roger's dairymaids.

Addison.

DA'ISY. n. f. [dagereage, day's eye,
Chaucer.] A spring flower.

It hath a perennial root: the stalks are naked, and never branch out: the cup of the flower is scaly and simple, divided into many segments to the foot-stalk. The flowers are radiated; and the heads, after the petals are fallen off, resemble obtusé cones. Miller.

When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And lady smocks all over white,
And cuckoo buds of yellow hue,

Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakespeare.

As he passed, the woods put forth their blossoms, the earth her primroses and daisy-eyes, to behold him. Huvel.

Now hawthorn blossoms, now the daisies spring;
Now leaves the trees, and flow'rs adorn the ground.

Pope.

This will find thee picking of daisies, or smelling to a lock of hay.

Addison.

Fair-handed Spring unbosoms every grace;

The daisy, primrose, violet. Thomson.

DALE. n. f. [dalei, Gothick; dal, Dutch and German.] A low place between hills; a vale; a valley.

Long tost with storms, and beat with bitter winds,
High over hills, and low adown the dale,
She wand'ring many a wood, and measur'd many a vale. Fairy Queen.

Before the downfall of the fairy state,
This dale a pleasing region, not unblest,
This dale possess'd they, and had still possess'd.

Tickell.

He steals along the lonely dale. Thomson's Spring.

DA'LLIANCE. n. f. [from dally.]

1. Interchange of caresses; acts of fondness.

Look thou be true: do not give dalliance
Too much the rein: the strongest oaths are straw
To th' fire i' th' blood. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Nor gentle purpose, nor endearing smiles,
Wanted; nor youthful dalliance, as befits
Fair couple link'd in happy nuptial league, Alone as they. Milton.

I'll head my people;
Then think of dalliance when the danger's o'er:
My warlike spirits work now another way,
And my soul's tun'd to trumpets. Dryden.

2. Conjugal conversation.

The giant, self-dismayed with the sound,
Where he with his Duessa dalliance found,
In haste came rushing forth from inner bow'rs.

Fairy Queen.

That bower, not mystick, where the sapient king
Held dalliance with his fair Egyptian spouse.

Milton.

Thou claim'st me for thy fire,
And my fair son here show'st me, the dear pledge
Of dalliance had with thee in heav'n. Milton.

3. Delay; procrastination.

Both wind and tide stay for this gentleman;
And I, to blame, have held him here too long.—
—Good lord, you use this dalliance to excuse
Your breach of promise. Shakespeare.

DA'LLIER. n. f. [from dally.] A trifler;
a fondler.

The daily dalliers with pleasant words, with smiling countenances, and with wagers purposed to be lost before they were purposed to be made.

Ascham.

DA'LLOP. n. f. [of unknown etymology.]

A tuft, or clamp: not in use.

Of barley the finest and greenest ye find,
Leave standing in dallops till time ye do bind.

Tusser.

To DA'LLY. v. n. [dollen, Dutch, to trifle.]

1. To trifle; to play the fool; to amuse one's self with idle play; to lose time in trifles; to procrastinate idly.

Take up thy master:
If thou should'st dally half an hour, his life,
With thine, and all that offer to defend him,
Stand in assured loss. Shakespeare's King Lear.

He left his cur, and laying hold Upon his arms, with courage bold

Cried out, 'tis now no time to dally,
The enemy begin to rally. Hudibras.

We have trifled too long already: it is madness to dally any longer, when our souls are at stake. Calamy's Sermons.

One hundred thousand pounds must be raised;
for there is no dallying with hunger. Swift.

2. To exchange caresses; to play the wanton; to fondle.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation;
Not dallying with a brace of courtizans,
But meditating with two deep divines. Shakespeare.

3. To sport; to play; to frolick.

She her airie buildeth in the cedar's top,
And dailies with the wind, and scorns the sun.

Shakespeare.

4. To delay.

They that would not be reformed by that correction, wherein he dallied with them, shall feel a judgment worthy of God. Wisdom, xii. 26.

To DA'LLY. v. a. To put off; to delay;
to amuse till a proper opportunity.

He set down to perform service, not by the hazard of one set battle, but by dallying off the time with often skirmishes. Kneller's History.

DAM. n. f. [from dame, which formerly signified mother. Had Nero never been an emperor, shulde never his dame have be slaine. Chaucer.]

1. The

1. The mother: used of beasts, or other animals not human.

The dam runs lowing up and down,
Looking the way her harmless young one went,
And can do nought but wail her darling loss.

Shakespeare.

Mother, says a sick kite, let me have your prayers.—Alas, my child, says the dam, which of the gods shall I go to? L'Estrange.

Birds bring but one morsel of meat at a time, and have not fewer, it may be, than seven or eight young in the nest together, which, at the return of their dams, do all at once, with equal greediness, hold up their heads and gape. Ray.

2. A human mother, in contempt or detestation.

This brat is none of mine;
It is the issue of Polixena:

Hence with it, and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

- DAM. n. f. [dam, Dutch.] A mole or bank to confine water.

As when the sea breaks o'er its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds,
Those banks and dams, that like a skreen
Did keep it out, now keep it in. Hudibras.

Not with so fierce a rage the foaming flood Roars, when he finds his rapid course withstood;
Bears down the dams, with unresisted sway,
And sweeps the cattle and the cots away. Dryden.

Let loose the reins to all your wat'ry store,
Bear down the dams, and open every door. Dryden.

The inside of the dam must be very smooth and freight; and if it is made very sloping on each side, it is the better. Mortimer's Husbandry.

- To DAM. v. a. [damman, ponebemma, Sax. dammen, Dutch.]

1. To confine, or shut up, water by moles or dams.

I'll have the current in this place damm'd up;
And here the smug and silver Trent shall run
In a new channel, fair and evenly. Shak. Hen. VI.

Home I would go,
But that my doors are hateful to my eyes,
Fill'd and damm'd up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring. Osway.

Boggy lands are fed by springs, pent by a weight of earth, that dams in the water, and causes it to spread. Mortimer.

'Tis you must drive that trouble from your soul;
As streams, when damm'd, forget their ancient current,

And, wond'ring at their banks, in other channels flow. Smith.

2. It is used by Shakespeare of fire, and by Milton of light.

The more thou damm'st it up, the more it burns. Shakespeare.

Moon! if your influence be quite damm'd up
With black usurping mists, some gentle taper,
Though a rush-candle from the wicker hole
Of some clay habitation, visit us
With thy long level'd rule of streaming light. Milton.

- DAMAGE. n. f. [domage, French.]

1. Mischief; hurt; detriment.

Gross errors and absurdities many commit for want of a friend to tell them of them, to the great damage both of their fame and fortune. Bacon.

Such as were sent from thence did commonly do more hurt and damage to the English subjects than to the Irish enemies, by their continual cuts and extortion. Davies.

He repulsed the enemy very much to their damage. Clarendon.

2. Loss; mischief suffered.

His heart exalts him in the harm
Already done, to have dispeopled heav'n,
My damage fondly deem'd! Milton.

3. The value of mischief done.

They believed that they were not able, though they should be willing to sell all they have in Ireland, to pay the damages which had been suffered by the war. Clarendon.

4. Reparation of damage; retribution.

The bishop demanded restitution of the spoils taken by the Scots, or damages for the same. Bacon.

Tell me whether, upon exhibiting the several particulars which I have related to you, I may not sue her for damages in a court of justice. Addison.

5. [In law.] Any hurt or hindrance that a man taketh in his estate. In the common law it particularly signifies a part of what the jurors be to enquire of;
for, after verdict given of the principal cause, they are likewise asked their con-sciences touching costs, which are the charges of suit, and damages, which contain the hindrance which the plaintiff or demandant hath suffered, by means of the wrong done him by the defendant or tenant. Cowell.

When the judge had awarded due damages to a person into whose field a neighbour's oxen had broke, it is reported that he reversed his own sentence, when he heard that the oxen, which had done this mischief, were his own. Watts.

- To DA'MAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mischief; to injure; to impair; to hurt; to harm.

I consider time as an immense ocean, into which many noble authors are entirely swallow'd up, many very much shattered and damaged, some quite disjointed and broken into pieces. Addison.

- To DA'MAGE. v. n. To take damage, or be damaged.

- DA'MAGEABLE. adj. [from damage.]

1. Susceptible of hurt: as, damageable goods.

2. Mischievous; pernicious.

Obscene and immodest talk is offensive to the purity of God, damageable and infectious to the innocence of our neighbours, and most pernicious to ourselves.

- DA'MASCENE. n. f. [damascenus, from Damascus.] A small plum; a damson, as it is now spoken.

In April follow the cherry tree in blossom, the damascene and plum trees in blossom, and the white thorn in leaf. Bacon.

In fruits the white commonly is meaner, as in pear plums and damascenes; and the choicest plums are black. Bacon.

- DA'MASK. n. f. [damasquin, Fr. damif-chino, Ital. from Damascus.]

1. Linen or silk woven in a manner invented at Damascus, by which part, by a various direction of the threads, exhibits flowers or other forms.

Not any weaver which his work doth boast
In diaper, damask, or in lync. Spenser.

Wipe your shoes, for want of a clout, with a damask napkin. Swift's Rules to Servants.

2. It is used for red colour in Fairfax, from the damask rose.

And for some deale perplexed was her spirit,
Her damask late, now chang'd to purest white. Fairfax.

- To DA'MASK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To form flowers upon stuffs.

2. To variegate; to diversify.

They sat recline
On the soft downy bank, damask'd with flowers. Milton.

Around him dance the rosy hours,
And damasking the ground with flow'rs,
With ambient sweets perfume the morn. Fenton.

3. To adorn steel-work with figures:
practised, I suppose, first at Damascus.

DAMASK-PLUM. See PLUM.

DAMASK-ROSE. n. f. The rose of Damafcus; a red rose. See ROSE.

Damask-roses have not been known in England above one hundred years, and now are so common. Bacon.

No gradual bloom is wanting from the bud,
Nor broad carnations, nor gay spotted pinks,
Nor, shower'd from ev'ry bush, the damask-rose. Thomson.

DA'MASKENING. n. f. [from damasquiner, Fr.] The art or act of adorning iron or steel, by making incisions, and filling them up with gold or silver wire: used in enriching the blades of swords, and locks of pistols. Chambers.

DAME. n. f. [dame, French; dama, Spanish.]

1. A lady; the old title of honour to women.

The word dame originally signified a mistress of a family, who was a lady; and it is used still in the English law to signify a lady: but in common use, now-a-days, it represents a farmer's wife, or a mistress of a family of the lower rank in the country. Watts's Logic.

Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you known,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect. Shakespeare.

Not all these lords do vex me half so much
As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife. Shakespeare.

Shut your mouth, dame! Shakefp. King Lear.
Sov'reign of creatures, universal dame! Milton.

2. It is still used in poetry for women of rank.

His father Faunus; a Laurentian dame
His mother, fair Marica was her name. Dryden.

Who would not repeat that bliss,
And frequent sight of such a dame
Buy with the hazard of his fame? Waller.

3. Mistress of a low family.

They killed the poor cock; for, say they, if it were not for his waking our dame, she would not wake us. L'Estrange.

4. Woman in general.

We've willing dames enough; there cannot be
That vulture in you, to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves. Shakefp.

DAMES-VIOLET. n. f. A plant, called also queen's gillyflower. Miller.

To DAMN. v. a. [damno, Latin.]

1. To doom to eternal torments in a future state.

It is most necessary, that the church, by doctrine, and decree, do damn and send to hell for ever those facts and opinions. Bacon.

2. To procure or cause to be eternally condemned.

That which he continues ignorant of, having done the utmost lying in his power that he might not be ignorant of it, shall not damn him. South's Sermons.

3. To condemn.

His own impartial thought
Will damn, and conscience will record the fault. Dryden.

4. To hoot or hiss any publick performance; to explode.

They damn themselves, nor will my muse descend
To clap with such who fools and knaves commend. Dryden.

For the great dons of wit,
Phæbus gives them full privilege alone
To damn all others, and cry up their own. Dryd.
You are so good a critick, that it is the greatest happiness of the modern poets that you do not hear.

hear their works; and, next, that you are not so arrant a critick as to dams them, like the rest, without hearing. Pope.

DAMNABLE. adj. [from damn.]

1. Deserving damnation; justly doomed to never-ending punishment.

It gives him occasion of labouring with greater earnestness elsewhere, to entangle unwary minds with the snares of his damnable opinion. Hooker.

He's a creature unprepar'd, unmeet for death; And to transport him in the mind he is Were damnable. Shakefp. Measure for Measure.

As he does not reckon every schism of a damnable nature, so he is far from closing with the new opinion of those who make it no crime. Swift.

2. It is sometimes indecently used in a low and ludicrous sense; odious; pernicious.

O thou damnable fellow I did not I pluck thee by the nose for thy speeches?

Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

DAMNABLY. adv. [from damnable.]

1. In such a manner as to incur eternal punishment; so as to be excluded from mercy.

We will propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnably, in respect of those consequences that arise from them? South's Sermons.

2. It is indecently used in a ludicrous sense; odiously; hatefully.

The more sweets they bestowed upon them, the more damnably their conives stunk. Dennis.

DAMNATION. n. f. [from damn.] Exclusion from divine mercy; condemnation to eternal punishment.

He that hath been affrighted with the fears of hell, or remembers how often he hath been spared from an horrible damnation, will not be ready to strangle his brother for a trifle.

Taylor's Worshy Communicant.

Now mince the sin,

And mollify damnation with a phrase:

Say you consented not to Sancho's death,

But barely not forbade it. Dryden.

DAMNATORY. adj. [from damnatorius.] Containing a sentence of condemnation.

DAMNED. part. adj. [from damn.] Hatelul; detestable; abhorred; abominable.

DAMP. n. f.

1. Fog; moist air; moisture.

Night; not now, as ere man fell,

Wholesom, and cool, and mild; but with black air Accompanied, with damps and dreadful gloom. Milton.

A rift there was, which from the mountain's height

Convey'd a glimmering and malignant light;

A breathing-place to draw the damps away.

A twilight of an intercepted day. Dryden.

2. A noxious vapour exhaled from the earth.

The heat of the sun, in the hotter seasons, penetrating the exterior parts of the earth, excites those mineral exhalations in subterraneous caverns, which are called damps: these seldom happen but in the summer-time; when, the hotter the weather is, the more frequent are the damps. Woodward.

3. Dejection; depression of spirit; cloud of the mind.

Adam, by this from the cold sudden damp Recov'ring, and his scatter'd spirits return'd, To Michael thus his humble words address'd.

Milton.

His name struck every where so great a damp, As Archimedes through the Roman camp. Rosc.

Ev'n now, while thus I stand blest in thy presence,

A secret damp of grief comes o'er my thoughts.

Addison.

An eternal state he knows and confesses that he has made no provision for, that he is undone for ever: a prospect enough to cast a damp over his sprightliest hours. Rogers.

This commendable resentment against me, strikes a damp upon that spirit in all ranks and corporations of men. Swift.

To DAMP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wet; to moisten; to make humid.

2. To depress; to deject; to chill; to dull.

The very loss of one pleasure is enough to damp the relish of another. L'Estrange.

DAMSON. n. f. [corruptly from damascene.] A small black plum. See DAMASCENE.

My wife desir'd some damsons, And made me climb with danger of my life. Shak.

DAN. n. f. [from dominus, as now don in Spanish; and donna, Italian, from domina.] The old term of honour for men, as we now say Master. I know not that it was ever used in prose, and imagine it to have been rather of ludicrous import.

Dan Chaucer well of English undefiled. Douglafs. This whimpled, whining, purblind, wayward boy,

This signor Junio's giant dwarf, dan Cupid. Shak.

Dick, if this story pleaseth thee,

Pray thank dan Pope, who told it me.

Prior's Alma.

To DANCE. v. n. [danfer, Fr. dancar, Span. as some think from tanza, Arabic, a dance; as Junius, who loves to derive from Greek, thinks, from danais.] To move in measure; to move with steps correspondent to the sound of instruments.

What say you to young Mr. Fenton? He capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses. Shakespeare.

To DANCE Attendance. v. n. To wait with suppleness and obsequiousness.

Men are sooner weary to dance attendance at the gates of foreign lords, than to tarry the good leisure of their own magistrates. Raleigh's Essays.

It upbraids you,

To let your father's friend, for three long months, Thus dance attendance for a word of audience. Dryden.

To DANCE. v. a. To make to dance; to put into a lively motion.

Thy grandfire lov'd thee well;

Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee. Shakespeare.

That I see thee here,

Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart,

Than when I first my wedded mistress saw

Bestride my threshold. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

In pestilences, the malignity of the infecting vapour danceth the principal spirits. Bacon.

DANCE. n. f. [from the verb.] A motion of one or many in concert, regulated by musick.

Our dance of custom, round about the oak of Herne the hunter. Shakespeare's M.W. of Windsor.

The

The honourablest part of talk is to give the occasion, and again to moderate and pass to somewhat else; for then a man leads the dance.

Bacon.

But you perhaps expect a modish feast,
With am'rous songs and wanton dances grac'd.

Dryden.

DANCER. n. f. [from dance.] One that practises the art of dancing.

He at Philippi kept
His sword e'en like a dancer, while I strook
The lean and wrinkled Cassius.

Shakespeare.

Musicians and dancers! take some truce
With these your pleasing labours; for great use
As much weariness as perfection brings.

Donne.

The earl was so far from being a good dancer,
that he was no graceful goer.

Wotton.

It is a usual practice for our funambulours, or dancers on the rope, to attempt somewhat like to flying.

Wilkins.

He, perfect dancer! climbs the rope,
And balances your fear and hope.

Prior.

Nature, I thought, perform'd too mean a part,
Forming her movements to the rules of art;
And, vex'd, I found that the musician's hand
Had o'er the dancer's mind too great command.

Prior.

DANCINGMASTER. n. f. [dance and master.] One who teaches the art of dancing.

The apes were taught their apes tricks by a dancingmaster.

L'Estrange.

The legs of a dancingmaster, and the fingers of a musician, fall, as it were, naturally, without thought or pains, into regular and admirable motions.

Locke on Understanding.

DANCINGSCHOOL. n. f. [dancing and school.] The school where the art of dancing is taught.

They bid us to the English dancing schools,
And teach lavoltas high, and swift courantos;
Saying our grace is only in our heels.

Shakespeare.

A certain Egyptian king endowed a dancing-school for the institution of apes of quality.

L'Estrange.

DANDELION. n. f. [dent de lion, French.] The name of a plant.

It agrees in all respects with the hawkweed, but only in its having a single naked stalk, with one flower upon the top.

Miller.

For cowslips sweet, let dandelions spread;
For Blouzelinda, blisesome maid, is dead!

Gay's Pastorals.

DANDIPRAT. n. f. [dandin, French.] A little fellow; an urchin: a word used sometimes in fondness, sometimes in contempt.

To DANDLE. v. a. [dandelen, Dutch.]

1. To shake a child on the knee, or in the hands, to please and quiet him.

Then shall ye suck, and shall be born upon her fides, and be dandled upon her knees.

Isaiah.

Thy little brethren, which, like fairy sprites,
Oft skip into our chamber those sweet nights,
And, kiss'd and dandled on thy father's knee,
Were brib'd next day to tell what they did see.

Donne.

2. Courts are but superficial schools
To dandle fools.

Bacon.

Sporting the lion ramp'd, and in his paw
Dandled the kid.

Milton.

Motion occasions sleep, as we find by the common use of rocking forward children in cradles, or dandling them in their nurser's arms.

Temple.

3. To fondle; to treat like a child.

Their child shall be advanc'd,
And be received for the emperor's heir;
And let the emperor dandle him for his own.

Shak.

They have put me in a silk gown, and a gaudy fool's cap; I am ashamed to be dandled thus, and cannot look in the glass without blushing, to see myself turned into such a little pretty master.

Addison's Guardian.

3. To delay; to procrastinate; to protract by trifles: not in use.

Captains do so dandle their doings, and dally in the service, as if they would not have the enemy subdued.

Spenser.

DANDLE. n. f. [from dandle.] He that dandles or fondles children.

DANNRUFF. n. f. [often written dendruff, from zan, the itch, and brup, sordid, filthy.] Scabs in the head; scurf at the roots of the hair.

DANEWORT. n. f. A species of elder; called also dwarf-elder, or wallwort.

DANGER. n. f. [danger, Fr. of uncertain derivation. Skinner derives it from damnum, Menage from angaria, Minshew from da-o, death, to which Junius seems inclined.] Risque; hazard; peril.

They that sail on the sea, tell of the danger.

Ecclus. xliii. 24.

Our craft is in danger to be set at nought.

Alfs. x. 27.

He hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour, and to no other pretence of danger.

Shakespeare.

More danger now from man alone we find,
Than from the rocks, the billows, and the wind.

Waller.

To DANGER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put in hazard; to endanger.

Pompey's son stands up

For the main soldier; whose quality going on,
The fides o' th' world may danger.

Shakespeare.

DANGERLESS. adj. [from danger.] Without hazard; without risque; exempt from danger.

He shewed no less magnanimity in dangerless despising, than others in dangerous affecting, the multiplying of kingdoms.

Sidney.

DANGEROUS. adj. [from danger.] Hazardous; perilous; full of danger.

A man of an ill tongue is dangerous in his city.

Ecclus. ix.

All men counsel me to take away thy life, likely to bring forth nothing but dangerous and wicked effects.

Sidney.

Already we have conquer'd half the war,
And the less dangerous part is left behind.

Dryden.

DANGEROUSLY. adv. [from dangerous.] Hazardously; perilously; with danger.

But for your son, believe it, oh believe it,
Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd,
If not most mortal to him.

Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

A sort of naughty persons
Have practis'd dangerously against your state,
Dealing with witches and with conjurors.

Shakespeare.

It is just with God to permit those, which think they stand so surely, to fall most dangerously.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

Plutarch says, Telephilla, a noble lady, being dangerously sick, was advised to apply her mind to poetry.

Peacham.

If it were so, which but to think were pride,
My constant love would dangerously be tried.

Dryden.

DANGEROUSNESS. n. f. [from dangerous.] Danger; hazard; peril.

I shall not need to mind you of judging of the dangerousness of diseases, by the nobleness of the part affected.

Boyle.

To DANGLE. v. n. [from bang, according to Skinner: as, hang, hangle, dangle.]

1. To hang loose and quivering.

Go, bind thou up yon dangling apriocks.

Shak.

He'd rather on a gibbet dangle,

Than miss his dear delight to wrangle.

Hudibras.

Codrus had but one bed; so short, so boot,

That his short wife's short legs hung dangling out.

Dryden.

With dangling hands he strokes th' Imperial robe,
And with a cuckold's air commands the globe.

Smith.

But have you not with thought beheld
The sword hang dangling o'er the shield?

Prior.

2. To hang upon any one; to be an humble, useless, harmless follower.

The presbyterians, and other fanatics that dangle after them, are well inclined to pull down the present establishment.

Swift.

DANGLER. n. f. [from dangle.] A man that hangs about women only to waste time.

A dangler is of neither sex.

Ralph.

DANK. adj. [from tuncken, Germ. Skin-ner.] Damp; humid; moist; wet.

He her the maiden sleeping found
On the dank and dirty ground.

Shakespeare.

Yet oft they quit
The dank, and rising on stiff pinions tour
The mid aerial sky.

Milton.

Through each thicket, dank or dry,
Like a black mist, low creeping, he held on
His midnight search.

Milton.

Now that the fields are dank, and ways are mire,
Where shall we sometimes meet, and by the fire
Help waste a fullen day?

Milton.

By the rushy-fringed bank,
Where grows the willow and the osier dank,
My sliding chariot stays.

Milton.

Me, in my vow'd
Picture, the sacred wall declares t' have hung
My dank and drooping weeds
To the stern god of sea.

Milton.

To wash the skins of beasts and fowls herewith, would keep them from growing dank in moist weather.

Grew.

DANKISH. adj. Somewhat dank.

They bound me, bore me thence,
And in a dark and dankish vault at home
There left me.

Shakespeare.

To DAP. v. n. [corrupted from dip.] To let fall gently into the water: a word, I believe, only used by anglers.

I have taught him how to catch a chub, by dapping with a grasshopper.

Walton.

DAPATICAL. adj. [from dapaticus, Lat.] Sumptuous in cheer.

Bailey.

DAPPER. adj. [dapper, Dutch.] Little and active; lively without bulk. It is usually spoken in contempt.

And on the tawny sands and shelves,
Trip the pert fairies and the dapper elves.

Milton.

A pert dapper spark of a magpye fancied the birds would never be governed till himself should sit at the helm.

L'Estrange.

DAPPERLING. n. f. [from dapper.] A dwarf; a dandiprat.

Ainsworth.

DAPPLE. adj. [from apple; as pommelé.] Marked with various colours; variegated; streaked; imbricated: it is used chiefly of animals.

My country neighbours do not find it impossible to think of a lame horse, till they have run over all beings that are, and then pitch on dapple.

Locke.

To DAPPLE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To streak; to vary; to diversify with colours.

But under him a grey steed did he wield,
Whose sides with dappled circles were endight.

Spenser.

The gentle day
Dapples the drowsy east with spots of grey.

Shak.

Horses that are dappled turn white; and old squirrels turn grisly.

Bacon.

The lark begins his flight,
From his watch-tower in the skies,
Till the dappled dawn doth rise.

Milton.

The dappled pink, and blushing rose,
Deck my charming Chloe's hair.

Prior.

The

The gods, to curse Pamela with her pray'rs,
Gave the gilt coach and dappled Flanders mares.

Pope.

DAR. } n. f. A fish found in the Severn.
DART. } Bailey. Dart is the same with Dace.

To DARE. v. n. pret. I durst; the preterite I dared belongs to the active dare; part. I have dared. [deapman, Saxon; derren, Dutch.] To have courage for any purpose; not to be afraid; to adventure; to be adventurous.

Durst thou be as good as thy word now?—
Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but a man,
I dare; but, as thou art a prince, I fear thee.

Shakespeare.

I dare do all that may become a man;
Who *dare*s do more, is none.

Shakespeare.

They are both hanged; and so would this be,
if he durst steal any thing adventurously.

Shak.

Neither of them was of that temper as to dare
any dangerous fact.

Haywood.

The father bore it with undaunted soul,
Like one who durst his destiny controul.

Dryden.

Deliberate and well-weighed courage knows both to be cautious and to dare, as occasion offers.

Dryden.

We dare not build much upon such a notion or doctrine, till it be very fully examined.

Watts.

To DARE. v. a. pret. I dared, not I durst.
To challenge; to defy.

I never in my life

Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly,
Unless a brother should a brother dare

To gentle exercise and proof of arms.

Shakespeare.

Here she stands:

Take but possession of her with a touch;
I dare thee but to breathe upon my love.

Shakespeare.

He had many days come half seas over; and sometimes passing further, came and lay at the mouth of the harbour, daring them to fight.

Knolles.

Masters of the arts of policy thought that they might even defy and dare Providence to the face.

South.

All cold, but in her breast, I will despise;
And dare all heat but that in Celia's eyes.

Roscommon.

Time! I dare thee to discover

Such a youth, and such a lover.

Dryden.

Presumptuous wretch! with mortal art to dare
Immortal power, and brave the thunderer.

Grano.

To DARE LARKS. To catch them by means of a looking-glass, or by keeping a bird of prey hovering aloft, which keeps them in amaze till caught; to amaze.

Shrimps are dipped up in shallow water with little round nets, not much unlike that which is used for daring larks.

Carew.

As larks lie dar'd to shun the hobby's flight.

Dryden.

DARE. n. f. [from the verb.] Defiance;
challenge.

Sextus Pompeius

Hath given the dare to Cæsar, and commands
The empire of the sea.

Shakespeare.

DARE. n. f. A small fish, the same with dace.

Leuciscus.

DAREFUL. adj. [dare and full.] Full of defiance; not in use.

We might have met them dareful, beard to beard,

And beat them backward home.

Shakespeare.

DARING. adj. [from dare.] Bold; adventurous; fearless; courageous; intrepid; brave; stout.

The last Georgick has many metaphors, but not so daring as this; for human passions may be more naturally ascribed to a bee than to an inanimate plant.

Addison.

The song too daring, and the theme too great.

Prior.

Grieve not, O daring prince, that noble heart.

Pope.

DARINGLY. adv. [from daring.] Boldly;
courageously; fearlessly; impudently;
outrageously.

Some of the great principles of religion are every day openly and daringly attacked from the press.

Atterbury.

Your brother, fir'd with his success,

Too daringly upon the foe did press.

Halifax.

DARINGNESS. n. f. [from daring.] Bold-
ness.

DARK. adj. [deopce, Saxon.]

1. Not light; wanting light.

Fleance, his son, who keeps him company,
Must embrace the fate of that dark hour.

Shak.

While we converse with her, we mark
No want of day, nor think it dark.

Waller.

2. Not of a showy or vivid colour.

If the plague be somewhat dark, and the plague spread not in the skin, the priest shall pronounce him clean.

Leviticus.

In Muscovy the generality of the people are more inclined to have dark coloured hair than flaxen.

Boyle.

3. Blind; without the enjoyment of light.

Thou wretched daughter of a dark old man,
Conduct my weary steps.

Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

4. Opaque; not transparent: as, lead is a dark body.

5. Obscure; not perspicuous.

What may seem dark at the first, will afterwards be found more plain.

Hooker.

Mean time we shall express our darker purpose.

Shakespeare.

6. Not enlightened by knowledge; ignorant.

The age, wherein he liv'd, was dark; but he Could not want sight, who taught the world to see.

Denham.

7. Gloomy; not cheerful.

All men of dark temper, according to their degree of melancholy or enthusiasm, may find convents fitted to their humours.

Addison on Italy.

DARK. n. f.

1. Darkness; obscurity; want of light.

Come, thick night,

And pall thee in the dunnest smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry, hold, hold!

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Cloud and ever-during dark

Surrounds me! from the cheerful ways of men
Cut off.

Milton.

Whereas seeing requires light, and a free medium, and a right line to the objects, we can hear in the dark immured, and by curve lines.

Holder.

2. Obscurity; condition of one unknown.

All he says of himself is, that he is an obscure person; one, I suppose he means, that is in the dark.

Atterbury.

3. Want of knowledge.

Till we ourselves perceive by our own understandings, we are as much in the dark, and as void of knowledge, as before.

Locke.

To DARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To darken; to obscure: obsolete.

Fair when that cloud of pride, which oft doth
dark

Her goodly light, with smiles she drives away.

Spenser.

To DARKEN. v. a. [from dark.]

1. To make dark; to deprive of light.

Black with surrounding forests then it stood,
That hung above, and darken'd all the flood.

Addison.

Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
Or whiten'd wall provoke the skew'r to write.

Pope.

2. To cloud; to perplex.

Such was his wisdom, that his confidence did seldom darken his foresight, especially in things near hand.

Bacon.

3. To foul; to fully.

The lusts and passions of men do fully and darken their minds, even by a natural influence.

Tillotson.

To DARKEN. v. n. To grow dark.

DARKLING. [a participle, as it seems, from darkle, which yet I have never found; or perhaps a kind of diminutive from dark, as young, youngling.] Being in the dark; being without light: a word merely poetical.

O, wilt thou darkling leave me? do not so.

Shakespeare.

Darkling stands

The varying shore o' th' world.

Shakespeare.

The wakeful bird

Sings darkling, and, in shadiest covert hid,
Tunes her nocturnal note.

Milton.

Darkling they mourn their fate, whom Circe's
pow'r,

With words and wicked herbs, from human kind
Had alter'd, and in brutal shapes confin'd.

Dryden.

DARKLY. adv. [from dark.] In a situation void of light; obscurely; blindly;
gloomily; uncertainly.

For well you know, and can record alone,
What fame to future times conveys but darkly down.

Dryden.

DARKNESS. n. f. [from dark.]

1. Absence of light.

Darkness was upon the face of the deep. Genesis.
I go whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness, and the shadow of death.

Job.

2. Opakeness; want of transparency.

3. Obscurity; want of perspicuity; difficulty to the understanding.

4. Infernal gloom; wickedness.

The instruments of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trifles, to betray us
In deepest consequence.

Shakespeare.

5. State of being intellectually clouded;
ignorance; uncertainty.

All the light truth has, or can have, is from the clearness and validity of those proofs upon which it is received; to talk of any other light in the understanding, is to put ourselves in the dark, or in the power of the prince of darkness.

Locke.

6. The empire of Satan; or the Devil.

Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son.

Colossians.

DARKSOME. adj. [from dark.] Gloomy; obscure; not well enlightened; not luminous.

He brought him thro' a darksome narrow pass
To a broad gate.

Spenser.

And her fair eyes, like stars that dimmed were
With darksome cloud, now shew their goodly beams.

Spenser.

You must not look to have an image in any thing lightsome; for even a face in iron, red-hot, will not be seen, the light confounding the small differences of lightsome and darksome, which shew the figure.

Bacon.

A darksome cloud of locusts, swarming down,
Must eat, and on the ground leave nothing green.

Milton.

He, here with us to be,

Forsook the courts of everlasting day,
And chose with us a darksome house of mortal clay.

Milton.

Mistaken blessing, which old age they call,
'Tis a long, nasty, darksome hospital.

Dryden.

The darksome pines, that o'er yon rocks reclin'd,
Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind.

Pope.

DARKLING. adj. [deopling, Sax. diminutive of dear.] Favourite; dear; beloved;

loved; regarded with great kindness and tenderness.

'Tis not for a generous prince to countenance oppression and injustice, even in his most darling favourites.

L'Estrange.

Have a care lest some beloved notion, or some darling science, too far prevail over your mind.

Watts.

DA'RLING. n. f. A favourite; one much beloved.

Young Ferdinand they suppose is drown'd,
And his and my lov'd darling.

Shakespeare.

In Thames, the ocean's darling, England's pride,
The pleasing emblem of his reign does glide.

Halifax.

She became the darling of the princefs.

Addison.

To DARN. v. a. [of uncertain original.]

To mend holes by imitating the texture of the stuff.

Will she thy linen wash, or hosen darn?

Gay.

He spent every day ten hours in his closet, in darning his stockings, which he performed to admiration.

Swift.

DA'RNEL. n. f. [lolium.] A weed growing in the fields.

He was met ev'n now
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn.

Shakespeare.

Want ye corn for bread?

'Twas full of darnel; do you like the taste?

Shak.

No fruitful crop the sickly fields return;
But oats and darnel choke the rising corn.

Dryd.

To DA'RRAIN. v. a. [This word is by Junius referred to dare: it seems to me more probably deducible from arranger la bataille.]

1. To prepare for battle; to range troops for battle.

The town-boys parted in twain, the one side calling themselves Pompeians, the other Cæsarians; and then darraining a kind of battle, but without arms, the Cæsarians got the over hand.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Comes Warwick, backing of the duke of York:

Darrain your battle; for they are at hand.

Shak.

2. To apply to the fight: of single combatants.

Therewith they 'gan to hurlen greedily,
Redoubted battle ready to darraine.

Spenser.

DART. n. f. [dard, French.]

1. A missile weapon thrown by the hand; a small lance.

Here one is wounded or slain with a piece of a rock or flint; there another with a dart, arrow, or lance.

Peacham.

O'erwhelm'd with darts, which from afar they sling,

The weapons round his hollow temples ring.

Dryden.

2. [In poetry.] Any missile weapon.

To DART. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To throw offensively.

He whets his tusks, and turns, and dares the war;
Th' invaders dart their jav'lins from afar.

Dryd.

2. To throw; to emit: as, the sun darts his beams on the earth.

Pan came, and ask'd what magick caus'd my smart;

Or what ill eyes malignant glances dart.

Pope.

To DART. v. n.

1. To fly as a dart.

2. To let fly with hostile intention.

Now, darting Parthia, art thou struck.

Shak.

To DASH. v. a. [The etymology of this word, in any of its senses, is very doubtful.]

1. To throw or strike any thing suddenly against something.

1

If you dash a stone against a stone in the bottom of the water, it maketh a sound.

Bacon.

A man that cuts himself, and tears his own flesh, and dashes his head against the stones, does not act so unreasonably as the wicked man.

Tillot.

2. To break by collision.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them;

And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.

Shakespeare.

David's throne shall then be like a tree,

Spreading and overhadowing all the earth;

Or as a stone, that shall to pieces dash

All monarchies besides throughout the world.

Milton.

3. To throw water in flashes.

Dashing water on them may prove the best remedy.

Mortimer.

Middling his head, and prone to earth his view,

With ears and chest that dash the morning dew.

Tichel.

4. To bespatter; to besprinkle.

This tempest,

Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded

The sudden breach on 't.

Shakespeare.

5. To agitate any liquid, so as to make the surface fly off.

At once the brushing oars and brazen prow

Dash up the sandy waves, and ope the depths below.

Dryden.

6. To mingle; to adulterate; to change by some worse admixture.

Whacum, bred to dash and draw,

Not wine, but more unwholesome law.

Hudibras.

I take care to dash the character with such particular circumstances, as may prevent ill-natured applications.

Addison.

Several revealed truths are dashed and adulterated with a mixture of fables and human inventions.

Spectator, N^o 580.

7. To form or sketch in haste, carelessly.

Never was dash'd out, at one lucky hit,

A fool so just a copy of a wit.

Pope.

8. To obliterate; to blot; to cross out.

To dash over this with a line, will deface the whole copy extremely, and to a degree that, I fear, may displease you.

Pope.

9. To confound; to make ashamed suddenly; to surprise with shame or fear; to depress; to suppress.

His tongue

Dropp'd manna, and could make the worse appear

The better reason, to perplex and dash

Maturest councils.

Milton.

Yearly enjoin'd, some say, to undergo

This annual, humbling certain number'd days,

To dash their pride and joy for man seduc'd.

Milton.

An unknown hand still check'd my forward joy,

Dash'd me with blushes.

To dash this cavil, read but the practice of Christian emperors.

South.

After they had sufficiently blasted him in his personal capacity, they found it an easy work to dash and overthrow him in his political.

South.

Nothing dashed the confidence of the mule like the braying of the ass, while he was dilating upon his genealogy.

L'Estrange.

The nymph, when nothing could Narcissus move,

Still dash'd with blushes for her slighted love.

Addison.

Some stronger pow'r eludes our sickly will;

Dashes our rising hope with certain ill.

Prior.

Dash the proud gamester in his gilded car;

Bare the mean heart that lurks beneath a star.

Pope.

To DASH. v. n.

1. To fly off the surface by a violent motion.

If the vessel be suddenly stop'd in its motion, the liquor continues its motion, and dashes over the sides of the vessel.

Cheyne.

2. To fly in flashes with a loud noise.

On each hand the gushing waters play,

And down the rough cascade, all dashing, fall.

Thomson.

3. To rush through water, so as to make it fly.

Doeg, tho' without knowing how or why,

Spurr'd boldly on, and dash'd thro' thick and thin,

Thro' sense and nonsense, never out or in.

Dryd.

DASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Collision.

By the touch ethereal rous'd,

The dash-of clouds, or irritating war

Of fighting winds, while all is calm below,

They furious spring.

Thomson.

2. Infusion; something worse mingled in a small proportion.

There is nothing which one regards so much with an eye of mirth and pity, as innocence, when it has in it a dash of folly.

Addison.

3. A mark in writing; a line —, to note a pause, or omission.

He is afraid of letters and characters, of notes and dashes, which, set together, do signify nothing.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

In modern wit, all printed trash is Set off with num'rous breaks and dashes.

Swift.

4. Sudden stroke; blow; act: ludicrous.

Stand back, you lords, and give us leave awhile.

—She takes upon her bravely at first dash.

Shak.

DASH. adv. An expression of the sound of water dashed.

Hark, hark, the waters fall;

And, with a murmuring sound,

Dash, dash, upon the ground,

To gentle slumbers call.

Dryden.

DA'STARD. n. f. [abartuga, Saxon.]

A coward; a poltron; a man infamous for fear.

The cruelty and envy of the people,

Permitted by our daftard nobles,

Have suffer'd me by th' voice of slaves to be

Whoop'd out of Rome.

Shakespeare.

Who now my matchless valour dare oppose?

How long will Dares wait his daftard foes?

Dryd.

Daftard and drunkard, mean and insolent;

Tongue-valiant hero, vaunter of thy might,

In threats the foremost, but the last in fight.

Dryd.

Bug-bear thoughts, in the minds of children,

Make them daftards, and afraid of the shadow of darkness ever after.

Locke.

Curse on their daftard souls, they stand astonish'd!

Addison.

To DA'STARD. v. a. To terrify; to intimidate; to desert with cowardice; to dispirit.

I am weary of this flesh which holds us here,

And daftards manly souls with hope and fear.

Dryden.

To DA'STARDISE. v. a. [from daftard.]

To intimidate; to deject with cowardice; to dispirit; to depress; to terrify; to make an habitual coward.

He had such things to urge against our marriage,

As, now declar'd, would blunt my sword in battle,

And daftardise my courage.

Dryden.

DA'STARDLY. adj. [from daftard.] Cowardly; mean; timorous.

Brawl and clamour is so arrant a mark of a daftardly wretch, that he does as good as call himself so that uses it.

L'Estrange.

DA'STARDY. n. f. [from daftard.] Cow-ardliness; timorousness.

DA'TARY. n. f. [datarius.] An officer of the chancery of Rome, through whose hands benefices pass.

Diet.

DATE. n. f. [datte, Fr. from datum, Lat.]

1. The time at which a letter is written, marked at the end or the beginning.

2. The

2. The time at which any event happened.
3. The time stipulated when any thing shall be done.

His days : 1 times are past,
And my reliance on his fracted dates
Has smit my credit. Shakespeare's Timon.
My father's promise ties me not to time;
And bonds without a date, they say, are void.
Dryden.

4. End; conclusion.

What time would spare, from steel receives its date;
And monuments, like men, submit to fate. Pope.

5. Duration; continuance.

Could the declining of this fate, O friend,
Our date to immortality extend?
Denham.

Then raise,
From the conflagrant mass, purg'd and refin'd,
New heav'ns, new earth, ages of endless date,
Founded in righteousness. Milton.

6. [from daitylns.] The fruit of the date-tree.

Hold, take these keys, and fetch more spices, nurse.
—They call for dates and quinces in the pastry.
Shakespeare.

DATE-TREE. n. f. See PALM, of which it is a species.

To DATE. v. a. [from the noun.] To note with the time at which any thing is written or done.

'Tis all one, in respect of eternal duration yet behind, whether we begin the world so many millions of ages ago, or date from the late æra of about six thousand years.
Bentley.

To all their dated backs he turns you round;
These Aldes printed, those Du Sueil has bound.
Pope.

DA'TELESS. adj. [from date.] Without any fixed term.

The fly-flow hours shall not determinate
The dateless limit of thy dear exile. Shakespeare.

DA'TIVE. adj. [dativus, Latin.]

1. [In grammar.] The epithet of the case that signifies the person to whom any thing is given.

2. [In law.] Those are termed dativæ executors, who are appointed such by the judge's decree; as administrators with us here in England.
Ayliffe.

To DAUB. v. a. [dabben, Dutch; danber, French.]

1. To smear with something adhesive.

She too for him an ark of bulrushes, and daubed
it with slime and with pitch. Exodus.

2. To paint coarsely.

Hasty daubing will but spoil the picture, and make it so unnatural as must want false light to set it off.
Orway.

They snatched out of his hands a lame imperfect piece, rudely daubed over with too little reflection.
Dryden.

If a picture is daubed with many bright and glaring colours, the vulgar admire it as an excellent piece.
Watts.

3. To cover with something specious or gross, something that disguises what it lies upon.

So smooth he daub'd his vice with shew of virtue,
He liv'd from all attainder of suspect. Shakesp.

4. To lay on any thing gaudily or ostentatiously.

Since princes will have such things, it is better they should be graced with elegance, than daubed with cost.
Bacon.

Let him be daub'd with lace, live high, and where;
Sometimes be lousy, but be never poor. Dryden.

5. To flatter grossly.

Let every one, therefore, attend the sentence of his conscience; for, he may be sure, it will not daub nor flatter. Soub.

To DAUB. v. n. To play the hypocrite: this sense is not in use.

I cannot daub it further;
And yet I must. Shakespeare.

DA'UBER. n. f. [from daub.]

1. One that danbs.
2. A coarse low painter.

What they called his picture, had been drawn at length by the daubers of almost all nations, and still unlike him. Dryden.

Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dauber, to cause laughter. Dryden.

A sign-post dauber would disdain to paint
The one-eyed hero on his elephant. Dryden.

The treacherous tapster, Thomas,
Hangs a new angel two doors from us,
As fine as daubers hands can make it. Swift.

3. A low flatterer.

DA'UBRY. n. f. [from daub.] An old word for any thing artful.

She works by charms, by spells; and such daubry
as this is beyond our element. Shakespeare.

DA'UBY. adj. [from daub.] Viscous; glutinous; adhesive.

Not in vain th' industrious kind
With dauby wax and flow'rs the chinks have lin'd.
Dryden.

Some the gall'd ropes with dauby marling bind,
Or fear-cloth masts with strong tarpawling coats.
Dryden.

DA'UGHTER. n. f. [daubtar, Gothick; bohter, Sax. dotter, Runick; dobter, German; dochter, Dutch.]

1. The female offspring of a man or woman.

Your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakespeare.

Now Aurora, daughter of the dawn,
With rosy lustre purpled o'er the lawn. Pope.

2. A daughter in law, or son's wife.
3. A woman.

Jacob went out to see the daughters of the land.
Genesis.

4. [In poetry.] Any descendant.

5. The female penitent of a confessor.

Are you at leisure, holy father, now;
Or shall I come to you at evening mass? —
—My leisure serves me, pensive daughter, now.
Shakespeare.

To DAUNT. v. a. [domter, French; domitare, Latin.] To discourage; to fright; to intimidate.

Fairfax, whose name in arms thro' Europe rings,
And fills all mouths with envy or with praise,
And all her jealous monarchs with amaze,
And rumours loud, which daunt remotest kings.
Milton.

Where the rude ax, with heaved stroke,
Was never heard the nymphs to daunt,
Or fright them from their hallow'd haunt. Milton.

Some presences daunt and discourage us, when others raise us to a brisk assurance. Glanville.

DA'UNTLESS. adj. [from daunt.] Fearless; not dejected; not discouraged.

Grow great by your example, and put on
The dauntless spirit of resolution. Shakespeare.

Dauntless he rose, and to the fight return'd;
With shame his glowing cheeks, his eyes with fury burn'd. Dryden's Virgil.

He, not by wants or woes oppress'd,
Stems the bold torrent with a dauntless breast.
Dryden.

The utmost weight of affliction from ministerial power and popular hatred, were almost worth bearing, for the glory of such a dauntless conduct as he has shewn under it.
Pope.

DA'UNTLESSNESS. n. f. [from dauntless.] Fearlessness.

DAW. n. f. [supposed by Skinner so named from his note; by Junius to be corrupted from dawl; the German tul, and dol in the Bavarian dialect, having the same signification.] The name of a bird. Menedulu.

I will wear my heart upon my sleeve,
For daws to peck it. Shakespeare's Othello.

If death do quench us quite, we have great wrongs,
That daws, and trees, and rocks should last so long,
When we must in an instant pass to nought. Davies.

The loud daw, his throat displaying, draws
The whole assembly of his fellow daws. Waller.

DAWK. n. f. A cant word among the workmen for a hollow, rupture, or incision, in their stuff.

Observe if any hollow or dawks be in the length.
Moxon.

To DAWK. v. a. To mark with an incision.

Should they apply that side of the tool the edge lies on, the swift coming about of the work would, where a small irregularity of stuff should happen, jobb the edge into the stuff, and so dawk it. Moxon.

To DAWN. v. n. [supposed by the etymologists to have been originally to dayen, or advance towards day.]

1. To grow luminous; to begin to grow light.

I have been troubled in my sleep this night;
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd.
Shakespeare.

As it began to dawn, towards the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene to see the sepulchre. Matthew.

All night I slept, oblivious of my pain;
Aurora dawn'd, and Phæbus shin'd in vain. Pope.

2. To glimmer obscurely.

A Romanist, from the very first dawning of any notions in his understanding, hath this principle constantly inculcated, that he must believe as the church. Locke.

3. To begin, yet faintly; to give some promises of lustre or eminence.

While we behold such dauntless worth appear
In dawning youth, and souls so void of fear.
Dryden.

Thy hand strikes out some free design,
When life awakes and dawns at every line. Pope.

DAWN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The time between the first appearance of light and the sun's rise, reckoned from the time that the sun comes within eighteen degrees of the horizon.

Then on to-morrow's dawn your care employ
To search the land, but give this day to joy.
Dryden.

2. Beginning; first rise.

These tender circumstances diffuse a dawn of serenity over the soul. Pope.

Such their guiltless passion was,
As in the dawn of time inform'd the heart
Of innocence and undissembling truth. Thomson.

DAY. n. f. [bæg, Saxon.]

1. The time between the rising and setting of the sun, called the artificial day.

Why stand ye here all the day idle? Matthew.

Of night impatient, we demand the day;
The day arrives, then for the night we pray:
The night and day successive come and go,
Our lasting pains no interruption know. Blackmore.

Or object new Casual discourse draws on, which intermits
Our day's work. Milton.

2. The time from noon to noon, or from midnight to midnight, called the natural day.

How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year. Shakef.
3. Light; sunshine.
Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness. Romans.
The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day:
Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Around the fields did nimble lightning play,
Which offer'd us by fits, and snatch'd the day:
'Midst this was heard the shrill and tender cry
Of well-pleas'd ghosts, which in the storm did fly.
Dryden.

Yet are we able only to survey
Dawnings of beams, and promises of day. Prior.
4. Any time specified and distinguished from other time; an age; the time. In this sense it is generally plural.
After him reigned Gutheline his heir,
The justest man and truest in his days. Fairy Q.
I think, in these days, one honest man is obliged to acquaint another who are his friends. Pope.
We have, at this time of day, better and more certain means of information than they had.
Woodward.

5. Life: in this sense it is commonly plural. He never in his days broke his word;
that is, in his whole life.
He was never at a loss in his days for a frequent answer. Carte's Life of Ormonde.

6. The day of contest; the contest; the battle.
His name struck fear, his conduct won the day;
He came, he saw, he seiz'd the struggling prey.
Roscommon.
The noble thanes do bravely in the war;
The day almost itself professes yours,
And little is to do. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Would you th' advantage of the fight delay,
If, striking first, you were to win the day? Dryd.

7. An appointed or fixed time.
Or if my debtors do not keep their day,
Deny their hands, and then refuse to pay,
I must with patience all the terms attend. Dryd.
8. A day appointed for some commemoration.
The field of Agincourt,
Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus. Shakef.

9. From day to day; without certainty or continuance.
Bavaria hath been taught, that merit and service doth oblige the Spaniard but from day to day.
Bacon.

TO-DAY. On this day.
To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts. Psalms.
The past is all by death possest,
And frugal fate, that guards the rest,
By giving, bids us live to-day. Fenton.

DAYBED. n. f. [day and bed.] A bed used for idleness and luxury in the day-time.
Calling my officers about me, in my branched velvet gown; having come down from a daybed, where I have left Olivia sleeping.
Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

DAYBOOK. n. f. [from day and book.] A tradesman's journal; a book in which all the occurrences of the day are set down.

DAYBREAK. n. f. [day and break.] The dawn; the first appearance of light.
I watch'd the early glories of her eyes,
As men for daybreak watch the Eastern skies.
Dryden.

DAYLABOUR. n. f. [day and labour.] Labour by the day; labour divided into daily tasks.
Doth God exact daylabour, light denied,
I fondly ask? Milton.
Daylabour was but an hard and a dry kind of livelihood to a man that could get an estate with two or three strokes of his pen. South.

DAYLABOURER. n. f. [from daylabour.]
One that works by the day.
In one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn
That ten daylabourers could not end. Milton.
The daylabourer, in a country village, has commonly but a small pittance of courage. Locke.

DAYLIGHT. n. f. [day and light.] The light of the day, as opposed to that of the moon, or a taper.
By this the drooping daylight 'gan to fade,
And yield his room to sad succeeding night.
Fairy Queen.
Thou shalt buy this dear,
If ever I thy face by daylight see.
Now go thy way. Shakespeare.
They, by daylight passing through the Turks fleet, recovered the haven, to the joy of the besieged Christians. Knolles.
He stands in daylight, and disdains to hide
An act, to which by honour he is tied. Dryden.
Will you murder a man in plain daylight?
Dryden.
Though rough bears in covert seek defence,
White foxes stay, with seeming innocence;
That crafty kind with daylight can dispense.
Dryden.
If bodies be illuminated by the ordinary prismatick colours, they will appear neither of their own daylight colours, nor of the colour of the light cast on them, but of some middle colour between both. Newton's Opticks.

DAY-LILY. n. f. The same with ASPHO-
DEL, which see.

DAYSMAN. n. f. [day and man.] An old word for umpire. Ainsworth. Perhaps rather, surety.
For what art thou,
That mak'st thyself his daysman, to prolong
The vengeance prest? Fairy Queen.

DAYSPRING. n. f. [day and spring.] The rise of the day; the dawn; the first appearance of light.
So all ere dayspring, under conscious night,
Secret they finish'd, and in order set. Milton.
The breath of heav'n fresh-blowing, pure and sweet,
With dayspring born, here leave me to respire.
Milton.

DAYSTAR. n. f. [day and star.] The morning star.
I meant to make her fair, and free, and wise,
Of greatest blood, and yet more good than great:
I meant the daystar should not brighter rise,
Nor lend like influence from his lucent seat.
Ben Jonson.
Sunk though he be beneath the wat'ry floor;
So sinks the day-star in the ocean bed,
And yet anon repairs his drooping head. Milton.

DAYTIME. n. f. [day and time.] The time in which there is light: opposed to night.
In the daytime Fame sitteth in a watch-tower, and flieth most by night; she mingleth things done with things not done, and is a terror to great cities. Bacon.
My ants never brought out their corn but in the night when the moon did shine, and kept it under ground in the daytime. Aldison.

DAYWORK. n. f. [day and work.] Work imposed by the day; daylabour.
True labour in the vineyard of thy lord,
Ere prime thou hast th' imposed daywork done.
Fairfax.

TO DAZE. v. a. [byzas, Saxon.] To overpower with light; to strike with too strong lustre; to hinder the act of seeing by too much light suddenly introduced.

They satote the glistering armies, as they stand,
With quivering beams, which daz'd the wond'ring eye. Fairfax.
Poor human kind, all daz'd in open day,
Err after bliss, and blindly miss their way. Dryd.
DA'ZIED. adj. [rather dazied. See DAISY.] Besprinkled with daisies.
Let us
Find out the prettiest dazied plot we can,
And make him a grave. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

TO DA'ZZLE. v. a. [See DAZE.]
1. To overpower with light; to hinder the action of the sight by sudden lustre.
Fears use to be represented in such an imaginary fashion, as they rather dazzle men's eyes than open them. Bacon.
How is it that some wits are interrupted,
That now they dazzled are, now clearly see?
Deviat.

2. To strike or surprise with splendour.
Those heavenly shapes
Will dazzle now this earthly with their blaze Insufferably bright. Milton.
The places that have either shining sentiments or manners, have no occasion for them: a dazzling expression rather damages them, and serves only to eclipse their beauty. Pope.
Ah, friend! to dazzle let the vain design;
To raise the thought, or touch the heart, be thine.
Pope.

TO DA'ZZLE. v. n. To be overpowered with light; to lose the power of sight.
Dazzle mine eyes? or do I see three suns?
Shakespeare.
Come, boy, and go with me; thy fight is young,
And you shall read when mine begins to dazzle.
Shakespeare.
An overlight maketh the eyes dazzle, insomuch as perpetual looking against the sun would cause blindness. Bacon.
I dare not trust these eyes;
They dance in mists, and dazzle with surprise.
Dryden.

DE'ACON. n. f. [diaconus, Latin.]
1. One of the lowest of the three orders of the clergy.
Likewise must the deacons be grave. 2 Tim. iii. 8.
The constitutions that the apostles made concerning deacons and widows, are very importunately urged. Bp. Sanderson.

2. [In Scotland.] An overseer of the poor.
3. And also the master of an incorporated company.

DE'ACONESS. n. f. [from deacon.] A female officer in the ancient church.

The Dunciad had never been writ, but at his request, and for his deafness; for, had he been able to converse with me, do you think I had amused
my time so ill?
Pope.

2. Unwillingness to hear.

I found such a deafness, that no declaration from the bishops could take place.
King Charles.

DEAL. n. f. [deel, Dutch.]

1. Part.

A great deal of that which had been, was now to be removed out of the church.
Hooker.

2. Quantity; degree of more or less. It was formerly joined with different words, to limit its meaning; as, some deal, in some degree, to some amount: we now either say, a great deal, or a deal without an adjective; but this is commonly, if not always, ludicrous or contemptuous.

When men's affections do frame their opinions, they are in defence of error more earnest, a great deal, than, for the most part, sound believers in the maintenance of truth, apprehending according to the nature of that evidence which scripture yieldeth.
Hooker.

There is, indeed, store of matters, fitter and better a great deal for teachers to spend time and labour in.
Hooker.

To weep with them that weep, doth ease some deal;
Shaksp.

But sorrow flouted at is double death.
What a deal of cold business doth a man mispend the better part of life in! In scattering compliments, and tendering visits.
Ben Jonson.

The charge some deal thee haply honour may,
That noble Dudone had while here he liv'd.
Fairfax.

Possibly some never so much as doubted of the safety of their spiritual estate; and, if so, they have so much the more reason, a great deal, to doubt of it.
South.

The author, who knew that such a design as this could not be carried on without a great deal of artifice and sophistry, has puzzled and perplexed his cause.
Addison.

3. [From the verb to deal.] The art or practice of dealing cards.

How can the muse her aid impart,
Unskill'd in all the terms of art?
Or in harmonious numbers put
The deal, the shuffle, and the cut?
Swift.

4. [deyl, Dutch.] Fir-wood, or the wood of pines.

I have also found, that a piece of deal, far thicker than one would easily imagine, being purposely interposed betwixt my eye, placed in a room, and the clearer daylight, was not only somewhat transparent, but appeared quite through a lovely red.
Boyle on Colours.

To DEAL. v. a. [deelen, Dutch.]

1. To distribute; to dispose to different persons.

Deal thy bread to the hungry, and bring the poor that are cast out to thy house. Isaiab, lviii. 7.
One with a broken truncheon deals his blows.
Dryden.

His lifted arms around his head he throws,
And deals in whistling air his empty blows. Dryd.

The business of mankind, in this life, being rather to act than to know, their portion of knowledge is dealt them accordingly. Addison.

How Spain prepares her banners to unfold,
And Rome deals out her blessings and her gold.
Tickell.

Had the great men of antiquity been possessed of the art of printing, they would have made an advantage of it, in dealing out their lectures to the publick. Addison.

If you dealt out great quantities of strong liquor to the mob, there will be many drunk. Watts.

2. To scatter; to throw about.

Keep me from the vengeance of thy darts,
Which Niobe's devoted issue felt,
When hissing through the skies the feather'd deaths were dealt. Dryden.

3. To give gradually, or one after another.

The nightly mallet deals resounding blows. Gay.

4. To distribute the cards.

To DEAL. v. n.

1. To traffick; to transact business; to trade.

It is generally better to deal by speech than by letter; and by a man himself, than by the mediation of a third. Bacon.

This is to drive a wholesale trade, when all other petty merchants deal but for parcels. Dec. of Piety.

They buy and sell, they deal and traffick. South.

With the fond maids in palmistry he deals,
They tell the secret which he first reveals. Prior.

2. To act between two persons; to inter-vene.

Sometimes he that deals between man and man, raiseth his own credit with both, by pretending greater interest than he hath in either. Bacon.

3. To behave well or ill in any transac-tion.

I doubt not, if he will deal clearly and im-partially, but that he will acknowledge all this to be true. Tillotson.

4. To act in any manner.

Two deep enemies,
Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers,
Are they that I would have thee deal upon. Shak.

5. To DEAL by. To treat well or ill. This seems a vitious use.

Such an one deals not fairly by his own mind, nor conducts his own understanding aright. Locke.

6. To DEAL in. To have to do with; to be engaged in; to practise.

Suiters are so distast'd with delays and abuses, that plain-dealing, in denying to deal in suits at first, is grown not only honourable, but also gracious. Bacon.

The Scripture forbids even the countenancing a poor man in his cause; which is a popular way of preventing justices, that some men have dealt in, though without that success which they proposed to themselves. Atterbury.

Among authors, none draw upon themselves more displeasure than those who deal in political matters. Addison.

True logick is not that noisy thing that deals all in dispute, to which the former ages had de-based it. Watts's Logic.

7. To DEAL with. To treat in any man-ner; to use well or ill.

Neither can the Irish, nor yet the English lords, think themselves wronged, nor hardly dealt with,
to have that which is none of their own given to them. Spenser's Ireland.

Who then shall guide
His people? Who defend? Will they not deal Worse with his followers, than with him they dealt? Milton.

If a man would have his conscience deal clearly with him, he must deal severely with that.
South's Sermons.

God did not only exercise this providence towards his own people, but he dealt thus also with other nations. Tillotson.

But I will deal the more civilly with his two poems, because nothing ill is to be spoken of the dead. Dryden.

You wrote to me with the freedom of a friend, dealing plainly with me in the matter of my own trifles. Pope.

Reflect on the merits of the cause, as well as of the men, who have been thus dealt with by their country. Swift.

8. To DEAL with. To contend with.

If she hated me, I should know what passion to deal with. Sidney.

Gentlemen were commanded to remain in the country, to govern the people, easy to be dealt with whilst they stand in fear. Hayward.

Then you upbraid me; I am pleas'd to see
You're not so perfect, but can fail like me:
I have no God to deal with. Dryden.

To DEALBATE. v. a. [dealbo, Latin.]

To whiten; to bleach.

DEALBATION. n. f. [dealbatio, Latin.]

The act of bleaching or whitening; rendering things white which were not so before: a word in little use.

All seed is white in viviparous animals, and such as have preparing vessels, wherein it receives a manifold dealbation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEALER. n. f. [from deal.]

1. One that has to do with any thing.

I find it common with these small dealers in wit and learning, to give themselves a title from their first adventure. Swift.

2. A trader or trafficker.

Where fraud is permitted and connived at, the honest dealer is always undone, and the knave gets the advantage. Gulliver's Travels.

3. A person who deals the cards.

DEALING. n. f. [from deal.]

1. Practice; action.

Concerning the dealings of men, who administer government, and unto whom the execution of that law belongeth, they have their judge, who sitteth in heaven. Hooker.

What these are!

Whose own hard dealings teach them to suspect
The thoughts of others. Shakspere.

But this was neither one pope's fault, nor one prince's destiny: he must write a story of the empire, that means to tell of all their dealings in this kind. Raleigh.

2. Intercourse.

It were to be wished, that men would promote the happiness of one another, in all their private dealings, among those who lie within their influence. Addison.

3. Measure of treatment; mode in which one treats another.

God's gracious dealings with men, are the aids and auxiliaries necessary to us in the pursuit of piety. Hammond.

4. Traffick; business.

The doctor must needs die rich; he had great dealings in his way for many years. Swift.

DEAMBULATION. n. f. [deambulatio, Latin.] The act of walking abroad.

DE'AMBU-

DEAMBULATORY. adj. [deambulo, Lat.]
Relating to the practice of walking a-broad.

DEAN. n. s. [decans, Latin; doyen, Fr.]
From the Greek word dixa; in English, ten; because he was anciently set over ten canons or prebendaries at least in some cathedral church.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

As there are two foundations of cathedral churches in England, the old and the new (the new are those which Henry VIII. upon suppression of abbey transformed from abbot or prior, and convent, to dean and chapter) so there are two means of creating these deans; for those of the old foundation are brought to their dignity much like bishops, the king first sending out his compt d'elire to the chapter, the chapter then choosing and the bishop confirming them, and giving his mandate to install them. Those of the new foundation are, by a shorter course, installed by virtue of the king's letters patent, without either election or confirmation.

This word is also applied to divers, that are chief of certain peculiar churches or chapels; as the dean of the king's chapel, the dean of the Arches, the dean of St. George's chapel at Windsor, and the dean of Bocking in Essex. Cowell.

The dean and canons, or prebends, of cathedral churches, were of great use in the church; they were not only to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, but chiefly for government in causes ecclesiastical. Use your best means to prefer such to those places who are fit for that purpose. Bacon.

DEANERY. n. s. [from dean.]

1. The office of a dean.

He could no longer keep the deanery of the chapel-royal. Clarendon.

2. The revenue of a dean.

Put both deans in one; or, if that's too much trouble,

Instead of the deans make the deanery double. Swift.

3. The house of a dean.

Take her by the hand, away with her to the deanery, and dispatch it quickly. Shakespeare.

DEANSHIP. n. s. [from dean.] The office and rank of a dean.

DEAR. adj. [deon, Saxon.]

1. Beloved; favourite; darling:

Your brother Gloucester hates you.

—Oh, no, he loves me, and he holds me dear.

Hangs o'er the tomb. Addison's Ovid.

And the last joy was dearer than the rest. Pope.

2. Valuable; of a high price; costly.

What made directors cheat the South-sea year?
To feed on ven'ison when it sold so dear. Pope.

3. Scarce; not plentiful: as, a dear year.

4. It seems to be sometimes used in Shakespeare for dear; sad; hateful; grievous.

What foolish boldness brought thee to their mercies,

Whom thou in terms so bloody, and so dear,
Hast made thine enemies? Shak. Twelfth Night.

Let us return,

And strain what other means is left unto us
In our dear peril. Shakespeare's Timon.

Some dear cause

Will in concealment wrap me up a-while:
When I am known aright, you shall not grieve

Lending me this acquaintance. Shak. King Lear.

Would I had met my dearest foe in heav'n,
Or ever I had seen that day. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Thy other banish'd son, with his dear light Struck pale and bloodless. Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.

DEAR. n. s. A word of endearment; darling.

That kiss

I carried from thee, dear; and my true lip
Hath virgin'd it e'er since. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Go, dear; each minute does new danger bring,
Dryden.

VOL. I.

See, my dear,

How lavish nature has adorn'd the year. Dryden.

DEARBUGHT. adj. [dear and bought.]

He who hates his neighbour mortally, and wisely too, must profess all the deariness and friendship, with readiness to serve him. South.

2. Scarcity; high price.

Landlords prohibit tenants from plowing, which is seen in the deariness of corn. Swift.

DEARNLY. adv. [deorn, Sax.] Secretly; privately; unseen. Obsolete.

At last, as chanc'd them by a forest side
To pass, for succour from the scorching ray,
They heard a rueful voice, that dearnly cried
With piercing shrieks. Spenser.

DEARTH. n. s. [from dear.]

1. Scarcity which makes food dear.

In times of dearth, it drained much coin out of the kingdom, to furnish us with corn from foreign parts. Bacon.

There have been terrible years dearths of corn, and every place is strewn with beggars; but dearths are common in better climates, and our evils here lie much deeper. Swift.

2. Want; need; famine.

Pity the dearth that I have pined in,
By longing for that food so long a time. Shakespeare.

Of every tree that in the garden grows,
Eat freely with glad heart; fear here no dearth. Milton.

3. Barrenness; sterility.

The French have brought on themselves that dearth of plot, and narrowness of imagination, which may be observed in all their plays. Dryden.

He caught his death the last county-sessions, where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow woman. Addison.

8. Destroyer.

All the endeavours Achilles used to meet with Hector, and be the death of him, is the intrigue which comprehends the battle of the last day.

Broome's View of Epic Poetry.

9. [In poetry.] The instrument of death.

Deaths invisible come wing'd with fire;
They hear a dreadful noise, and straight expire. Dryden.

Sounded at once the bow, and swiftly flies
The feather'd death, and hisses thro' the skies. Dryden.

Of, as in airy rings they skim the heath,
The clam'rous lapwings feel the leaden death. Pope.

10. [In theology.] Damnation; eternal torments.

We pray that God will keep us from all sin and wickedness, from our ghostly enemy, and from everlasting death. Church Catechism.

DEATH-BED. n. s. [death and bed.] The bed to which a man is confined by mortal sickness.

Sweet soul, take heed, take heed of perjury;
Thou art on thy death-bed. Shakespeare's Othello.

Thy death-bed is no lesser than the land
Wherein thou liest in reputation sick. Shakespeare's Richard II.

These are such things as a man shall remember with joy upon his death-bed; such as shall cheer and warm his heart, even in that last and bitter agony. South's Sermons.

Then round our death-bed ev'ry friend should run,
And joy us of our conquest early won. Dryd. Fab.

A death-bed figure is certainly the most humbling sight in the world. Collier on the Value of Life.

A death-bed repentance ought not indeed to be neglected, because it is the last thing that we can do. Atterbury.

Fame can never make us lie down contentedly on a death-bed. Pope.

DEATHFUL. adj. [death and full.] Full of slaughter; destructive; murderous.

Time itself, under the deathful shade of whose wings all things wither, hath wasted that lively virtue of nature in man, and beasts, and plants. Raleigh.

Blood, death, and deathful deeds, are in that noise,

Ruin, destruction at the utmost point. Milton.

These eyes behold
The deathful scene; princes on princes roll'd. Pope.

DEATHLESS. adj. [from death.] Immortal; never-dying; everlasting.

God hath only immortality, though angels and human souls be deathless. Boyle.

Their temples wreath'd with leaves that still renew;

For deathless laurel is the victor's due. Dryden.

Faith and hope themselves shall die,
While deathless charity remains. Prior.

DEATHLIKE. adj. [from death and like.] Resembling death; still; gloomy; motionless; placid; calm; peaceful; undisturbed; resembling either the horrors or the quietness of death.

Why dost thou let thy brave soul lie supprest
In deathlike slumbers, while thy dangers crave
A waking eye and hand? Cassano.

A deathlike sleep!

A gentle wafting to immortal life! Milton.

On seas, on earth, and all that in them dwell,
A deathlike quiet and deep silence fell. Waller.

Black melancholy sits, and round her throws
A deathlike slumber, and a dread repose. Pope.

DEATH'S-DOOR. [from death and door.] A near approach to death; the gates of death, πύλαι θανάτου. It is now a low phrase.

I myself knew a person of great sanctity, who was afflicted to death's-door with a vomiting.

Taylor's Worshy Communicant.

Raleigh's Essays.

Not so strictly hath our Lord impos'd Labour, as to debar us when we need Refreshment, whether food, or talk between, Food of the mind. Milton.

Civility, intended to make us easy, is employed in laying chains and fetters upon us, in debarring us of our wishes, and in crossing our most reasonable desires. Swift.

TO DEBASE. v. a. [from base.]

1. To reduce from a higher to a lower state.

Homer intended to teach, that pleasure and sensuality debase men into beasts.

Brown on the Odyssey.

As much as you raise silver, you debase gold, for they are in the condition of two things put in opposite scales; as much as the one rises, the other falls. Locke.

2. To make mean; to sink into meanness; to make despicable; to degrade.

It is a kind of taking God's name in vain, to debase religion with such frivolous disputes.

Hooker.

A man of large possessions has not leisure to consider of every slight expence, and will not debase himself to the management of every trifle.

Dryden.

Restraining others, yet himself not free;
Made impotent by pow'r, debas'd by dignity. Dryd.

3. To sink; to vitiate with meanness.

He ought to be careful of not letting his subject debase his style, and betray him into a meanness of expressions. Addison.

Hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to refuse those which favour the other, is so far from giving truth its due value, that it wholly debases it. Locke.

4. To adulterate; to lessen in value by base admixtures.

He reformed the coin, which was much adulterated and debased in the times and troubles of king Stephen.

Hale.

Words so debas'd and hard, no stone

Was hard enough to touch them on. Hudibras.

DEBASEMENT. n. s. [from debase.] The act of debasing or degrading; degradation.

It is a wretched debasing of that sprightly faculty, the tongue, thus to be made the interpreter to a goat or boar. Government of the Tongue.

DEBASER. n. s. [from debase.] He that debases; he that adulterates; he that degrades another; he that sinks the value of things, or destroys the dignity of persons.

DEBATE. n. s. [from debat, French.]

1. A personal dispute; a controversy.

A way that men ordinarily use, to force others to submit to their judgments, and receive their opinion in debate, is to require the adversary to admit what they allege as a proof, or to assign a better. Locke.

It is to diffuse a light over the understanding, in our enquiries after truth, and not to furnish the tongue with debate and controversy. Watts's Logic.

2. A quarrel; a contest: it is not now used of hostile contest.

Now, lords, if heav'n doth give successful end
To this debate that bleedeth at our doors,
We will our youth lead on to higher fields,
And draw no swords but what are sanctified. Shak.

'Tis thine to ruin realms, o'erturn a state;
Betwixt the dearest friends to raise debate. Dryden.

TO DEBATE. v. a. [from debatre, French.] To controvert; to dispute; to contest.

Debate thy cause with thy neighbour himself, and discover not a secret to another.

TO DEBAUCH. v. a. [from debaucher, French; debacchari, Latin.]

1. To corrupt; to vitiate.

A man must have got his conscience thoroughly debauched and hardened, before he can arrive to the height of sin. South.

This it is to counsel things that are unjust;
First, to debauch a king to break his laws, and then to seek protection. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

2. To corrupt with lewdness.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires,
Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. To corrupt by intemperance.

No man's reason did ever dictate to him, that it is reasonable for him to debauch himself by intemperance and brutish sensuality. Tillotson.

DEBAUCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A fit of intemperance.

He will for some time contain himself within the bounds of sobriety; till within a little while he recovers his former debauch, and is well again, and then his appetite returns. Calamy.

2. Luxury; excess; lewdness.

The first physicians by debauch were made;
Excess began, and sloth sustains, the trade. Dryden.

DEBAUCHE. n. s. [from debauché, French.] A lecher; a drunkard; a man given to intemperance.

Could we but prevail with the greatest debauchers amongst us to change their lives, we should find it no very hard matter to change their judgments.

South.

DEBAUCHER. n. s. [from debauch.] One who seduces others to intemperance or lewdness; a corrupter.

DEBAUCHERY. n. s. [from debauch.] The practice of excess; intemperance; lewdness.

Oppose vices by their contrary virtues; hypocrisy by sober piety, and debauchery by temperance. Spratt.

These magistrates, instead of lessening enormities, occasion just twice as much debauchery as there would be without them. Swift.

DEBAUCHMENT. n. s. [from debauch.] The act of debauching or vitiating; corruption.

They told them ancient stories of the ravishment of chaste maidens, or the debauchment of nations, or the extreme poverty of learned persons.

Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

To

DEBE'L. } v. a. [debello, Lat.]
DEBE'LLATE. } tin. To conquer;
 to overcome in war: not now in use.

It doth notably forth the consent of all nations and ages, in the approbation of the extirpating and debelling of giants, monsters, and foreign tyrants, not only as lawful, but as meritorious even of divine honour. Bacon's Holy War.

Him long of old
 Thou didst debel, and down from heaven cast
 With all his army. Milton.

DEBELLATION. n. f. [from debellatio, Lat.] The act of conquering in war.

DEBENTURE. n. f. [debentur, Lat. from debeo.] A writ or note, by which a debt is claimed.

You modern wits, should each man bring his claim,

Have desperate debentures on your fame;
 And little would be left you, I'm afraid,
 If all your debts to Greece and Rome were paid. Swift.

DE'BILE. adj. [debilis, Lat.] Weak; feeble; languid; faint; without strength; imbecile; impotent.

I have not walk'd my nose that bled,
 Or soil'd some debile wretch, which without note
 There's many else have done. Shakespeare.

DEBILITATE. v. a. [debilito, Latin.] To weaken; to make faint; to enfeeble; to emasculate.

In the lust of the eye, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life, they seemed as weakly to fail as their debilitated posterity ever after.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The spirits being rendered languid, are incapable of purifying the blood, and debilitated in attracting nutriment. Harvey on Consumptions.

DEBILITATION. n. f. [from debilitatio, Latin.] The act of weakening.

The weakness cannot return anything of strength, honour, or safety to the head, but a debilitation and ruin. King Charles.

DEBILITY. n. f. [debilitus, Lat.] Weakness; feebleness; languor; faintness; imbecility.

Methinks I am partaker of thy passion,
 And in thy case do glass mine own debility. Sidney.

DEBONA'IR. adj. [debonnaire, French.] Elegant; civil; well-bred; gentle; complaisant: an obsolete word.

Crying, let be that lady debonair,
 Thou recreant knight, and soon thyself prepare
 To battle, if thou mean her love to gain. Spenser.

Zephyr met her once a-maying;
 Fill'd her with thee, a daughter fair,
 So buxom, blithe, and debonair. Milton.

The nature of the one is debonair and accostable; of the other, retired and supercilious; the one quick and sprightly, the other slow and saturnine. Howell's Vocal Forest.

And she that was not only passing fair,
 But was withal discreet and debonair,
 Resolv'd the passive doctrine to fulfil. Dryden.

DEBONA'IRLY. adv. [from debonair.] Elegantly; with a genteel air.

DEBT. n. f. [debitum, Latin; dette, Fr.]

1. That which one man owes to another.
 There was one that died greatly in debt: Well, says one, if he be gone, then he hath carried five hundred ducats of mine with him into the other world. Bacon's Apphithegms.

The debt of ten thousand talents, which the servant owed the king, was no slight ordinary sum. Duppa's Devotions.

To this great loss a sea of tears is due;
 But the whole debt not to be paid by you. Waller.

Swift, a thousand pounds in debt,
 Takes horse, and in a mighty fret
 Rides day and night. Swift.

2. That which any one is obliged to do or suffer.

Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt;
 He only liv'd but till he was a man,
 But like a man he died. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

DECENCY. } cet, Latin.]

1. Propriety of form; proper formality; becoming ceremony: decence is seldom used.

Those thousand decencies, that daily flow
From all her words and actions. Milton.

In good works there may be goodness in the general: but decence and gracefulness can be only in the particulars in doing the good. Spratt.

Were the offices of religion stript of all the external decencies of worship, they would not make a due impression on the minds of those who assist at them. Atterbury.

She speaks, behaves, and acts just as she ought;
But never, never reach'd one gen'rous thought:
Virtue she finds too painful an endeavour,
Content to dwell in decencies for ever. Pope.

2. Suitableness to character; propriety.

And must I own, she said, my secret smart,
What with more decence were in silence kept?
Dryden.

The consideration immediately subsequent to the being of a thing, is what agrees or disagrees with that thing; what is suitable or unsuitable to it; and from this springs the notion of decency or indecency, that which becomes or misbecomes. South.

Sentiments which raise laughter, can very seldom be admitted with any decency into an heroic poem. Addison.

3. Modesty; not ribaldry; not obscenity.

Immodest words admit of no defence;
For want of decency is want of sense. Roscommon.

Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base declension. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Take the picture of a man in the greenness and vivacity of his youth, and in the latter date and declension of his drooping years, and you will scarce know it to belong to the same person. South's Sermons.

2. Declination; descent.

We may reasonably allow as much for the declension of the land from that place to the sea, as for the immediate height of the mountain. Burnet's Theory.

3. Inflexion; manner of changing nouns.

Declension is only the variation or change of the termination of a noun, whilst it continues to signify the same thing. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

DECLINABLE. adj. [from decline.] Having variety of terminations: as, a declinable noun.

DECLINATION. n. f. [declinatio, Latin.]

1. Descent; change from a better to a worse state; diminution of vigour; decay.

The queen, hearing of the declination of a monarchy, took it so ill, as she would never after hear of his suit. Bacon.

Two general motions all animations have, that is, their beginning and increase; and two more, that is, their state and declination. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Hope waits upon the flow'ry prime;

And summer, though it be less gay,

Yet is not look'd on as a time

Of declination or decay. Waller.

2. The act of bending down: as, a declination of the head.

3. Variation from rectitude; oblique motion; obliquity.

Supposing there were a declination of atoms, yet will it not effect what they intend; for then they do all decline, and so there will be no more concourse than if they did perpendicularly descend. Ray.

This declination of atoms in their descent, was itself either necessary or voluntary. Bentley.

4. Deviation from moral rectitude.

That a peccant creature should disapprove and repent of every declination and violation of the rules of just and honest, this right reason, discoursing upon the stock of its own principles, could not but infer. South's Sermons.

5. Variation from a fixed point.

There is no declination of latitude, nor variation of the elevation of the pole, notwithstanding what some have asserted. Woodward.

6. [In navigation.] The variation of the needle from the direction to north and south.

7. [In astronomy.] The declination of a star, we call its shortest distance from the equator. Brown.

8. [In grammar.] The declension or inflection of a noun through its various terminations.

9. DECLINATION of a Plane [in dialling] is an arch of the horizon, comprehended either between the plane and the prime vertical circle, if accounted from the east or west; or else between the meridian and the plane, if accounted from the north or south. Harris.

DECLINATOR. n. f. [from decline.]

DECLINATORY. n. f. An instrument in dialling, by which the declination, reclination, and inclination of planes are determined. Chambers.

There are several ways to know the several planes; but the readiest is by an instrument called a declinatory, fitted to the variation of your place. Mason.

TO DECLINE. v. n. [declino, Latin.]

See in what time the seeds, set in the increase of the moon, come to a certain height, and how they differ from those that are set in the decrease of the moon. Bacon.

To DECRETE. v. n. [decretum, Latin.]

To make an edict; to appoint by edict; to establish by law; to determine; to resolve.

They shall see the end of the wise, and shall not understand what God in his counsel hath decreed of him. Wisd. iv.

Father eternal! thine is to decree;
 Mine, both in heav'n and earth, to do thy will. Milton.

Had heav'n decreed that I should life enjoy,
 Heav'n had decreed to save unhappy Troy. Dryd.

To DECRETE. v. a. To doom or assign by a decree.

Thou shalt also decree a thing, and it shall be established. Jeb.

The

The king their father,
On just and weighty reasons, has decreed
His sceptre to the younger. Rowe.

DECREE. n. f. [decretum, Latin.]

1. An edict; a law.

If you deny me, lie upon your law!
There is no force in the decrees of Venice. Shak.
There went a decree from Cæsar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed, Luke, ii. 1.
Are we condemn'd by fate's unjust decrees
No more our houses and our homes to see? Dryd.
The Supreme Being is sovereignly good; he rewards the just, and punishes the unjust: and the folly of man, and not the decrees of heaven, is the cause of human calamity. Broom.

2. An established rule.

When he made a decree for the rain, and a way for the lightning of the thunder. Job, xxviii. 26.
3. A determination of a suit, or litigated cause.

4. [In canon law.] An ordinance, which is enacted by the pope himself, by and with the advice of his cardinals in council assembled, without being consulted by any one thereon. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DECREMENT. n. f. [decrementum, Latin.]

Decrease; the state of growing less; the quantity lost by decreasing.

Upon the tropick, and first descension from our solstice, we are scarce sensible of declination; but declining farther, our decrement accelerates: we set apace, and in our last days precipitate into our graves. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Rocks, mountains, and the other elevations of the earth, suffer a continual decrement, and grow lower and lower. Woodward.

DECREPIT. adj. [decrepitus, Latin.]

Wasted and worn out with age; in the last stage of decay.

Decrepit miser! base, ignoble wretch! Shakesp.
Of men's lives, in this decrepit age of the world,
many exceed fourscore, and some an hundred years.
Raleigh.

This pope is decrepit, and the bell goeth for him:
take order that there be chosen a pope of fresh years.
Bacon.

Decrepit superstitions, and such as had their nativity in times beyond all history, are fresh in the observation of many heads. Brown's Vulgar Err.

And from the north to call Decrepit Winter. Milton.

Who this observes, may in his body find Decrepit age, but never in his mind. Denham.

Propp'd on his staff, and stooping as he goes,
A painted mitre shades his furrow'd brows;
The god, in this decrepit form array'd,
The gardens enter'd, and the fruits survey'd. Pope.

The charge of witchcraft inspires people with a malevolence towards those poor decrepit parts of our species, in whom human nature is defaced by infirmity and dotage. Addison.

TO DECREPITATE. v. a. [decrepo, Latin.] To calcine salt till it has ceased to crackle in the fire.

So will it come to pass in a pot of salt, although decrepitated. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DECREPITATION. n. f. [from decrepi-tate.] The crackling noise which salt makes, when put over the fire in a cru-cible. Quincy.

DECREPITNESS. n. f. [from decrepit.]

DECREPITUDE. n. f. The last stage of decay; the last effects of old age.

Mother earth, in this her barrenness and decrepitude of age, can procreate such swarms of curious engines. Bentley.

DECRESCENT. adj. [from decrescens, Latin.] Growing less; being in a state of decrease.

DECRETAL. adj. [decretum, Latin.] Appertaining to a decree; containing a decree.

A decretal epistle is that which the pope decrees either by himself, or else by the advice of his cardinals; and this must be on his being consulted by some particular person or persons thereon.

Ayliffe's Parergon.
DECRETAL. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A book of decrees or edicts; a body of laws.

The second room, whose walls
Were painted fair with memorable gifts
Of magistrates, of courts, of tribunals,
Of laws, of judgments, and of decretals. Spenser.

2. The collection of the pope's decrees.

Traditions and decretals were made of equal force,
and as authentical as the sacred charter itself.

Howell's Vocal Forcst.

DECRETIST. n. f. [from decree.] One that studies or professes the knowledge of the decretal.

The decretists had their rise and beginning under the reign of the emperor Frederick Barbarossa.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

DECAETORY. adj. [from decree.]

1. Judicial; definitive.

There are lenitives that friendship will apply, before it will be brought to the decetory rigours of a condemning sentence. South's Sermons.

2. Critical; in which there is some definitive event.

The motions of the moon, supposed to be measured by sevens, and the critical or decetory days, depend on that number. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DECRIAL. n. f. [from decry.] Clamorous censure; hasty or noisy condemnation; concurrence in censuring any thing.

TO DECRIE. v. a. [decrier, French.] To censure; to blame clamorously; to clamour against.

Malice in criticks reigns so high,
That for small errors they whole plays decry.
Dryden.

Those measures, which are extolled by one half of the kingdom, are naturally decried by the other.
Addison.

They applied themselves to lessen their authority, decried them as hard and unnecessary restraints.
Rogers.

Quacks and impostors are still cautioning us to beware of counterfeits, and decry others cheats only to make more way for their own. Swift.

DECU'MBENCE. n. f. [decumbens, Lat.]

DECU'MBENCY. n. f. The act of lying down;
the posture of lying down.

This must come to pass, if we hold opinion they lie not down, and enjoy no decumbence at all;
for station is properly no rest, but one kind of motion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Not considering the ancient manner of decum-bency, he imputed this gesture of the beloved disciple unto rusticity, or an act of incivility.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.
DECU'MBITUAE. n. f. [from decumbens,
Latin.]

1. The time at which a man takes to his bed in a disease.

2. [In astrology.] A scheme of the heavens erected for that time, by which the prognosticks of recovery or death are discovered.

If but a mile she travel out of town,
The planetary hour must first be known,
And lucky moment: if here eye but akes,
Or itches, its decumbiture she takes. Dryden.

DE'CU'PLE. adj. [decuplus, Latin.] Tenfold; the same number ten times repeated.

Man's length, that is, a perpendicular from the vertex unto the sole of the foot, is decuple unto his profundity; that is, a direct line between the breast and the spine. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Supposing there be a thousand sorts of insects in this island, if the same proportion holds between the insects of England and of the world, as between plants domestick and exotick, that is, near a decu-ple, the species of insects will amount to ten thousand. Ray.

DECU'RION. n. f. [decurio, Lat.] A commander over ten; an officer subordinate to the centurion.

He instituted decurions through both these colonies, that is, one over every ten families. Temple.

DECU'RSION. n. f. [decursus, Latin.] The act of running down.

What is decayed by that decursion of waters, is supplied by the terrene sacces which water brings.
Hale.

DECURTATION. n. f. [decurtatio, Latin.]
The act of cutting short, or shortening.

TO DECUSSATE. v. a. [decusso, Latin.]
To intersect at acute angles.

This it performs by the action of a notable muscle on each side, having the form of the letter X, made up of many fibres, decussating one another longways. Ray.

DECUSSATION. n. f. [from decussate.]
The act of crossing; state of being crossed at unequal angles.

Though there be decussation of the rays in the pupil of the eye, and so the image of the object in the retina, or bottom of the eye, be inverted; yet doth not the object appear inverted, but in its right or natural posture. Ray.

TO DEDECORATE. v. a. [dedecoro, Latin.] To disgrace; to bring a reproach upon. Diß.

DEDECORATION. n. f. [from dedecorate.]
The act of disgracing; disgrace. Diß.

DEDECOROUS. adj. [dedecus, Lat.] Disgraceful; reproachful; shameful. Diß.

DEDENTITION. n. f. [de and dentitio,
Latin.] Loss or shedding of the teeth.

Solon divided life into ten septenaries, because in every one thereof a man received some sensible mutation: in the first is dedentition, or falling of teeth.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO DEDICATE. v. a. [dedico, Latin.]

1. To devote to some divine power; to consecrate and set apart to sacred uses.

A pleasant grove
Was shot up high, full of the stately tree
That dedicated is to Olympick Jove,
And to his son Alcides. Spencer.

The princes offered for dedicating the altar, in the day that it was anointed. Num. vii. 10.

Warn'd by the fear, to her offended name
We rais'd, and dedicate, this wond'rous frame.
Dryden.

2. To appropriate solemnly to any person or purpose.

There cannot be
That vulture in you, to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves. Shakesp.

Ladies, a gen'ral welcome from his grace
Salutes you all: this night he dedicates
To fair content and you. Shakesp.

He went to learn the profession of a soldier, to which he had dedicated himself. Clarendon.

Bid her instant wed,
And quiet dedicate her remnant life
To the just duties of an humble wife. Prior.

3. To inscribe to a patron.

He compiled ten elegant books, and dedicated them to the lord Burghley. Peacocks.

DEDICATE. adj. [from the verb.] Consecrate; devote; dedicated; appropriate.

Pray're from preserved souls,
From fasting maids, whose names are dedicate
To nothing temporal. Shakespeare.

This tenth part, or tithe, being thus assigned unto him, leaveth now to be of the nature of the other nine parts, which are given us for our worldly necessities, and becometh as a thing dedicate and appropriate unto God. Spelman.

DEDICATION. n. f. [dedicatio, Latin.]

1. The act of dedicating to any being or purpose; consecration; solemn appropriation.

It cannot be laid to many men's charge, that they have been so curious as to trouble bishops with placing the first stone in the churches; or so scrupulous as, after the erection of them, to make any great ado for their dedication. Hooker.

Among publick solemnities there is none so glorious as that under the reign of king Solomon, at the dedication of the temple. Addison.

2. An address to a patron.

Proud as Apollo on his forked hill,
Sat full-blown Bufo, puff'd by ev'ry quill;
Fed by soft dedication all day long,
Horace and he went hand in hand in song. Pope.

DEDICATOR. n. f. [from dedicate.] One who inscribes his work to a patron with compliment and servility.

Leave dang'rous truths to unsuccessful satires,
And flattery to fulsome dedicators. Pope.

DEDICATORY. adj. [from dedicate.] Composing a dedication; complimentary;
adulatory.

Thus I should begin my epistle, if it were a dedicatory one; but it is a friendly letter. Pope.

DEDITION. n. f. [deditio, Latin.] The act of yielding up any thing; surrendry.

It was not a complete conquest, but rather a dedition upon terms and capitulations agreed between the conqueror and the conquered. Hale.

TO DEDUCE. v. a. [deduco, Latin.]

1. To draw in a regular connected series, from one time or one event to another.

I will deduce him from his cradle, through the deep and lubric waves of state and court, till he was swallowed in the gulph of fatality. Wolton Buck.

O goddess, say, shall I deduce my rhimes
From the dire nation in its early times? Pope.

2. To form a regular chain of consequential propositions.

Reason is nothing but the faculty of deducing unknown truths from principles already known. Locke.

3. To lay down in regular order, so as that the following shall naturally rise from the foregoing.

Lend me your song, ye nightingales! oh pour
The mazy-running soul of melody
Into my varied verse! while I deduce,
From the first note the hollow cuckoo sings,
The symphony of spring. Thomson.

DEDUCEMENT. n. f. [from deduce.] The thing deduced; the collection of reason;
consequential proposition.

Praise and prayer are his due worship, and the rest of those deducements which I am confident are the remote effects of revelation. Dryden.

DEDUCIBLE. adj. [from deduce.] Collectible by reason; consequential; discoverable from principles laid down.

The condition, although deducible from many grounds, yet shall we evidence it but from few. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The general character of the new earth is pa-radisaical; and the particular character, that it hath no sea: and both are apparently deducible from its formation. Burnet.

So far, therefore, as conscience reports any thing agreeable to or deducible from these, it is to be acknowledged. South.

VOL. I.

All properties of a triangle depend on, and are deducible from, the complex idea of three lines, including a space. Locke.

DEDUCIVE. adv. [from deduce.] Performing the act of deduction. DiA.

TO DEDUCT. v. a. [deduco, Latin.]

1. To substract; to take away; to cut off; to defalcate.

We deduct from the computation of our years that part of our time which is spent in incogitancy of infancy. Norris.

2. To separate; to dispart; to divide.
Now not in use.

Having yet, in his deducted spright,
Some sparks remaining of that heavenly fire. Spenser.

DEDUCTION. n. f. [deductio, Latin.]

1. Consequential collection; consequence; proposition drawn from principles premised.

Out of scripture such duties may be deduced,
by some kind of consequence; as by long circuit of deduction it may be that even all truth, out of any truth, may be concluded. Hooker.

Set before you the moral law of God, with such deductions from it as our Saviour hath drawn, or our own reason, well informed, can make. Duppa.

That by diversity of motions we should spell out things not resembled by them, we must attribute to some secret deduction; but what this deduction should be, or by what mediums this knowledge is advanced, is as dark as ignorance. Glanville.

You have laid the experiments together in such a way, and made such deductions from them, as I have not hitherto met with. Boyle.

All cross and distasteful humours are either expressly, or by clear consequence and deduction, for-bidden in the New Testament. Tilloson.

A reflection so obvious, that natural instinct seems to have suggested it even to those who never much attended to deductions of reason. Rogers.

2. That which is deducted; defalcation.

Bring then these blessings to a strict account;
Make fair deductions; see to what they mount. Pope.

DEDUCTIVE. adj. [from deduct.] Deducible; that which is or may be deduced from a position premised.

All knowledge of causes is deductive; for we know none by simple intuition, but through the mediation of their effects. Glanville.

DEDUCTIVELY. adv. [from deductive.]
Consequentially; by regular deduction;
by a regular train of ratiocination.

There is scarce a popular error passant in our days, which is not either directly expressed, or de-ductively contained, in this work. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEED. n. f. [dæd, Saxon; daed, Dutch.]

1. Action, whether good or bad; thing done.

From lowest place when virtuous things proceed,
The place is dignified by th' doer's deed. Shak.

The monster nought replied; for words were vain,

And deeds could only deeds unjust maintain. Dryd.

The same had not consented to the council and deed. Luke.

We are not secluded from the expectation of reward for our charitable deeds. Smalridge's Sermons.

2. Exploit; performance.

I, on the other side,
Us'd no ambition to commend my deeds;
The deeds themselves, tho' mute, spoke loud the doer. Milton.

Thousands were there, in darker fame that dwell,
Whose deeds some nobler poem shall adorn. Dryd.

3. Power of action; agency.

Nor knew I not
To be with will and deed created free. Milton.

4. Act declaratory of an opinion.

They desire, with strange absurdity, that to the same senate it should belong to give full judgment in matter of excommunication, and to absolve whom it pleased them; clean contrary to their own former deeds and oaths. Hooker.

5. Written evidence of any legal act.

The solicitor gave an evidence for a deed, which was impeached to be fraudulent. Bacon.

He builda his house upon the sand, and writes the deeds by which he holds his estate upon the face of a river. South.

6. Fact; reality; the contrary to fiction:
whence the word indeed.

O that, as oft I have at Athens seen
The stage arise, and the big clouds descend;
So now in very deed I might behold
The pond'rous earth, and all yon marble roof,
Meet like the hands of Jove. Lee's Oedipus.

DEEDLESS. adj. [from deed.] Unactive;
without action; without exploits.

Speaking in deeds, and deedless in his tongue. Shakespeare.

Instant, he cried, your female discord end,
Ye deedless boasters! and the song attend. Pope.

TO DEEM. v. n. part. dempt, or deemed.
[domgan, Gothick; doemen, Dutch; de-man, Saxon.]

1. To judge; to conclude upon consideration; to think; to opine; to determine.

Here eke that famous golden apple grew,
For which th' Idean ladies disagreed,
Till partial Paris dempt it Venus' due. Spenser.

So natural is the union of religion with justice, that we may boldly deem there is neither, where both are not. Hooker.

He who, to be deem'd
A god, leap'd fondly into Aetna flames. Milton.

These blessings, friend, a deity bestow'd;
For never can I deem him less than god. Dryden.

Nature, disturb'd,
Is deem'd vindictive to have chang'd her course. Thomson.

2. To estimate; to make estimate of: this sense is now disused.

Do me not to dy,
Ne deem thy force by fortune's doom unjust,
That hath, maugre her spite, thus low me laid in dust. Spenser.

But they that skill not of so heavenly matter,
All that they know not, envy, or admire,
Rather than envy, let them wonder at her,
But not to deem of her desert aspire. Spenser.

DEEM. n. f. [from the verb.] Judgment;
surmise; opinion. Not now in use.

Hear me, my love, be thou but true of heart,
—I true! how now? what wicked deem is this? Shakespeare.

DEEMSTER. n. f. [from deem.] A judge:
a word yet in use in Jersey and the Isle of Man.

DEEP. adj. [deep, Saxon.]

1. Having length downwards; descending far; profound: opposed to shallow.

All trees in high and sandy grounds are to be set deep, and in watry grounda more shallow. Bacon.

The gaping gulph low to the centre lies,
And twice as deep as earth is distant from the skies. Dryden.

2. Low in situation; not high.

3. Measured from the surface downward.

Mr. Halley, in diving deep into the sea in a diving vessel, found, in a clear sun-shine day, that when he was sunk many fathoms deep into the water, the upper part of his hand, on which the sun shone directly, appeared of a red colour. Newton.

4. Entering far; piercing a great way.

This avarice
Strikes deeper, grows with more pernicious root. Shakespeare.

For,

For, even in that season of the year, the ways
in that vale were very deep. Clarendon.

Thou hast not strength such labours to sustain:
Drink heliebore, my boy! drink deep, and scour thy brain. Dryden.

5. Far from the outer part.

So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
Deep a bush'd in her silent den does lie. Dryden.

6. Not superficial; not obvious.

If the matter be knotty, and the sense lies deep,
the mind must stop and buckle to it, and stick upon it with labour and thought, and close contemplation. Locke.

7. Sagacious; penetrating; having the power to enter far into a subject.

Who hath not heard it spoken,
How deep you were within the books of heav'n?
Shakespeare.

The spirit of deep prophecy he hath. Shaksp.
He's meditating with two deep divines. Shak.

He in my ear
Vented much policy and projects deep
Of enemies, of aids, battles, and leagues,
Plausible to the world, to me worth nought. Milt.
I do not discover the helps which this great man of deep thought intentions. Locke.

8. Full of contrivance; politick; insidious.

When I have most need to employ a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he to me. Shakespeare's Richard III.

9. Grave; solemn.

O God! if my deep pray'rs cannot appease thee,
But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone. Shak. R. III.

Nor awful Phœbus was on Pindus heard
With deeper silence, or with more regard. Dryden.

10. Dark-coloured.

With deeper brown the grove was overspread.
Dryden.

Attracts the hapless youth through storms and waves,

Alone in deep of night. Philips.

To DEEPEN. v. a. [from deep.]

1. To make deep; to sink far below the surface.

The city of Rome would receive a great advantage from the undertaking, as it would raise the banks and deepen the bed of the Tiber. Addison.

2. To darken; to cloud; to make dark.

You must deepen your colours so, that the argument may be the highest. Pearson.

3. To make sad or gloomy. See DEEP.

Her gloomy presence saddens all the scene,
Shades ev'ry flower, and darkens ev'ry green,

Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,
And breathes a browner horror on the woods. Pope.

DEEP-MOUTHED. adj. [from deep and mouth.]

Having a hoarse and loud voice.

Huntman, I charge thee, tender welcom'g hounds;
And couple Clowder with the deep. Shaksp.

Behold the English beach
Piles in the flood with men, with wives and boys, Whose shouts and claps outvoice that deep-mouth'd
sea. Shakespeare.

Then toils for beasts, and lime for birds were found,

And deep-mouth'd dogs did forest walks surround.
Dryden.

Hills, dales, and forests far behind remain,
While the warm scent draws on the deep-mouth'd train. Gay.

DEEP-MUSING. adj. [from deep and musé.]

Contemplative; lost in thought.

Definitively thus I answer you:

Your love deserves my thanks; but my desert Unmeritable, shuns your high request. Shakespeare.

Bellarmino saith, because we think that the body of Christ may be in many places at once, locally and visibly; therefore we say and hold, that the same body may be circumscriptively and definitively in more places at once. Hall.

That Methuselah was the longest lived of all the children of Adam, we need not grant; nor is it definitively set down by Moses. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEFINITIVENESS. n. f. [from definitive.]

Decisiveness. Diſt.

DEFLAGRABILITY. n. f. [from deflagro, Lat.]

Combustibility; the quality of taking fire, and burning totally away.

We have spent more time than the opinion of the ready deflagrability, if I may so speak, of saltpetre did permit us to imagine. Boyle.

DEFLAGRABLE. adj. [from deflagro, Latin.]

Having the quality of wasting away wholly in fire, without any remains.

Our chymical oils, supposing that they were exactly pure, yet they would be, as the best spirit of wine is, but the more inflammable and deflagrable. Boyle.

DEFLAGRATION. n. f. [deflagratio, Lat.]

A term frequently made use of in chymistry, for setting fire to several things in their preparation; as in making Æthiops with fire, with sal prunellæ, and many others. Quincy.

The true reason why paper is not burned by the flame that plays about it, seems to be, that the aqueous part of the spirit of wine, being imbibed by the paper, keeps it so moist, that the flame of the sulphureous parts of the same spirit cannot fasten on it; and therefore, when the deflagration is over, you shall always find the paper moist. Boyle.

To DEFLECT. v. n. [deflecto, Lat.]

To turn aside; to deviate from a true course, or right line.

At some parts of the Azores the needle deflecteth not, but lieth in the true meridian: on the other side of the Azores, and this side of the equator, the north point of the needle wheeleth to the west. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

For, did not some from a straight course deflect, They could not meet, they could no world erect. Blackmore.

DEFLECTION. n. f. [from deflecto, Lat.]

1. Deviation; the act of turning aside.

Needles incline to the south on the other side of the equator; and at the very line, or middle circle, stand without deflection. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

2. A turning aside, or out of the way.

3. [In navigation.] The departure of a ship from its true course.

DEFLEXURE. n. f. [from deflecto, Latin.]

DEFLUXION. n. f. [defluxio, Lat.] The flow of humours downwards.

We see that taking cold moveth looseness, by contraction of the skin and outward parts; and so doth cold likewise cause rheums and defluxions from the head. Bacon.

DEFTLY. adv. [from deft.] Dexterously; skilfully. Obsolete. Properly deftly.

Lo, how finely the graces can it foot
To the instrument;
They dauncen deftly, and singen soote,
In their merriment. Spenser.

DEFOEDATION. n. f. [from defœdus, Lat.]

The act of making filthy; pollution. This is no English word; at least, to make it English, it should be written defœdation.

What native unextinguishable beauty must be impressed and instilled through the whole, which the defœdation of so many parts by a bad printer, and a worse editor, could not hinder from shining forth! Bentley.

DEFOECMENT. n. f. [from force.] A withholding of lands and tenements by force from the right owner.

TO DEFORM. v. a. [deformo, Lat.]

1. To disfigure; to make ugly; to spoil the form of any thing.

I that am curtail'd of all fair proportion,

Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up. Shakespeare.

Wintry blasts
Deform the year delightful. Thomson.

2. To dishonour; to make ungraceful.

Old men with dust deform'd their hoary hair. Dryden.

DEFORM. adj. [deformis, Lat.] Ugly; disfigured; of an irregular form.

I did proclaim,
That who so kill'd that monster most deform,
Should have mine only daughter to his dame. Spenser.

So spake the grievly terror; and in shape,
So speaking and so threatening, grew tenfold
More dreadful and deform. Milton.

Sight so deform what heart of rock could long Dry-eyed behold? Milton.

DEFORMATION. n. f. [deformatio, Lat.] A defacing; a disfiguring.

DEFORMED. participial adj. Ugly; wanting natural beauty.

DEFORMEDLY. adv. [from deform.] In an ugly manner.

DEFORMITY. n. f. [deformitas, Lat.]

1. Ugliness; ill-favouredness.

I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
And descant on mine own deformity. Shakespeare.
Propper deformity seems not in the fiend
So horrid as in woman. Shakespeare.

Where sits deformity to mock my body,
To shape my legs of an unequal size,
To disproportion me in every part. Shakespeare.
Why should not man,
Retaining still divine similitude

In part, from such deformities be free,
And, for his Maker's image sake, exempt? Milton.

2. Ridiculousness; the quality of something worthy to be laughed at, or censured.

In comedy there is somewhat more of the worse likeness to be taken, because it is often to produce laughter, which is occasioned by the sight of some deformity. Dryden.

3. Irregularity; inordinateness.

No glory is more to be envied than that of due reforming either church or state, when deformities are such, that the perturbation and novelty are not like to exceed the benefit of reforming. K. Charles.

DEFORSOR. n. f. [from forceur, Fr.] One that overcomes and casteth out by force. A law term. Blount.

TO DEFRAUD. v. a. [defraudo, Latin.]

To rob or deprive by a wile or trick; to cheat; to cozen; to deceive; to beguile: with of before the thing taken by fraud.

That no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter, because that the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified. Thiss. iv. 6.

My son, defraud not the poor of his living, and make not the needy eyes to wait long. Ecclus. iv. 1.

Churches seem injured and defrauded of their right, when places, not sanctified as they are, prevent them unnecessarily in that preeminence and honour. Hunter.

There they, who brothers better claim disown,
Expel their parents, and usurp the throne;
Defraud their clients, and, to lucre sold,
Sit brooding on unprofitable gold. Dryden.

But now he seiz'd Briscas' heav'nly charms,
And of my valour's prize defrauds my arms. Pope.

There is a portion of our lives which every wise man may justly reserve for his own particular use, without defrauding his native country. Dryden.

DEFRAUDATION. n. f. [defraudo, Lat.] Privation by fraud.

Their impostures are worse than any other, deluding not only into pecuniary defraudations, but the irreparable deceit of death. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEFRAUDER. n. f. [from defraud.] A deceiver; one that cheats.

The profligate in morals grow severe,
Defrauders just, and sycophants sincere. Blackmore.

TO DEFRA'Y. v. a. [defrayer, Fr.] To bear the charges of; to discharge expences.

He would, out of his own revenue, defray the charges belonging to the sacrifices. 2 Mac. ix. 16.

It is easy to lay a charge upon any town; but to foresee how the same may be answered and defrayed, is the chief part of good advisement. Spenser's State of Ireland.

It is long since any stranger arrived in this part, and therefore take ye no care; the state will defray you all the time you stay; neither shall you stay one day the less for that. Bacon.

DEFRA'YER. n. f. [from defray.] One that discharges expences.

DEFRA'YMENT. n. f. [from defray.] The payment of expences.

That he would labour my delivery. Shakespeare.

3. A surrender; act of giving up.

After the delivery of your royal father's person into the hands of the army, I undertaking to the queen mother, that I would find some means to get access to him, she was pleased to send me. Denk.

Nor did he in any degree contribute to the delivery of his house, which was at first imagined, because it was so ill, or not at all, defended. Clarendon.

4. Utterance; pronunciation; speech.

We allege what the scriptures themselves do usually speak, for the saving force of the word of God; not with restraint to any certain kind of delivery, but howsoever the same shall chance to be made known. Hooker.

I was charmed with the gratefulness of his figure and delivery, as well as with his discourses. Addison.

5. Use of the limbs; activity.

Musidorus could not perform any action on horse or foot more strongly, or deliver that strength more nimbly, or become the delivery more gracefully, or employ all more virtuously. Sidney.

The earl was the taller, and much the stronger; but the duke had the neater limbs, and freer delivery. Wotton.

6. Childbirth.

Like as a woman with child, that draweth near the time of her delivery, is in pain, and crieth out. Isaiah, xxv. 7.

DELL. n. f. [from dal, Dutch.] A pit; a hole in the ground; any cavity in the earth, wider than a ditch and narrower than a valley. Obsolete.

The while, the same unhappy ewe,
Whose clouted leg her hurt doth shew,
Fell headlong into a dell. Spenser.

I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle, or bushy dell, of this wild wood. Milton.

But, foes to sun-shine, most they took delight
In dells and dales, conceal'd from human sight. Tickell.

DELPH. n. f. [from Delft, the name of the capital of Delftland.] A fine sort of earthen ware.

A supper worthy of herself;
Five nothings in five plates of delph. Swift.

DELTOID. adj. [from delta, the fourth letter of the Greek alphabet; so called by reason of its resembling this letter.] An epithet applied to a triangular muscle arising from the clavicle, and from the process of the same, whose action is to raise the arm upward.

Cut still more of the deltoide muscle, and carry the arm backward. Sba p's Surgery.

DELU'DABLE. adj. [from delude.] Liable to be deceived; that is easily imposed on: rather deludible.

Not well understanding omniscience, he is not so ready to deceive himself, as to falsify unto him whose cogitation is no ways deludable. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

70 DELUDE. v. a. [deludo, Lat.]

1. To beguile; to cheat; to deceive; to impose on.

O, give me leave, I have deluded you;
'Twas neither Charles, nor yet the duke.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Let not the Trojans, with a feign'd pretence
Of proffer'd peace, delude the Latian prince. Dryd.

2. To disappoint; to frustrate.

DELU'DER. n. f. [from delude.] A be-guiler; a deceiver; an impostor; a cheat; a false pretender.

Say, flatterer, say, all fair deluder speak;
Answer me this, ere yet my heart does break.

Granville.

And thus the sweet deluders tune their song.

Pope.

70 DELVE. v. a. [delvan, Sax. delven,
Dutch; perhaps from delphak, a hog.
Jonius.

1. To dig; to open the ground with a spade.

It shall go hard,

But I will delve one yard below the mines,
And blow them at the moon. Shakespeare.

Delve of convenient depth your thrashing floor;
With temper'd clay then fill and face it o'er.

Dryden.

The filthy swine with delving snout

The rooted forest undermine.

Philips.

2. To fathom; to sift; to sound one's opinion. Figuratively.

What's his name and birth?

—I cannot delve him to the root: his father Was call'd Sicilian.

Shakespeare.

DELVE. n. f. [from the verb.] A ditch;
a pit; a pitfall; a den; a cave.

He by and by

His feeble feet directed to the cry;
Which to that shady delve him brought at last,
Where Mammon erst did sun his treasury. Spenser.

Such a light and mettled dance

Saw you never yet in France;

And by leadmen, for the nonce,

That turn round like grindle-stones,

Which they dig out fro' the delves,

For their bairns bread, wives, and selves.

Ben Jonson.

DELVE of Coals. A certain quantity of coals dug in the mine or pit. DiB.

DE'LVER. n. f. [from delve.] A digger;
one that opens the ground with a spade.

DE'LUGE. n. f. [deluge, Fr. from diluvium, Lat.]

1. A general inundation; laying entirely under water.

The apostle doth plainly intimate, that the old world was subject to perish by a deluge, as this is subject to perish by conflagration. Burnet's Theory.

2. An overflowing of the natural bounds of a river.

But if with bays and dams they strive to force
His channel to a new or narrow course,
No longer then within his banks he dwells,
First to a torrent, then a deluge, swells. Denham.

3. Any sudden and irresistible calamity.

70 DE'LUGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drown; to lay totally under water.

The restless flood the land would overflow,
By which the delug'd earth would useless grow.

Blackmore.

Still the battering waves rush in Impacable, till delug'd by the foam,

The ship sinks, found'ring in the vast abyss.

Philips.

2. To overwhelm; to cause to sink under the weight of any calamity.

At length corruption, like a general flood,
Shall deluge all.

Pope.

DELU'SION. n. f. [delusio, Lat.]

1. The act of deluding; a cheat; guile; deceit; treachery; fraud; collusion; falsehood.

2. The state of one deluded.

3. A false representation; illusion; error; a chimerical thought.

Who therefore seeks in these

True wisdom, finds her not, or by delusion. Milton.

I, waking, view'd with grief the rising sun,
And fondly mourn'd the dear delusion gone. Prior.

DELU'SIVE. adj. [from delusus, Lat.] Apt to deceive; beguiling; imposing on.

When, fir'd with passion, we attack the fair,

Delusive sighs and brittle vows we bear. Prior.

The happy whimsy you pursue,

Till you at length believe it true;

Caught by your own delusive art,

You fancy first, and then assert.

Prior.

While the base and groveling multitude were listening to the delusive deities, those of a more erect aspect and exalted spirit separated themselves from the rest. Tatler, N° 81.

Phænomena so delusive, that it is very hard to escape imposition and mistake. Woodward.

DELU'SORY. adj. [from delusus, Latin.]
Apt to deceive.

This confidence is founded on no better foundation than a delusory prejudice. Granville.

DE'MAGOGUE. n. f. [δημαγωγος.] A ringleader of the rabble; a popular and factious orator.

Who were the chief demagogues and patrons of tumults, to send for them, to flatter and embolden them. King Charles.

A plausible, insignificant word, in the mouth of an expert demagogue, is a dangerous and dreadful weapon. South.

Demosthene and Cicero, though each of them
a leader, or, as the Greeks called it, a demagogue, in a popular state, yet seem to differ in their practice. Swift.

DEMA'IN.

DEME'AN. } n. f. [domaine, French.]

DEME'SNE. }

1. That land which a man holds originally of himself, called dominium by the civilians, and opposed to feodum, or fee, which signifies those that are held of a superior lord. It is sometimes used also for a distinction between those lands that the lord of the manor has in his own hands, or in the hands of his lessee, demised or let upon a rent for a term of years or life, and such other lands appertaining to the said manor as belong to free or copyholders. Phillips.

2. Estate in land.

Having now provided

A gentleman of noble parentage,

Of fair demesnes, youthful, and nobly allied. Shak.

That earldom indeed had a royal jurisdiction and feigniory, though the lands of that county in demesne were possessed for the most part by the ancient inheritors. Dawies.

3. Land adjoining to the mansion, kept in the lord's own hand.

Those acts for planting forest trees have hitherto been wholly ineffectual, except about the de-mesnes of a few gentlemen; and even there, in general, very unskillfully made. Swift.

70 DEMAND. v. a. [demauder, Fr.]

1. To claim; to ask for with authority.

The pound of flesh, which I demand of him,
Is dearly bought; 'tis mine, and I will have it.

Shakespeare.

2. To question; to interrogate.

And when Uriah was come unto him, David *demand*ed of him how Joab did, and how the people did, and how the war prospered? 2 Sam. xi. 7.

If my friend of Cæsar's demand why Brutus rose against Cæsar, this is my answer: Not that I loved Cæsar less, but that I loved Rome more.

Shakespeare.

Young one,

Inform us of thy fortunes; for, it seems,

They crave to be *demand*ed. Shakespeare.

The oracle of Apollo being *demand*ed, when the war and misery of Greece should have an end, replied, When they would double the altar in Delos, which was of a cubick form.

Peacbam on Geometry.

3. [In law.] To prosecute in a real action.

DEMA'ND. n. f. [demande, French.]

1. A claim; a challenging; the asking of any thing with authority.

This matter is by the decree of the watchers,
and the demand by the word of the holy ones.

Dan. iv. 17.

Giving vent, gives life and strength, to our appetites; and he that has the confidence to turn his wishes into demands, will be but a little way from thinking he ought to obtain them. Locke.

2. A question; an interrogation.

3. The calling for a thing in order to purchase it.

My bookseller tells me, the demand for those my papers increases daily. Addison.

4. [In law.] The asking of what is due.
It hath also a proper signification distinguished from plaint; for all civil actions are pursued either by demands or plaints, and the pursuer is called demandant or plaintiff. There are two manners of demands, the one of deed, the other in law: in deed, as in every præcipe, there is express demand; in law, as every entry in land-distress for rent, taking or seising of goods, and such like acts, which may be done without any words, are demands in law.

Blount.

DEMA'NDABLE. adj. [from demand.]
That may be *demand*ed; requested;
asked for.

All sums demandable, for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, have been stayed in the way to the hanaper. Bacon.

DEMA'NDANT. n. f. [from demand.]

1. He who is actor or plaintiff in a real action, because he *demand*eth lands.

Coke.

2. A plaintiff; one that demands redress.

One of the witnesses deposed, that dining on a Sunday with the demandant, whose wife had sat below the squire's lady at church, she the said wife dropped some expressions, as if she thought her husband ought to be knighted. Spektator.

DEMA'NDER. n. f. [demandeur, Fr.]

1. One that requires a thing with authority.

2. One that asks a question.

3. One that asks for a thing in order to purchase it.

They grow very fast and fat, which also bettereth their taste, and delivereth them to the demanders ready use at all seasons. Carew.

4. A dunner; one that demands a debt.

DEME'AN. n. f. [from demen, Fr.] A mien; presence; carriage; demean-our; deportment.

At his feet, with sorrowful demean,
And deadly hue, an armed corse did lie. Spenser.

70 DEME'AN. v. a. [from demen, Fr.]

1. To behave; to carry one's self.

Those

Those plain and legible lines of duty requiring us to demean ourselves to God humbly and devoutly, to our governors obediently, and to our neighbours justly, and to ourselves soberly and temperately.

A man cannot doubt but that there is a God; and that, according as he demeans himself towards him, he will make him happy or miserable for ever.

Strephon had long perplex'd his brains,
How with so high a nymph he might Demean himself the wedding-night.

2. To lessen; to debase; to undervalue.

Now, out of doubt, Antipholus is mad;
Else he would never so demean himself.

DEMEANOUR. n. f. [demenor, Fr.] Carriage; behaviour.

Of so insupportable a pride he was, that where his deeds might well stir envy, his demeanour did rather breed disdain.

Angels best like us, when we are most like unto them in all parts of decent demeanour.

His gestures fierce
He mark'd, and mad demeanour, then alone,
As he suppos'd, all unobserv'd, unseen.

Thus Eve, with sad demeanour meek, Ill worthy I.

He was of a courage not to be daunted, which was manifested in all his actions, especially in his whole demeanour at Rhees, both at the landing, and upon the retreat.

DEMEANS. n. f. pl. properly demesnes.
An estate in lands; that which a man possesses in his own right.

To DEMENTATE. v. n. [demento, Lat.] To make mad.

DEMENTATION. n. f. [dementatio, Lat.] Making mad, or frantick.

DEMERIT. n. f. [demerite, Fr. from demeritus, of demereor, Latin.]

1. The opposite to merit; ill deserving; what makes one worthy of blame or punishment.

They should not be able once to stir, or to murmur, but it should be known, and they shortened according to their demerits.

Thou liv'st by me, to me thy breath resign;
Mine is the merit, the demerit thine.

Whatever they acquire by their industry or ingenuity, should be secure, unless forfeited by any demerit or offence against the custom of the family.

2. Anciently the same with merit; desert.

I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege; and my demerits
May speak, unbonnetting, to as proud a fortune
As this that I have reach'd.

To DEMERIT. v. a. [demeriter, Fr.] To deserve blame or punishment.

DEMERSED. adj. [from demersus, of demergo, Latin.] Plunged; drowned.

DEMERSION. n. f. [demersio, Latin.]

DEMI-DEVIL. n. f. [semi and devil.] Partaking of infernal nature; half a devil.

Will you, I pray, demand that semi-devil,
Why he hath thus ensnar'd my soul and body?

DEMI-GOD. n. f. [semi and god.] Partaking of divine nature; half a god; an hero produced by the cohabitation of divinities with mortals.

He took his leave of them, whose eyes bade him farewell with tears, making temples to him as to a semi-god.

Be gods, or angels, semi-gods.
Transported semi-gods stood round,
And men grew heroes at the sound,
Enflam'd with glory's charms.
Nay, half in heaven, except (what's mighty odd)

A fit of vapours clouds this semi-god.

DEMI-LANCE. n. f. [semi and lance.] A light lance; a short spear; a half-pike.

On their steel'd heads their semi-lances wore Small pennons, which their ladies colours bore.

Light semi-lances from afar they throw,
Fasten'd with leathern thongs, to gall the foe.

DEMI-MAN. n. f. [semi and man.] Half a man: a term of reproach.

We must adventure this battle, lest we perish by the complaints of this barking semi-man.

DEMI-WOLF. n. f. [semi and wolf.] Half a wolf; a mongrel dog between a dog and wolf: lycisca.

To DEMIT. v. a. [demitto, Latin.] To depress; to hang down; to let fall.

When they are in their pride, that is, advancing their train, if they decline their necks to the ground, they presently demit and let fall the same.

DEMOCRACY. n. f. [δημοκρατία.] One of the three forms of government; that in which the sovereign power is neither lodged in one man, nor in the nobles, but in the collective body of the people.

While many of the servants, by industry and virtue, arrive at riches and esteem, then the nature of the government inclines to a democracy.

The majority, having the whole power of the community, may employ all that power in making laws, and executing those laws; and there the form of the government is a perfect democracy.

DEMOCRATICAL. adj. [from democracy.] Pertaining to a popular government; popular.

They are still within the line of vulgarity, and are democratical enemies to truth.

As the government of England has a mixture of democratical in it, so the right is partly in the people.

To DEMOLISH. v. a. [demolir, Fr. demolior, Lat.] To throw down buildings; to raze; to destroy.

I expected the fabrick of my book would long since have been demolished, and laid even with the ground.

Red lightning play'd along the firmament,
And their demolish'd works to pieces rent.

DEMOLISHER. n. f. [from demolish.] One that throws down buildings; a destroyer; a layer waste.

DEMU'RENESS. n. f. [from demure.]

1. Modesty; soberness; gravity of aspect.

Her eyes having in them such a cheerfulness, as nature seemed to smile in them; though her mouth and cheeks obeyed to that pretty demureness, which the more one marked, the more one would judge the poor soul apt to believe. Sidney.

2. Affected modesty; pretended gravity.

DEMU'RAGE. n. f. [from demur.] An allowance made by merchants to masters of ships, for their stay in a port beyond the time appointed.

DEMU'RER. n. f. [demenrer, French;

i. e. manere in aliquo loco, vel morari.] A kind of pause upon a point of difficulty in an action: for, in every action, the controversy consists either in the fact, or in the law: if in the fact, that is tried by the jury; if in law, then is the case plain to the judge, or so hard and rare, as it breedeth just doubt. I call that plain to the judge, wherein he is assured of the law; and in such case the judge, with his associates, proceeds to judgment without farther work. But when it is doubtful to him and his associates, then is there stay made, and a time taken, either for the court to think farther upon it, and to agree, if they can; or else for all the justices to meet together in the Chequer chamber, and, upon hearing that which the serjeants can say of both parts, to advise, and set down as law, whatsoever they conclude firm, without farther remedy. Cowell.

A prohibition was granted, and hereunto there was a demurrer. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DEN.

DEN. n. f. [ben, Saxon.]

1. A cavern or hollow running horizontally, or with a small obliquity, under ground; distinct from a hole which runs down perpendicularly.

They here dispersed, some in the air, some on the earth, some in the waters, some amongst the minerals, dens, and caves under the earth. Hooker.

2. The cave of a wild beast.

What, shall they seek the lion in his den,
And fright him there? Shakespeare.

The tyrant's den, whose use, though lost to fame,
Was now th' apartment of the royal dame;
The cavern, only to her father known,
By him was to his darling daughter shown. Dryd.
'Tis then the shapeless bear his den forsakes;
In woods and fields a wild destruction makes. Dryden.

3. Den, the termination of a local name, may signify either a valley or a woody place; for the Saxon den imports both.

Gibson's Camden.

DENAY. n. f. [a word formed between deny and nay.] Denial; refusal.

To her in haste, give her this jewel: say,
My love can give no place, bide no deny. Shak.

DENDROLOGY. n. f. [δένδρον and λόγος.] The natural history of trees.

DENIABLE. adj. [from deny.] That which may be denied; that to which one may refuse belief.

The negative authority is also deniable by reason. Brown.

DENIAL. n. f. [from deny.]

1. Negation; the contrary to affirmation.

2. Negation; the contrary to confession.

No man more impudent to deny, where proofs were not manifest; no man more ready to confess, with a repenting manner of aggravating his own evil, where denial would but make the fault fouler. Sidney.

3. Refusal; the contrary to grant, allowance or concession.

Here comes your father; never make denial:
I must and will have Catherine to my wife. Shak.
The denial of landing, and hasty warning us away, troubled us much. Bacon.

He, at ev'ry fresh attempt is repell'd
With faint denials, weaker than before. Dryden.

4. Abjuration; contrary to acknowledgment of adherence.

We may deny God in all those acts that are capable of being morally good or evil: those are the proper scenes, in which we act our confessions or denials of him. South.

DENIER. n. f. [from deny.]

1. A contradictor; an opponent; one that holds the negative of a proposition.

By the word Virtue the affirmer intends our whole duty to God and man, and the denier by the word Virtue means only courage, or, at most, our duty towards our neighbour, without including the idea of the duty which we owe to God. Watts.

2. A disowner; one that does not own or acknowledge.

If it was so fearful when Christ looked his denier into repentance, what will it be when he shall look him into destruction? South.

3. A refuser; one that refuses.

It may be I am esteemed by my denier sufficient of myself to discharge my duty to God as a priest, though not to men as a prince. King Charles.

DENIER. n. f. [from denarius, Lat.] It is pronounced as deneer, in two syllables.] A small denomination of French money; the twelfth part of a sou.

You will not pay for the glasses you have burst?
—No, not a denier Shakespeare.

TO DENIGRATE. v. a. [denigro, Lat.]

To blacken; to make black.

By suffering some impression from fire, bodies are casually or artificially denigrated in their natural complexion: thus are charcoals made black by an infection of their own suffitus. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Hartshorn, and other white bodies, will be denigrated by heat; yet camphire would not at all lose its whiteness. Boyle.

DENIGRATION. n. f. [denigratio, Latin.]

A blackening, or making black.

These are the advenient and artificial ways of denigration, answerably whereto may be the natural progress. Brown.

In several instances of denigration, the metals are worn off, or otherwise reduced into very minute parts. Boyle.

DENIZATION. n. f. [from denizen.] The act of enfranchising, or making free.

That the mere Irish were reputed aliens, appears by the charters of denization, which in all ages were purchased by them. Davies.

DENIZEN. n. f. [from dinafddyn, a DE'NISON.] man of the city; or dinafydd, free of the city, Welsh.] A freeman; one enfranchised.

Denizen is a British law term, which the Saxons and Angles found here, and retained. Davies.

Thus th' Almighty Sire began: ye gods,
Natives, or denizens, of blest abodes,
From whence these murmurs? Dryden.

A great many plants will hardly, with nursing, be made to produce their seed out of their native soil; but corn, so necessary for all people, is fitted to grow and to seed as a free denison of the world. Grew.

He summons straight his denizens of air;

The lucid squadrons round the sails repair. Pope.

TO DENIZEN. v. a. [from the noun.]

To enfranchise; to make free.

Pride, lust, covetize, being several
To these three places, yet all are in all;
Mingled thus, their issue is incestuous;
Falsehood is denizen'd, virtue is barbarous. Donne.

DENOMINABLE. adj. [denomino, Latin.]

That may be named or denoted.

An inflammation consists of a sanguineous affluxion, or else is denominable from other humours, according to the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm, or choler. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

TO DENOMINATE. v. a. [denomino, Latin.] To name; to give a name to.

The commendable purpose of consecration being not of every one understood, they have been construed as though they had superstitiously meant either that those places, which were denominated of angels and saints, should serve for the worship of so glorious creatures; or else those glorious creatures for defence, protection, and patronage of such places. Hooker.

Predestination is destructive to all that is established among men, to all that is most precious to human nature, to the two faculties that denominate us men, understanding and will; for what use can we have of our understandings, if we cannot do what we know to be our duty? And, if we act not voluntarily, what exercise have we of our wills? Hammond.

DENOMINATION. n. f. [denominatio, Latin.] A name given to a thing, which commonly marks some principal quality of it.

But is there any token, denomination, or monument of the Gauls yet remaining in Ireland, as there is of the Scythians? Spenser's State of Incl.

The liking or disliking of the people gives the play the denomination of good or bad; but does not really make or constitute it such. Dryden.

Philosophy, the great idol of the learned part of the heathen world, has divided it into many sects and denominations; as Stoicks, Peripateticks, Epicureans, and the like. South.

All men are sinners: the most righteous among us most confess ourselves to come under that denomination. Rogers.

DENOMINATIVE. adj. [from denominate.]

1. That which gives a name; that which confers a distinct appellation.

2. That which obtains a distinct appellation. This would be more analogically denominative.

The least denominative part of time is a minute, the greatest integer being a year. Cocker's Arithm.

DENOMINATOR. n. f. [from denominate.]

The giver of a name; the person or thing that causes an appellation.

Both the seas of one name should have one common denominator. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DENOMINATOR of a Fraction, is the number below the line, shewing the nature and quality of the parts which any integer is supposed to be divided into: thus in $\frac{6}{8}$, 8 the denominator shews you, that the integer is supposed to be divided into 8 parts, or half quarters; and the numerator 6 shews, that you take 6 of such parts, i. e. three quarters of the whole. Harris.

When a single broken number or fraction hath for its denominator a number consisting of an unit, in the first place towards the left hand, and nothing but cyphers from the unit towards the right hand, it is then more aptly and rightly called a decimal fraction. Cocker's Arithmetick.

Denominator of any proportion, is the quotient arising from the division of the antecedent by the consequent: thus 6 is the denominator of the proportion that 30 hath to 5, because 5) 30 (6. This is also called the exponent of the proportion, or ratio. Harris.

DENOTATION. n. f. [denotatio, Latin.] The act of denoting.

Here comes the sad denouncer of my fate,
To toll the mournful knell of separation. Dryden.

DENSE. adj. [densus, Latin.] Close; compact; approaching to solidity; having small interstices between the constituent particles.

The cause of cold is the density of the body; for all dense bodies are colder than most other bodies, as metals, stone, glass; and they are longer in heating than softer bodies. Bacon.

In the air the higher you go, the less it is compressed, and consequently the less dense it is; and so the upper part is exceedingly thinner than the lower part which we breathe. Locke.

TO DENSHIRE. v. a. A barbarous term of husbandry.

Burning of land, or burn-bating, is commonly called denfiring, that is, Devonshire or Dunbigh-firing, because most used or first invented there. Mortimer.

DENSITY. n. f. [densitas, Latin.] Closeness; compactness; close adhesion, or near approach, of parts.

Whilst the densest of metals, gold, if foliated, is transparent, and all metals become transparent if dissolved in menstrua, or vitrified, the opacity of white metals ariseth not from their density alone. Newton.

The air within the vessels being of a less density, the outward air would press their sides together; and, being of a greater density, would expand them so as to endanger the life of the animal. Arbutnot on Aliments.

DENTAL. adj. [dentalis, Latin.]

1. Belonging or relating to the teeth.
2. [In grammar.] Pronounced principally by the agency of the teeth.

The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural. Bacon.

The eagle got leave here to deposit her eggs.
L'Estrange.
Dryden wants a poor square foot of stone, to shew where the ashes of one of the greatest poets on earth are deposited. Garth.
When vessels were open, and the insects had free access to the aliment within them, Redi diligently observed, that no other species were produced, but of such as he saw go in and feed, and deposit their eggs there, which they would readily do in all putrefaction. Bentley.

2. To lay up as a pledge, or security.
3. To place at interest.
God commands us to return, as to him, to the poor, his gifts, out of mere duty and thankfulness;
not to deposit them with him, in hopes of meriting
by them. Spratt.

4. To lay aside.
The difficulty will be to persuade the depositing of those lusts, which have, by I know not what fascination, so endeared themselves.
Decay of Piety.

place where any thing is lodged. De-positary is properly used of persons, and depository of places; but in the following example they are confounded.
The Jews themselves are the depositories of all the prophecies which tend to their own confusion.
Addison.

DEPRAVATION. n. f. [depravatio, Lat.]
1. The act of making any thing bad; the act of corrupting; corruption.
The three forms of government have their several perfections, and are subject to their several depravations: however, few states are ruined by defect in their institution, but generally by corruption of manners. Swift.

2. The state of being made bad; degeneracy; depravity.
We have a catalogue of the blackest sins that human nature, in its highest depravation, is capable of committing. South.

3. Defamation; censure: a sense not now
in use.
Stubborn criticks are apt, without a theme
For depravation, to square all the sex. Shakesp.

To DEPRAVE. v. a. [depravo, Lat.] To vitiare; to corrupt; to contaminate.
We admire the providence of God in the continuance of scripture, notwithstanding the endeavours of infidels to abolish, and the fraudulence of hereticks to deprave, the same. Hooker.
Who lives that's not depraved, or depraves?
Shakespere.
But from me what can proceed
But all corrupt, both mind and will deprav'd?
Milton.
A taste which plenty does deprave,
Loaths lawful good, and lawless ill does crave.
Dryden.

DEPRAVEDNESS. n. f. [from deprave.]
Corruption; taint; contamination; vi-tiated state.
What sins do you mean? Our original depravedness, and proneness of our eternal part to all evil.
Hammond.

DEPRAVEMENT. n. f. [from deprave.] A vitiating state; corruption.
He maketh men believe, that apparitions are either deceptions of sight, or melancholy *deprave-

DEPRIVITY. n. f. [from deprave.] Corruption; a vitiated state.

To DEPRECATE. v. a.
1. To beg off; to pray deliverance from;
to avert by prayer.
In deprecating of evil, we make an humble acknowledgment of guilt, and of God's justice in chastising, as well as clemency in sparing, the guilty. Grew.
Poverty indeed, in all its degrees, men are easily persuaded to deprecate from themselves. Rogers.
The judgments which we would deprecate are not removed. Smalridge.
The Italian entered them in his prayer: amongst the three evils he petitioned to be delivered from,
he might have deprecate greater evils.
Baker's Reflections on Learning.

2. To implore mercy of: this is not proper.
At length he sets
Those darts, whose points make gods adore
His might, and deprecate his power. Prior.

DEPRECATION. n. f. [deprecatio, Lat.]
1. Prayer against evil.
I, with leave of speech implor'd
And humble deprecation, thus replied. Milton.
Sternutation they generally conceived to be a good sign, or a bad one; and so, upon this motion, they commonly used a gratulation for the one, and a deprecation for the other. Brown.

2. Intreaty; petitioning.

3. An excusing; a begging pardon for.

DEPRECATIVE. } adj. [from deprecate.]
DEPRECATORY. } That serves to deprecate; apologetick; tending to avert evil by supplication.

Bishop Fox understanding that the Scottish king was still discontent, being troubled that the occasion of breaking of the truce should grow from his men, sent many humble and deprecatory letters to the Scottish king to appease him. Bacon.

DEPRECA'TOR. n. f. [deprecator, Lat.]
One that averts evil by petition.

To DEPRECIATE. v. a. [depreciare, Lat.]
1. To bring a thing down to a lower price.
2. To undervalue.
They presumed upon that mercy, which, in all their conversations, they endeavour to depreciate
and misrepresent. Addison.
As there are none more ambitious of fame, than those who are coiners in poetry, it is very natural for such as have not succeeded in it to depreciate the works of those who have. Spectator.

To DE'PREDATE. v. a. [depradari, Lat.]
1. To rob; to pillage.
2. To spoil; to devour.
It maketh the substance of the body more solid and compact, and so less apt to be consumed and depredated by the spirits. Bacon.

DEPREDATION. n. f. [depradatio, Lat.]
1. A robbing; a spoiling.
Commissioners were appointed to determine all matters of piracy and depredations between the subjects of both kingdoms. Hayward.
The land had never been before so free from robberies and depredations as through his reign. Wot.
Were there not one who had said, Hitherto shalt thou come, and no farther; we might well expect such vicissitudes, such clashing in nature, and such depredations and changes of sea and land. Woodr.

2. Voracity; waste.
The speedy depredation of air upon watry moisture, and version of the same into air, appeareth in nothing more visible than in the sudden discharge or vanishing of a little cloud of breath, or vapour, from glasse, or the blade of a sword, or any such polished body. Bacon.

DEPREDATOR. n. f. [depradator, Lat.]
A robber; a devourer.
It is reported, that the shrub called our Lady's Seal, which is a kind of briony, and coleworts, set near together, one or both will die: the cause is,
for that they be both great depredators of the earth,
and one of them starveth the other. Bacon.
We have three that collect the experiments,
which are in all books; these we call depredators.
Bacon.

To DEPREHEND. v. a. [deprehendo, Lat.]
1. To catch one; to take unawares; to take in the fact.
That wretched creature, being deprehended in that impiety, was held in ward. Hooker.
Who can believe men upon their own authority, that are once deprehended in so gross and impious an impasture? More.

2. To discover; to find out a thing; to come to the knowledge or understanding of.
The motions of the minute parts of bodies, which do so great effects, are invisible, and incur not to the eye; but yet they are to be deprehended by experience. Bacon.

DEPREHENSIBLE. adj. [from deprehend.]
1. That may be caught.
2. That may be apprehended, or discovered. Dict.

DEPREHENSIBLENESS. n. f.

To DEPRE'SS. v. a. [from depressus, of deprimo, Latin.]

1. To press or thrust down.
2. To let fall; to let down.

The same thing I have tried by letting a globe rest, and raising or depressing the eye, or otherwise moving it, to make the angle of a just magnitude.

Newton.

3. To humble; to deject; to sink.

Others depress their own minds, despond at the first difficulty, and conclude that the making any progress in knowledge is above their capacities.

Locke.

If we consider how often it breaks the gloom, which is apt to depress the mind, with transient unexpected gleams of joy, one would take care not to grow too wise for so great a pleasure of life.

Add.

Passion can depress or raise

The heavenly, as the human mind.

Prior.

DEPRESSION. n. f. [depressio, Lat.]

1. The act of pressing down.

Bricks of a rectangular form, if laid one by another in a level row between supporters sustaining the two ends, all the pieces between will necessarily sink by their own gravity; and much more, if they suffer any depression by other weight above them.

Wotton.

2. The sinking or falling in of a surface.

The beams of light are such subtle bodies, that, in respect of them, even surfaces, that are sensibly smooth, are not exactly so: they have their own degree of roughness, consisting of little protuberances and depressions; and consequently such inequalities may suffice to give bodies different colours, as we see in marble that appears white or black, or red or blue, even when most carefully polished.

Boyle.

If the bone be much depressed, and the fissure considerably large, it is then at your choice, whether you will enlarge that fissure, or continue it for the evacuation of the matter, and forbear the use of the trepan; not doubting but a small depression of the bone will either rise, or cast off, by the benefit of nature.

Wigman.

3. The act of humbling; abasement.

Depression of the nobility may make a king more absolute, but less safe.

Bacon.

DEPRESSION of an Equation [in algebra] is the bringing it into lower and more simple terms by division.

DiA.

DEPRESSION of a Star [with astronomers] is the distance of a star from the horizon below, and is measured by the arch of the vertical circle or azimuth, passing through the star, intercepted between the star and the horizon.

DiA.

DEPRESSOR. n. f. [depressor, Lat.]

1. He that keeps or presses down.
2. An oppressor.

DEPRESSOR. [In anatomy.] A term given to several muscles of the body, whose action is to depress the parts to which they adhere.

DEPRIMENT. adj. [from deprimens, of deprimo, Latin.] An epithet applied to one of the straight muscles that move the globe or ball of the eye, its use being to pull it downwards.

The exquisite equilibration of all opposite and antagonist muscles is effected partly by the natural posture of the body and the eye, which is the case of the attolent and depriment muscles.

Derham.

DEPRIVATION. n. f. [from de and privatio, Lat.]

1. The act of depriving, or taking away from.
2. The state of losing.

Fools whose end is destruction, and eternal deprivation of being.

Bentley.

DEPRIVATION [in law] is when a clergyman, as a bishop, parson, vicar, or prebend, is deprived, or deposed from his preferment, for any matter in fact or law.

Phillips.

To DEPRIVE. v. a. [from de and privio, Latin.]

1. To bereave one of a thing: to take it away from him: with of.

God hath deprived her of wisdom, neither hath he imparted to her understanding.

Job, xxxix. 17. He lamented the loss of an excellent servant, and the horrid manner in which he had been deprived of him.

Clarendon.

Now wretched Oedipus, deprived of sight,

Led a long death in everlasting night.

Pope.

2. To hinder; to debar from: Milton uses it without of.

From his face I shall be hid, deprived

His blessed countenance.

Milton.

The ghosts rejected, are th' unhappy crew

Deprived of sepulchres and funeral due.

Dryden.

Most happy he,

Whose least delight sufficeth to deprive

Remembrance of all pains which him oppress.

Spens.

4. To put out of an office.

A minister, deprived for inconformity, said, that if they deprived him, it should cost an hundred men's lives.

Bacon.

DEPTH. n. f. [from deep, of diep, Dutch.]

1. Deepness; the measure of any thing from the surface downwards.

As for men, they had buildings in many places higher than the depth of the water.

Bacon.

We have large and deep caves of several depths: the deepest are sunk six hundred fathoms.

Bacon.

The left to that unhappy region tends,

Which to the depth of Tartarus descends.

Dryd.

For tho', in nature, depth and height

Are equally held infinite;

In poetry the height we know,

'Tis only infinite below.

Swift.

2. Deep place; not a shoal.

The false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,

And seamen with dissembled depths betray.

Dryd.

3. The abyss; a gulph of infinite profundity.

When he prepared the heavens I was there, when he set a compass upon the face of the depth.

Prov. viii. 27.

4. The middle or height of a season.

And in the depth of winter, in the night,

You plough the raging seas to coasts unke-

Denham.

5. Abstruseness; obscurity.

There are greater depths and obscurities in an elaborate and well-written piece of nonsense, than in the most abstruse tract of school divinity.

Addison's Whig Examiner.

DEPTH of a Squadron or Battalion, is the number of men in the file.

Milit. DiA.

Is there no derogation in't?
—You cannot derogate, my lord. Shakespeare.

DEROGATE. adj. [from the verb.] Degraded; damaged; lessened in value.

Into her womb convey sterility;
Dry up in her the organs of increase,
And from her derogate body never spring
A babe to honour her! Shakespeare's King Lear.

DEROGATION. n. f. [derogatio, Latin.]

1. The act of weakening or restraining a former law or contract.

It was indeed but a wooing ambassage, with good respects, to entertain the king in good affection; but nothing was done or handled to the derogation of the king's late treaty with the Italians. Bacon.

That which enjoins the deed is certainly God's law; and it is also certain, that the scripture, which allows of the will, is neither the derogation nor relaxation of that law. South.

2. A defamation; detraction; the act of lessening or taking away the honour of any person or thing. Sometimes with to, properly with from.

Which, though never so necessary, they could not easily now admit, without some fear of derogation from their credit; and therefore that which once they had done, they became for ever after resolute to maintain. Hooker.

So surely he is a very brave man, neither is that any thing which I speak to his derogation; for in that I said he is a mingled people, it is no dispraise. Spenser on Ireland.

The wisest princes need not think it any diminution to their greatness, or derogation to their sufficiency, to rely upon counsel. Bacon.

I say not this in derogation to Virgil, neither do I contradict any thing which I have formerly said in his just praise. Dryden.

None of these patriots will think it a derogation from their merit to have it said, that they received many lights and advantages from their intimacy with my lord Somers. Addison.

DEROGATIVE. adj. [derogativus, Latin.]

Derogating; lessening the honour of: not in use.

That spirits are corporeal, seems to me a conceit derogative to himself, and such as he should rather labour to overthrow; yet thereby he establisheth the doctrine of lustrations, amulets, and charms. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEROGATORILY. adv. [from derogatory.] In a detracting manner. Diſt.

DEROGATORINESS. n. f. [from derogatory.] The act of derogating. Diſt.

DEROGATORY. adj. [derogatorius, Lat.] Detracting; that lessens the honour of; dishonourable.

They live and die in their absurdities, passing their days in perverted apprehensions and conceptions of the world, derogatory unto God, and the wisdom of the creation. Brown.

These deputed beings are derogatory from the wisdom and power of the Author of Nature, who doubtless can govern this machine he could create, by more direct and easy methods than employing these subservient divinities. Cheyne.

DERVIS. n. f. [dervis, French.] A Turkish priest, or monk.

Even there, where Christ vouchsaf'd to teach,
Their dervises dare an impostor preach. Sandys.

The dervis at first made some scruple of violating his promise to the dying brachman; but told him, at last, that he could conceal nothing from so excellent a prince. Spectator.

DE'SCANT. n. f. [discanto, Italian.]

Hayward.

3. The idea, or sketch, of a work.

The scenes which represent cities and countries are not really such, but only painted on boards and canvases; but shall that excuse the ill painture or designment of them?

Dryden.

When absent, yet we conquer'd in his right;
For though that some mean artist's skill were shown
In mingling colours, or in placing light,
Yet still the fair designment was his own.

Dryden.

DESIRABLE. adj. [from desire.]

1. That which is to be wished with earnestness.

Adjudged cases, collected by men of great sagacity, will improve his mind toward acquiring this desirable amplitude and extent of thought.

Watts.

He cannot but confess, that it is a thing the most desirable to man, and most agreeable to the goodness of God, that he should send forth his light and his truth by a special revelation of this will.

Rogers.

2. Pleasing; delightful.

She then let drop some expressions about an agate snuff-box: I immediately took the hint, and bought one; being unwilling to omit any thing that might make me desirable in her eyes.

Addison.

Our own sex, our kindred, our houses, and our very names, seem to have something good and desirable in them.

Watts.

DESIRE. n. s. [desir, Fr. desio, Ital. desiderium, Lat.] Wish; eagerness to obtain or enjoy.

Desire is the uneasiness a man finds in himself upon the absence of any thing, whose present enjoyment carries the idea of delight with it.

Licke.

Drink provokes, and unprovokes; it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance.

Shakespeare.

Desire's the vast extent of human mind;
It mounts above, and leaves poor hope behind.

Dryden.

It is in a man's power only to observe what the ideas are that take their turns in his understanding, or else to direct the sort, and call in such as he hath a desire or use of.

Locke.

TO DESIRE. v. a. [desirer, French; desiderare, Latin.]

The life, thou gav'st me first, was lost and done;
Till with thy warlike sword, despite of fate,
To my determin'd time thou gav'st new date. Shak.

My life thou shalt command, but not my shame:
The one my duty owes; but my fair name,
Despise of death, that lives upon my grave,
To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have. Shak.

Know I will serve the fair in thy despite. Dryd.
I have not quitted yet a victor's right;
I'll make you happy in your own despite. Dryden.

Say, would the tender creature, in despite
Of heat by day, and chilling dews by night,
Its life maintain? Blackmore.

Thou, with rebel insolence, didst dare
To own and to protect that hoary ruffian;
And, in despite ev'n of thy father's justice,
To stir the factious rabble up to arms, Rowe.

3. Act of malice; act of opposition.

His punishment, eternal misery,
It would be all his solace and revenge,
As a despite done against the Most High,
Thou once to gain companion of his woe. Milton.

To DESPI'TE. v. a. [from the noun.] To vex; to offend; to disappoint; to give uneasiness to.

Saturn, with his wife Rhea, fled by night; setting the town on fire, to despite Bacchus. Raleigh.

DESPI'TEFUL. adj. [despite and full.]
Malicious; full of spleen; full of hate; malignant; mischievous: used both of persons and things.

I, his despiteful Juno, sent him forth
From courtly friends with camping foes to live,
Where death and danger dog the heels of worth. Shakespeare.

Preserve us from the hands of our despiteful and deadly enemies. King Charles.

Mean while the heinous and despiteful act
Of Satan, done in Paradise, was known In heav'n. Milton.

DESPI'TEFULLY. adv. [from despiteful.]
Maliciously; malignantly.

Pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you. Matthew, v. 44.

DESPI'TEFULNESS. n. f. [from despite-ful.] Malice; hate; malignity.

Let us examine him with despitefulness and torture, that we know his meekness, and prove his patience. Wisd. ii. 19.

DESPI'TEOUS. adj. [from despite.] Malicious; furious. A word now out of use.

The knight of the red-cross, when him he spied
Spurring so hot with rage despiteous, Gan fairly couch his spear. Fairy Queen.

Turning despiteous torture out of door. Shakesp.

DESPI'TEOUSLY. adv. [from despiteous.]
In a furious manner: not in use.

The mortal steel despiteously entail'd
Deep in their flesh, quite thro' the iron walls,
That a large purple stream adown their gambours falls. Spenser.

To DESPOIL. v. a. [despolio, Lat.]

1. To rob; to deprive: with of.
Despoil'd of warlike arms, and knownen shield. Spenser.

You are nobly born,
Despoil'd of your honour in your life. Shakespeare.

He waits, with hellish rancour imminent,
To intercept thy way, or send thee back
Despoil'd of innocence, of faith, of bliss. Milton.

He, pale as death, despoil'd of his array,
Into the queen's apartment takes his way. Dryd.

Ev'n now thy aid,
Eugene, with regiments unequal prest,
Awaits: this day of all his honours gain'd
Despoils him, if thy succour opportune
Defends not the sad hour. Phillips.

2. To divest by any accident.

These formed stones, despoiled of their shells, and exposed upon the surface of the ground, in time moulder away. Woodward.

3. Simply to strip: not in use.

A groom 'gan despoil
Of puissant arms, and laid in easy bed. Spenser.

DESPOLIATION. n. f. [from despolio, Lat.]
The act of despoiling or stripping.

To DESPO'ND. v. a. [despondeo, Lat.]

1. To despair; to lose hope; to become hopeless or desperate.

It is every man's duty to labour in his calling,
and not to despond for any miscarriages or disappointments that were not in his own power to prevent. L'Estrange.

There is no surer remedy for superstitious and desponding weakness, than first to govern ourselves by the best improvement of that reason which providence has given us for a guide; and then, when we have done our own parts, to commit all cheerfully, for the rest, to the good pleasure of heaven, with trust and resignation. L'Estrange.

Physick is their bane:
The learned leaches in despair depart,
And shake their heads, desponding of their art. Dryd.

Others depreß their own minds, despond at the first difficulty; and conclude, that making any progress in knowledge, farther than serves their ordinary business, is above their capacities. Locke.

2. [In theology.] To lose hope of the divine mercy.

He considers what is the natural tendency of such a virtue, or such a vice: he is well apprized that the representation of some of these things may convince the understanding, some may terrify the conscience, some may allure the slothful, and some encourage the desponding mind. Watts.

DESPO'NDENCY. n. f. [from despondent.]
Despair; hopelessness; desperation.

DESPO'NDENT. adj. [despondens, Latin.]
Despairing; hopeless; without hope.

It is well known, both from ancient and modern experience, that the very boldest atheists, out of their debauches and company, when they chance to be surpris'd with solitude or sickness, are the most suspicious, timorous, and despondent wretches in the world. Bentley.

Congregated thrushes, linnets, sit
On the dead tree, a dull despondent flock. Thomson.

To DESPO'NSATE. v. a. [desponso, Lat.]

To betroth; to affiancé; to unite by reciprocal promises of marriage.

DESPONSA'TION. n. f. [from desponsate.]
The act of betrothing persons to each other.

DE'SPOT. n. f. [δеспот.] An absolute prince; one that governs with unlimited authority. This word is not in use, except as applied to some Dacian prince;
as, the despot of Servia.

DESPOTICAL. } adj. [from despot.] Ab-DESPOTICK. } solute in power; unlimited in authority; arbitrary; unac-countable.

God's universal law
Gave to the man despotick power
Over his female in due awe,
Nor from that right to part an hour,
Smile she or lowre. Milton.

In all its directions of the inferior faculties, reason conveyed its suggestions with clearness, and enjoined them with power; it had the passions in perfect subjection; though its command over them was but persuasive and political, yet it had the force of coercive and despotical. Sonnet.

We may see in a neighbouring government the ill consequences of having a despotick prince; for notwithstanding there is vast extent of lands, and many of them better than those of the Swiss and Grisons, the common people among the latter are in a much better situation. Addison.

Patriots were forced to give way to the madness of the people, who were now wholly bent upon single and despotick slavery. Swift.

DESPOTICALNESS. n. f. [from despoti-cal.] Absolute authority.

DE'SPOTISM. n. f. [despotisme, Fr. from despot.] Absolute power.

A term of chirurgery.

DESSE'RT. n. f. [desserte, French.] The last course at an entertainment; the fruit or sweetmeats set on the table after the meat.

To give thee all thy due, thou hast the art
To make a supper with a fine dessert. Dryden.

At your dessert bright pewter comes too late,
When your first course was well serv'd up in plate. King.

To DE'STINATE. v. a. [destino, Lat.] To design for any particular end or purpose.

Birds are destinated to fly among the branches of trees and bushes. Ray on the Creation.

DESTINA'TION. n. f. [from destinate.]
The purpose for which any thing is appointed; the ultimate design.

The passages through which spirits are conveyed to the members, being almost infinite, and each of them drawn through so many meanders, it is wonderful that they should perform their regular destinations without losing their way. Glanville.

There is a great variety of apprehensions and fancies of men, in the destination and application of things to several ends and uses. Hale.

To DE'STINE. v. a. [destino, Latin.]

1. To doom; to devote; to appoint unalterably to any state or condition.

Wherefore cease we then?
Say they who counsel war: we are decreed,
Reserv'd, and destin'd to eternal woe;
Whatever doing, what can we suffer more? Mik.

All altars flame; before each altar lies,
Drench'd in his gore, the destin'd sacrifice. Dryd.

2. To appoint to any use or purpose.

Too thin blood strays into the immediately subordinate vessels, which are destined to carry humours secreted from the blood. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. To devote; to doom to punishment or misery: used absolutely.

May heav'n around this destin'd head
The choicest of its curses shed. Prior.

4. To fix unalterably.

The infernal judge's dreadful pow'r
From the dark urn shall throw thy destin'd hour. Prior.

DE'STINY. a. f. [destinée, French.]

1. The power that spins the life, and determines the fate, of living beings.

Thou art neither like thy sire or dam;
But, like a foul mis-shapen stigmat'ick,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided. Shakespeare.

2. Fate; invincible necessity.

He said, dear daughter, rightly may I rue
The fall of famous children born of me;
But who can turn the stream of destiny.
Or break the chain of strong necessity,
Which fast is tied to Jove's eternal seat? Fairy Q.
How can hearts, not free, be tried whether they serve

Willing or no, who will but what they must
By destiny, and can no other chuse? Milton.

Had thy great desiny but given thee skill
To know, as well as pow'r to act, her will. Dean.
Chance, or forceful desiny,
Which forms in causes first what'er shall be.
Dryden.

3. Doom; condition in future time.

At the pit of Acheron Meet me i' th' morning: thither he Will come to know his desiny. Shakespeare.

DESTITUTE. adj. [destitutus, Latin.]

1. Forsaken; abandoned: with of.

To forsake the true God of heaven, is to fall into all such evils upon the face of the earth, as men, either desitute of grace divine, may commit, or unprotected from above, may endure. Hooker.

2. Abject; friendless.

He will regard the prayer of the desitute, and not despise their prayer. Psalms cii. 17.

3. In want of.

Take the desit'd way
To find the regions desitute of day. Dryden.
Nothing can be a greater instance of the love that mankind has for liberty, than such a savage mountain covered with people, and the Campania of Rome, which lies in the same country, desitute of inhabitants. Addison.

DESTITUTION. n. f. [from desitute.]

Want; the state in which something is wanted: applied to persons.

That desititution in food and cloathing is such an impediment, as, till it be removed, suffereth not the mind of man to admit any other care. Hooker.

They which want furtherance unto knowledge, are not left in so great desititution, that justly any man should think the ordinary means of eternal life taken from them. Hooker.

The order of paying the debts of contract or restitution is set down by the civil laws of a kingdom: in desititution or want of such rules, we are to observe the necessity of the creditor, the time of the delay, and the special obligations of friendship.

Taylor.

To DESTROY. v. a. [destruo, Latin; destruire, French.]

1. To overturn a city; to raze a build- ing; to ruin.

The Lord will destroy this city. Gen. xix. 14.

2. To lay waste; to make desolate.

Solyman sent his army, which burnt and de- stroyed the country villages. Knolles.

3. To kill.

A people, great and many, and tall as the Anakims; but the Lord destroyed them before them, and they succeeded them, and dwelt in their stead.
Deut. ii. 21.

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Shak.

The wise Providence hath placed a certain antipathy between some animals and many insects, whereby they delight in their destruction, though they use them not as food; as the peacock destroys snakes and adders; the weasel, mice and rats;
spiders, flies; and some sorts of flies destroy spiders.
Hale.

4. To put an end to; to bring to nought.

Do we not see that slothful, intemperate, and incontinent persons destroy their bodies with diseases, their reputations with disgrace, and their faculties with want? Bentley.

There will be as many sovereigns as fathers:
the mother too hath her title, which destroys the sovereignty of one supreme monarch. Locke.

DESTROYER. n. f. [from destroy.] The person that destroys or lays waste; a murderer.

It is said, that Assur both founded it and ruined it: it may be understood, that Assur the founder was the son of Shem, and Assur the destroyer was an Assyrian. Raleigh.

Triumph, to be styl'd great conquerors,
Patrons of mankind, gods, and sons of gods!
Destroyers rightlier call'd, and slayers of men.
Milton.

Yet, guiltless too, this bright destroyer lives;
At random wounds, nor knows the wound she gives.
Pope.

DESTRUCTIBLE. adj. [from destruo, Latin.] Liable to destruction.

DESTRUCTIBILITY. n. f. [from destruc- tibile.] Liableness to destruction.

DESTRUCTION. n. f. [destructio, Latin.]

1. The act of destroying; subversion; de- molition.

2. Murder; massacre.

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Shak.

3. The state of being destroyed; ruin; murder suffered.

If that your moody discontented souls
Do through the clouds behold this present hour,
Even for revenge mock my destruction. Shakespeare.

When that which we immortal thought,
We saw so near destruction brought,
We felt what you did then endure,
And tremble yet, as not secure. Waller.

4. The cause of destruction; a destroyer; a depopulator: as a consuming plague.

The destruction that wasteth at noon-day.

Psalms xci. 6.

5. [In theology.] Eternal death.

Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction.

Matthew.

DESTRUCTIVE. adj. [destruivus, low Latin.]

1. That which destroys; wasteful; causing ruin and devastation; that which brings to destruction.

In ports and roads remote,
Destructive fires among whole fleets we send.

Dryden.

One may think that the continuation of existence, with a kind of resistance to any destructive force, is the continuation of solidity. Locke.

2. With of.

He will put an end to so absurd a practice, which makes our most refined diversions destructive of all politeness. Addison.

Both are defects equally destructive of true religion. Rogers.

3. With to.

In a firm building, even the cavities ought not to be filled with rubbish, which is of a perishable kind, destructive to the strength. Dryden.

Excess of cold, as well as heat, pains us; because it is equally destructive to that temper which is necessary to the preservation of life. Locke.

DESTRUCTIVELY. adv. [from destruc- tive.] Ruinously; mischievously; with power to destroy.

What remains but to breathe out Moses's wish?
O that men were not so destructively foolish!

Decay of Piety.

DESTRUCTIVENESS. n. f. [from destruc- tive.] The quality of destroying or ruin- ing.

The vice of professors exceeds the destructiveness of the most hostile assaults, as intestine treachery is more ruinous than foreign violence.

Decay of Piety.

DESTRUCTOR. n. f. [from destroy.] De- stroyer; consumer.

Helmont wittily calls the fire the destructor and the artificial death of things. Boyle.

DESUDATION. n. f. [desudatio, Lat.] A profuse and inordinate sweating, from what cause soever.

DESUETUDE. n. f. [desuetudo, Lat.] Ces- sation to be accustomed; discontinuance of practice or habit.

By the irruption of numerous armies of barbarous people, those countries were quickly fallen off, with barbarism and desuetude, from their former civility and knowledge. Hale.

We see in all things how desuetude does contract and narrow our faculties, so that we can apprehend only those things wherein we are conversant.

Government of the Tongue.

DESULTORY. } adj. [desultorius, Lat.]

DESULTORIOUS. } Roving from thing to thing; unsettled; immethodical; un- constant. Desultorious is not in use.

'Tis not for a desultory thought to atone for a lewd course of life; nor for any thing but the superinducting of a virtuous habit upon a vicious one,
to qualify an effectual conversion. L'Estrange.

Let but the least trifle cross his way, and his desultorious fancy presently takes the scent, leaves the unfinished and half-mangled notion, and skips away in pursuit of the new game. Norris.

Take my desultory thoughts in their native order, as they rise in my mind, without being reduced to rules, and marshalled according to art.

Felton on the Classics.

To DESUME. v. a. [desumo, Latin.] To take from any thing; to borrow.

This pebble doth suppose, as pre-existent to it,
the more simple matter out of which it is desumed, the heat and influence of the sun, and the due preparation of the matter. Hale.

They have left us relations suitable to those of Ælian and Pliny, whence they desumed their narrations. Brown.

Laws, if convenient and useful, are never the worse though they be desumed and taken from the laws of other countries. Hale.

To DETACH. v. a. [detachor, Fr.]

1. To separate; to disengage; to part from something.

The heat takes along with it a sort of vegetative and terrestrial matter, which it detaches from the uppermost stratum. Woodward.

The several parts of it are detached one from the other, and yet join again one cannot tell how. Pope.

2. To send out part of a greater body of men on an expedition.

If ten men are in war with forty, and the latter detach only an equal number to the engagement, what benefit do they receive from their superiority? Addison.

DETA'CHMENT. n. f. [from detach.] A body of troops sent out from the main army.

The czar dispatched instructions to send out detachments of his cavalry, to prevent the king of Sweden's joining his army. Tatler, No 55.

Besides materials, which are brute and blind,
Did not this work require a knowing mind,
Who for the task should fit detachments chuse
From all the atoms? Blackmore.

To DETA'IL. v. a. [detailler, Fr.] To relate particularly; to particularise; to display minutely and distinctly.

They will perceive the mistakes of these philosophers, and be able to answer their arguments, without my being obliged to detail them. Cibyns.

DETA'IL. n. f. [detail, Fr.] A minute and particular account.

I chuse, rather than trouble the reader with a detail here, to defer them to their proper place.

Woodward.

I was unable to treat this part of my subject more in detail, without becoming dry and tedious.

Pope.

To DETA'IN. v. a. [detineo, Lat.]

1. To keep that which belongs to another.

Detain not the wages of the hireling; for every degree of detention of it, beyond the time, is injustice and uncharitableness. Taylor.

2. To withhold; to keep back.

These doings sting him
So venomously, that burning shame detains him
From his Cordelia. Shakespeare.

He

He has described the passion of Calypso, and the indecent advances she made to detain him from his country. Broomer.

3. To restrain from departure.

Let us detain thee until we shall have made ready a kid. Judges, xiii. 15.

Had Orpheus sung it in the nether sphere,
So much the hymn had pleas'd the tyrant's ear,
The wife had been detain'd to keep her husband there. Dryden.

4. To hold in custody.

DETAINDER. n. f. [from detain.] The name of a writ for holding one in custody.

DETAINER. n. f. [from detain.] He that holds back any one's right; he that detains any thing.

Judge of the obligation that lies upon all sorts of injurious persons; the sacrilegious, the detainers of tithes, and cheaters of men's inheritances. Taylor.

DETECT. v. a. [deteſtus, Lat.]

1. To discover; to find out any crime or artifice.

There's no true lover in the forest; else sighing every minute, and groaning every hour, would detect the lazy foot of time as well as a clock. Shak.

Though should I hold my peace, yet thou Wouldst easily detect what I conceal. Milton.

2. To discover in general.

The utmost infinite ramifications and insculcations of all the several sorts of vessels may easily be detected by glasses. Ray.

DETECTOR. n. f. [from detect.] A discoverer; one that finds out what another desires to hide.

Oh, heavens! that this treason were not; or not I the detector. Shakespeare.

Hypocrisy has a secret hatred of its detector; that which will bring it to a test which it cannot pass. Decay of Piety.

DETECTION. n. f. [from detect.]

1. Discovery of guilt or fraud, or any other fault.

Should I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her then from the ward of her purity. Shakespeare.

That is a sign of the true evangelical zeal, and note for the detection of its contrary: it should abound more in the mild and good-natured affections, than in the vehement and wrathful passions. Spratt.

Detection of the incoherence of loose discourses was wholly owing to the syllogistical form. Locke.

2. Discovery of any thing hidden.

Not only the sea, but rivers and rains also, are instrumental to the detection of amber, and other fossils, by washing away the earth and dirt that concealed them. Woodward.

DETENTION. n. f. [from detain.]

1. The act of keeping what belongs to another.

How goes the world, that I am thus encount'ed
With clam'rous claims of debt, of broken bonds,
And the detention of long since due debts,
Against my honour? Shakespeare.

2. Confinement; restraint.

This worketh by detention of the spirits, and consipation of the tangible parts. Bacon.

DETER. v. a. [deterreo, Lat.] To discourage by terror; to fright from any thing.

I never yet the tragick strain assay'd, Deter'd by thy inimitable maid. Waller.

Many and potent enemies tempt and deter us from our duty; yet our case is not hard, so long as we have a greater strength on our side. Tillotson.

Beauty or unbecomingness are of more force to draw or deter imitation, than any discourses which can be made to them. Locke.

The ladies may not be deterred from corresponding with me by this method. Addison.

My own face deters me from my glass;
And Kneller only shews what Celia was. Prior.

DETERGE. v. a. [detergo, Lat.] To cleanse a sore; to purge any part from feculence or obstructions.

Consider the part and habit of body, and add or diminish your simples as you design to deterge or incarn. Wileman.

Sea salt preserves bodies, through which it passeth, from corruption; and it detergeth the vessels, and keeps the fluids from putrefaction. Arbutnot.

DETERGENT. adj. [from deterge.] That which cleanses.

The food ought to be nourishing and detergent. Arbutnot.

DETERIORATION. n. f. [from deterior, Lat.] The act of making any thing worse; the state of growing worse.

DETERMENT. n. f. [from deter.] Cause of discouragement; that by which one is deterred. A good word, but not now used.

This will not be thought a discouragement unto spirits, which endeavour to advantage nature by art; nor will the ill success of some be made a sufficient determent unto others. Brown's Vulg. Err.

These are not all the determents that opposed my obeying you. Boyle.

DETERMINABLE. adj. [from determine.] That which may be certainly decided.

Whether all plants have seeds, were more easily determinable, if we could conclude concerning harts-tongue, ferns, and some others. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

About this matter, which seems so easily determinable by sense, accurate and sober men widely disagree. Boyle.

DETERMINE. v. a. [determiner, French.] To limit; to fix; to determine; to terminate: not in use.

The fly-flow hours shall not determine
The dateless limit of thy dear exile. Shakespeare.

DETERMINATE. adj. [determinatus, Latin.]

1. Settled; definite; determined.

Demonstrations in numbers, if they are not more evident and exact than in extension, yet they are more general in their use, and determinate in their application. Locke.

To make all the planets move about the sun in circular orbs, there must be given to each, by a determinate impulse, those present particular degrees of velocity which they now have, in proportion to their distances from the sun, and to the quantity of the solar matter. Bentley.

2. Established; settled by rule; positive.

Scriptures are read before the time of divine service, and without either choice or stint appointed by any determinate order. Hooker.

3. Decisive; conclusive.

I th' progress of this business,
Ere a determinate resolution, he,
I mean the bishop, did require a respite. Shakespeare.

4. Fixed; resolute.

Like men disused in a long peace, more determinate to do, than skilful how to do. Sidney.

5. Resolved.

My determinate voyage is mere extravagancy. Shakespeare.

DETERMINATELY. adv. [from determine.]

1. Resolutely; with fixed resolve.

The queen obeyed the king's commandment, full of raging agonies, and determinately bent that she would seek all loving means to win Zelmane. Sidney.

In those errors they are so determinately settled, that they pay unto falsity the whole sum of whatsoever love is owing unto God's truth. Hooker.

2. Certainly; unchangeably.

Think thus with yourselves, that you have not the making of things true or false; but that the truth and existence of things is already fixed and settled, and that the principles of religion are already either determinately true or false, before you think of them. Tillotson.

DETERMINATION. n. f. [from determine.]

1. Absolute direction to a certain end.

When we voluntarily waste much of our lives, that remissness can by no means consist with a constant determination of will or desire to the greatest apparent good. Locke.

2. The result of deliberation; conclusion formed; resolution taken.

They have acquainted me with their determination, which is to go home, and trouble you no more. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

The proper acts of the intellect are intellection, deliberation, and determination or decision. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

It is much disputed by divines, concerning the power of man's will to good and evil in the state of innocence; and upon very nice and dangerous precipices stand their determinations on either side. South.

Consult thy judgment, affections, and inclinations, and make thy determination upon every particular; and be always as suspicious of thyself as possible. Calamy.

3. Judicial decision.

He confined the knowledge of governing to justice and lenity, and to the speedy determination of civil and criminal causes. Gulliver's Travels.

DETERMINATIVE. adj. [from determine.]

1. That which uncontrollably directs to a certain end.

That individual action, which is justly punished as sinful in us, cannot proceed from the special influence and determinative power of a just cause. Bramhall against Hobbes.

2. That which makes a limitation.

If the term added to make up the complex subject does not necessarily or constantly belong to it, then it is determinative, and limits the subject to a particular part of its extension; as, every pious man shall be happy. Watts.

DETERMINATOR. n. f. [from determine.] One who determines.

They have recourse unto the great determinator of virginity, conceptions, fertility, and the inscrutable infirmities of the whole body. Brown.

DETERMINE. v. a. [determiner, Fr. determino, Lat.]

1. To fix; to settle.

Is it concluded he shall be protector?
—It is determin'd, not concluded yet;
But so it must be, if the king miscarry. Shak.

More particularly to determine the proper season for grammar, I do not see how it can be made a study, but as an introduction to rhetoric. Locke.

2. To conclude; to fix ultimately.

Probability, in the nature of it, supposes that a thing may or may not be so, for any thing that yet appears, or is certainly determined, on the other side. South.

Milton's subject was still greater than Homer's or Virgil's: it does not determine the fate of single persons or nations, but of a whole species. Addison.

Destruction hangs on every word we speak, On every thought, till the concluding stroke Determines all, and closes our design. Addison.

3. To bound; to confine.

The knowledge of men hitherto hath been determined by the view or sight; so that whatsoever is invisible, either in respect of the fineness of the body body itself, or the smallness of the parts, or of the subtilty of the motion, is little enquired. Bacon.

The principium individuationis is existence itself, which determines a being of any sort to a particular time and place, incommunicable to two beings of the same kind. Locke.

No sooner have they climbed that hill, which thus determines their view at a distance, but a new prospect is opened. Atterbury.

4. To adjust; to limit; to define.

He that has settled in his mind determined ideas, with names affixed to them, will be able to discern their differences one from another, which is really distinguishing. Locke.

5. To influence the choice.

You have the captives
Who were the opposites of this day's strife;
We do require them of you, so to use them
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine. Shakespeare.

A man may suspend the act of his choice from being determined for or against the thing proposed, till he has examined it. Locke.

As soon as the studious man's hunger and thirst makes him uneasy, he, whose will was never determined to any pursuit of good cheer, is, by the uneasiness of hunger and thirst, presently determined to eating and drinking. Locke.

6. To resolve.

Jonathan knew that it was determined of his father to slay David. 1 Sam. xx. 33.

7. To decide.

I do not ask whether bodies so exist, that the motion of one cannot be without the motion of another: to determine this either way, is to beg the question for or against a vacuum. Locke.

8. To put an end to; to destroy.

Now where is he, that will not stay so long Till sickness hath determin'd me? Shakespeare.

To DETERMINE. v. n.

1. To conclude; to form a final conclusion.

Eve! now expect great tidings, which perhaps
Of us will soon determine, or impose
New laws to be observ'd. Milton.

2. To settle opinion.

It is indifferent to the matter in hand which
By the learned shall determine of it. Locke.

3. To end; to come to an end.

They were apprehended, and, after conviction,
the danger determined by their deaths. Hayward.
All pleasure springing from a gratified passion, as most of the pleasure of sin does, must needs determine with that passion. South.

4. To make a decision.

She soon shall know of us
How honourably and how kindly we Determine for her. Shakespeare.

5. To end consequentially.

Revolutions of state, many times, make way for new institutions and forms; and often determine in either setting up some tyranny at home, or bringing in some conquest from abroad. Temple.

6. To resolve concerning any thing.

Now, noble peers, the cause why we are met
Is to determine of the coronation. Shakespeare.

DETERRATION. n. f. [de and terra, Latin; deterre, French.] Discovery of any thing by removal of the earth that hides it; the act of unburying.

This concerns the raising of new mountains, deterrations, or the devolution of earth down upon the valleys from the hills and higher grounds. Woodward.

DETERSION. n. f. [from detergo, Latin.] The act of cleansing a sore.

I endeavoured deterfion, but the matter could not be discharged. Wifeman.

DETERSIVE. adj. [from deterge.] Having the power to cleanse.

DETERSIVE. n. f. An application that has the power of cleansing wounds.

We frequently see simple ulcers afflicted with sharp humours, which corrode them, and render them painful fordid ulcers, if not timely relieved by detersives and lenients. Wifeman.

To DETEST. v. a. [detestor, Latin.] To hate; to abhor; to abominate.

Nigh thereto the ever-damned beast
Durst not approach; for he was deadly made,
And all that life preserved did detest. Fairy Queen.

Glory grows guilty of detested crimes,
When for fame's sake, for praise, an outward part,
We bend to that the working of the heart. Shak.

I've liv'd in such dishonour, that the gods
Detest my baseness. Shakespeare.

There is that naturally in the heart of man which abhors sin as sin, and consequently would make him detest it both in himself and others too. South.

Who dares think one thing, and another tell,
My heart detests him as the gates of hell. Pope.

DETESTABLE. adj. [from detest.] Hateful; abhorred; abominable; odious.

Beguil'd, divorc'd, wrong'd, spighted, slain!
Most detestable death. Shakespeare.

He desired him to consider that both armies consisted of Christians, to whom nothing is more detestable than effusion of human blood. Hayward.

DETESTABLY. adv. [from detestable.] Hatefully; abominably; odiously.

It stands here stigmatized by the apostle as a temper of mind rendering men so detestably bad, that the great enemy of mankind neither can nor desires to make them worse. South.

DETESTATION. n. f. [from detest.]

1. Hatred; abhorrence; abomination.

Then only did misfortune make her see what she had done, especially finding in us rather detestation than pity. Sidney.

2. It is sometimes used with for; but of seems more proper.

The detestation you express
For vice in all its glitt'ring drefs. Swift.
Our love of God will inspire us with a detestation for sin, as what is of all things most contrary to his divine nature. Swift.

DETESTER. n. f. [from detest.] One that hates or abhors.

To DETHRONE. v. a. [de and thronus, Latin.] To divest of regality; to throw down from the throne; to deprive of regal dignity.

DETONATION. n. f. [detono, Lat.] Somewhat more forcible than the ordinary crackling of salts in calcination; as in the going off of the pulvis or aurum fulminans, or the like. It is also used for that noise which happens upon the mixture of fluids that ferment with violence, as oil of turpentine with oil of vitriol, resembling the explosion of gunpowder. Quincy.

A new coal is not to be cast on the nitre, till the detonation occasioned by the former be either quite or almost altogether ended; unless it chance that the puffing matter do blow the coal too soon out of the crucible. Boyle.

To DETONIZE. v. a. [from detono, Latin.] To calcine with detonation. A chemical term.

Nineteen parts in twenty of detonized nitre is destroyed in eighteen days. Arbutnot on Air.

To DETORT. v. a. [detortus, of detorqueo, Latin.] To wrest from the original import, meaning, or design.

They have assumed what amounts to an infallibility in the private spirit, and have detorted texts of scripture to the sedition, disturbance, and destruction of the civil government. Dryden.

To DETRACT. v. a. [detractum, Latin; detracter, French.]

1. To derogate; to take away by envy, calumny, or censure, any thing from the reputation of another: with from.

Those were assistants in private, but not trusted to manage the affairs in public; for that would detract from the honour of the principal ambassador. Bacon.

No envy can detract from this: it will shine in history, and, like swans, grow whiter the longer it endures. Dryden.

2. To take away; to withdraw.

By the largeness of the cornices they hinder both the light within, and likewise detract much from the view of the front without. Walton.

The multitude of partners does detract nothing from each private share, nor does the publickness of it lessen propriety in it. Boyle.

DETRACTER. n. f. [from detract.] One that takes away another's reputation; one that impairs the honour of another injuriously.

I am right glad to be thus satisfied, in that I yet was never able till now to choke the mouth of such detracters with the certain knowledge of their slanderous untruths. Spenser on Ireland.

Whether we are so entirely sure of their loyalty upon the present foot of government, as you may imagine, their detracters make a question. Swift.

Away the fair detracter went,
And gave by turns their censures vent. Swift.

DETRACTION. n. f. [detractio, Latin; detractio, French.]

Detraction, in the native importance of the word, signifies the withdrawing or taking off from a thing; and, as it is applied to the reputation, it denotes the impairing or lessening a man in point of fame, rendering him less valued and esteemed by others, which is the final aim of detraction. Ayliffe.

I put myself to thy direction, and Unspeak mine own detraction; here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. Shakespeare.

Fame, that her high birth to raise Seem'd erst so lavish and profuse,
We may justly now accuse
Of detraction from her praise. Milton.

If detraction could invite us, discretion surely would contain us from any derogatory intention. Brown.

To put a stop to the insults and detractions of vain men, I resolved to enter into the examination. Woodward.

To consider an author as the subject of obloquy and detraction, we may observe with what pleasure a work is received by the invidious part of mankind, in which a writer falls short of himself. Addison.

DETRACTORY. adj. [from detract.] Defamatory by denial of desert; derogatory. Sometimes with to, properly from.

This is not only derogatory unto the wisdom of God, who hath proposed the world unto our knowledge, and thereby the notion of himself; but also detractory unto the intellect and sense of man, expressly disposed for that inquisition. Brown.

In mentioning the joys of heaven, I use the expressions I find less detractory from a theme above our praises. Boyle.

The detractory lye takes from a great man the reputation that justly belongs to him. Arbutnot.

DETRACTRESS. n. f. [from detract.] A censorious woman.

If any shall detract from a lady's character, unless she be absent, the said detractors shall be forthwith ordered to the lowest place of the room.

Addison.

DETRIMENT. n. f. [detrimentum, Latin.] Loss; damage; mischief; diminution; harm.

Difficult it must be for one Christian church to abolish that which all had received and held for the space of many ages, and that without any detriment unto religion.

Hooker.

I can repair
That detriment, if such it be, to lose Self-lost.

Milton.

If your joint pow'r prevail, th' affairs of hell
No detriment need fear; go, and be strong. Milton.
There often fall out so many things to be done on the sudden, that some of them must of necessity be neglected for that whole year, which is the greatest detriment to this whole mystery.

Evelyn's Kalendar.

Let a family burn but a candle a night less than the usual number, and they may take in the Spectator without detriment to their private affairs.

Addison.

DETRIMENTAL. adj. [from detriment.] Mischievous; harmful; causing loss.

Among all honorary rewards, which are neither dangerous nor detrimental to the donor, I remember none so remarkable as the titles which are bestowed by the emperor of China: these are never given to any subject till the subject is dead.

Addison.

Obstinacy in prejudices, which are detrimental to our country, ought not to be mistaken for virtuous resolution and firmness of mind.

Addison.

DETRITION. n. f. [detero, detritus, Latin.] The act of wearing away.

Diſt.

To DETRUDE. v. a. [detrudo, Latin.] To thrust down; to force into a lower place.

Such as are detruded down to hell,
Either for shame they still themselves retire,
Or, tied in chains, they in close prison dwell.

Davies.

Philosophers are of opinion, that the souls of men may, for their miscarriages, be detruded into the bodies of beasts.

Locke.

At thy command the vernal sun awakes
The torpid sap, detruded to the root
By wintry winds.

Thomson.

To DETRUNCATE. v. a. [detruncō, Latin.] To lop; to cut; to shorten by deprivation of parts.

1. To wander from the right or common way.

The rest to some faint meaning make pretence,
But Shadwell never deviates into sense.

Dryden.

Thus Pegasus, a nearer way to take,
May boldly deviate from the common track.

Pope.

What makes all physical and moral ill?

There nature deviates, and here wanders will.

Pope.

Besides places which may deviate from the sense of the author, it would be kind to observe any deficiencies in the diction.

Pope.

2. To go astray; to err; to sin; to offend.

DEVIATION. n. f. [from deviate.]

1. The act of quitting the right way; error; wandering.

These bodies constantly move round in the same tracks, without making the least deviation.

Cheyns.

2. Variation from established rule.

Having once surveyed the true and proper natural alphabet, we may easily discover the deviations from it, in all the alphabets in use, either by defect of single characters, of letters, or by confusion of them.

Holder.

3. Offence; obliquity of conduct.

Worthy persons, if inadvertently drawn into a deviation, will endeavour instantly to recover their lost ground, that they may not bring error into habit.

Clarissa.

DEVI'CE. n. f. [devise, French; devisa, Italian.]

1. A contrivance; a stratagem.

This is our device,

That Falstaff at that oak shall meet with us.

Shakespeare.

He intended it as a politick device to lessen their interest, and keep them low in the world.

Atterb.

2. A design; a scheme formed; project; speculation.

Touching the exchange of laws in practice with laws in device, which they say are better for the state of the church, if they might take place; the farther we examine them, the greater cause we find to conclude, although we continue the same we are, the harm is not great.

Hooker.

His device is against Babylon, to destroy it.

Jur. li. 11.

There are many devices in a man's heart; nevertheless the counsel of the Lord shall stand.

Prov. xix. 21.

3. The emblem on a shield; the ensign armorial of a nation or family.

Then change we shields, and their devices bear;
Let fraud supply the want of force in war.

Dryd.

Hibernia's harp, device of her command,
And parent of her mirth, shall there be seen.

Prior.

They intend to let the world see what party they are of, by figures and designs upon these fans; as the knights-errant used to distinguish themselves by devices on their shields.

Addison.

4. Invention; genius.

He's gentle; never schooled, and yet learned;
Full of noble device, of all sorts enchantingly beloved.

Shakespeare.

DE'VIL. n. f. [diabolus, Saxon; diabolus, Latin.] It were more properly written diavel.

Are you a man?

—Ay, and a bold one, that dare look on that
Which might appal the devil.

Shakespeare.

2. A wicked man or woman.

See thyself, devil:

Proper deformity seems not in the fiend
So horrid as in woman.

Shakespeare.

3. A ludicrous term for mischief.

A war of profit mitigates the evil;
But to be tax'd, and beaten, is the devil.

Granville.

4. A kind of expletive, expressing wonder or vexation.

The things, we know, are neither rich nor rare;
But wonder how the devil they got there!

Pope.

5. A kind of ludicrous negative in an adverbial sense.

The devil was well, the devil a monk was he.

A Proverb.

DE'VILISH. adj. [from devil.]

1. Partaking of the qualities of the devil; diabolical; mischievous; malicious; destructive.

Gynecia mistrusted greatly Cecropia, because she had heard much of the devilish wickedness of her heart.

Sidney.

For grief thereof, and devilish despatch,
From his infernal furnace forth he threw

Huge flames, that dimmed all the heaven's light,
Enroll'd in dusky smoke and brimstone blue.

Spenser.

He trains his devilish engin'ry, impal'd
On ev'ry side with shadowy squadrons deep.

Milt.

Religious minds are inflamed with the love of publick devotion. Hooker.
For as I pass'd by and beheld your devotion, I found an altar with this inscription, To the unknown God. Acts, xvii. 23.

In vain doth man the name of just expect,
If his devotions he to God neglect. Denham.

4. Prayer;

4. Prayer; expression of devotion.

An aged holy man,
That day and night said his devotion,
No other worldly business did apply. Fairy Queen.
Your devotion has its opportunity: we must pray always, but chiefly at certain times. Spratt.

5. The state of the mind under a strong sense of dependance upon God; devoutness; piety.

Grateful to acknowledge whence his good Descends, thither with heart, and voice, and eyes
Directed in devotion, to adore
And worship God supreme, who made him chief
Of all his works. Milton.

From the full choir when loud hosannas rise,
And swell the pomp of dreadful sacrifice;
Amid that scene, if some relenting eye
Glance on the stone where our cold reliques lie,
Devotion's self shall steal a thought from heav'n,
One human tear shall drop, and be forgiv'n. Pope.

Devotion may be considered either as an exercise of publick or private prayers at set times and occasions, or as a temper of the mind, a state and disposition of the heart, which is rightly affected with such exercises. Law on Christ's Perfection.

6. An act of reverence, respect, or ceremony.

Whither away so fast?
—Upon the like devotion as yourselves,
To gratulate the gentle princes there. Shakesp.

7. Strong affection; ardent love; such as makes the lover the sole property of the person loved.

Be opposite all planets of good luck
To my proceeding, if, with pure heart's love,
Immaculate devotion, holy thoughts,
I tender not thy beauteous princely daughter. Shakesp.

He had a particular reverence for the person of the king, and the more extraordinary devotion for that of the prince, as he had had the honour to be trusted with his education. Clarendon.

8. Earnestness; ardour; eagerness.

He seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him; and leaves nothing undone that may fully discover him their opposite. Shakesp.

9. Disposal; power; state of dependance on any one.

Arundel castle would keep that rich corner of the country at his majesty's devotion. Clarendon.

DEVOTIONAL. adj. [from devotion.] Pertaining to devotion; annexed to worship; religious.

Nor are the soberest of them so apt for that devotional compliance and juncture of hearts, which I desire to bear in holy offices, to be performed with me. King Charles.

The favourable opinion and good word of men comes oftentimes at a very easy rate, by a few demure looks, with some devotional postures and grimaces. South.

DEVOTIONALIST. n. f. [from devotion.]

A man zealous without knowledge; superstitiously devout.

TO DEVOUR. v. a. [devo, Latin.]

1. To eat up ravenously, as a wild beast or animal of prey.

We will say some evil beast hath devoured him. Genesis.

We've willing dames enough: there cannot be
That vulture in you, to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves,
Finding it so inclin'd. Shakesp.

So looks the pent up lion o'er the wretch
That trembles under his devouring paws. Shakesp.

2. To destroy or consume with rapidity and violence.

A fire devours before them, and behind them
a flame burneth. Job, iii. 3.

How dire a tempest from Mycenæ pour'd,
Our plains, our temples, and our town devour'd;
It was the waste of war. Dryden.

Notwithstanding that Socrates lived in the time of this devouring pestilence at Athens, he never caught the least infection. Addison.

3. To swallow up; to annihilate.

He seem'd in swiftness to devour the way. Shakespeare.

Such a pleasure as grows fresher upon enjoyment; and though continually fed upon, yet is never devoured. South.

Death stalks behind thee, and each flying hour
Does some loose remnant of thy life devour. Dryd.

4. To enjoy with avidity.

Longing they look, and gaping at the sight,
Devour her o'er and o'er with vast delight. Dryd.

DEVOURER. n. f. [from devour.] A consumer; he that devours; he that preys upon.

Rome is but a wilderness of tygers;
Tygers must prey, and Rome affords no prey
But me and mine: how happy art thou, then,
From these devourers to be banished! Shakespeare.

Since those leviathans are withdrawn, the lesser devourers supply their place: fraud succeeds to violence. Decay of Piety.

Carp and tench do best together, all other fish being devourers of their spawn. Mortimer.

DEVOUT. adj. [devotus, Latin.]

1. Pious; religious; devoted to holy duties.

We must be constant and devout in the worship of our God, and ready in all acts of benevolence to our neighbour. Rogers.

2. Filled with pious thoughts.

For this, with soul devout, he thank'd the god;
And, of success secure, return'd to his abode. Dryden.

3. Expressive of devotion or piety.

Anon dry ground appears, and from his ark
The ancient fire descends with all his train;
Then with uplifted hands, and eyes devout,
Grateful to heav'n. Milton.

DEVOUTLY. adv. [from devout.] Piously; with ardent devotion; religiously.

Her grace rose, and with modest paces Came to the altar, where she kneel'd; and saint-like

Cast her fair eyes to heav'n, and pray'd devoutly. Shakespeare

One of the wise men having a while attentively and devoutly viewed and contemplated this pillar and cross, fell down upon his face. Bacon.

Her twilights were more clear than our mid-day,
She dreamt devoutlier than most use to pray. Donne.

Think, O my soul, devoutly think,
How, with affrighted eyes,

Thou saw'st the wide extended deep
In all its horrors rise! Addison.

To second causes we seem to trust, without expressing, so devoutly as we ought to do, our dependance on the first. Asterbury.

DEUSE. n. f. [more properly than deuce, Junius, from Dufus, the name of a certain species of evil spirits.] The devil: a ludicrous word.

'Twas the prettiest prologue, as he wrote it;
Well, the deuce take me if I ha'n't forgot it. Congreve.

DEUTEROGAMY. n. f. [διύτερος and γάμος.] A second marriage. Di.

DEUTERONOMY. n. f. [διύτερος νόμος.] The second book of the law; the fifth book of Moses.

DEUTEROSCOPY. n. f. [διύτερος and σκοπία.] The second intention; the meaning beyond the literal sense: not in use.

Not attaining the deuteroscopy, or second intention of the words, they are fain to omit their consequences, coherences, figures, or tropologies. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEW. n. f. [deap, Saxon; daauw, Dutch.]

The moisture upon the ground.

Fogs which we frequently observe after sun-setting, even in our hottest months, are nothing but a vapour consisting of water; which vapour was sent up in greater quantity all the foregoing day, than now in the evening: but the sun then being above the horizon, taking it at the surface of the earth, and rapidly mounting it up into the atmosphere, it was not discernible: the sun being now gone off, the vapour stagnates at and near the earth, and saturates the air till it is so thick as to be easily visible therein: and when at length the heat there is somewhat further spent, which is usually about the middle of the night, it falls down again in a dew, alighting upon herbs and other vegetables, which it cherishes, cools, and refreshes. Woodward.

Never yet one hour in bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep,
But with his tim'rous dreams was still awak'd. Shakespeare.

That churchman bears a bounteous mind, indeed;

A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
His dew falls ev'ry where. Shakespeare.

She looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shak.

Dews and rain are but the returns of moist vapours condensed. Bacon.

Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.

TO DEW. v. a. [from the noun.] To wet as with dew; to moisten; to bedew.

A trickling stream of balm most sovereign,
And dainty dew, which on the ground still fell,
And overflowed all the fertile plain,
As it had dew'd been with timely rain. Fa. Queen.

With him pour we in our country's purge
Each drop of us.

—Or so much as it needs
To dew the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds. Shakespeare.

— Give me thy hand,
That I may dew it with my mournful tears. Shakespeare.

He ceas'd; discerning Adam with such joy
Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tears, Without the vent of words, which these he breath'd. Milton.

Palemon above the rest appears
In sable garments, dew'd with gushing tears. Dryden.

In Gallick blood again
He dews his reeking sword, and strows the ground
With headless ranks. Phillips.

DEWBERRY. n. f. [from dew and berry.]

Dewberries, as they stand here among the more delicate fruits, must be understood to mean ras-berries, which are also of the bramble kind. Hammer.

Feed him with apricocks and dewberries,
With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries. Shakespeare.

DEWBESPENT. part. [dew and bespent.] Sprinkled with dew.

This evening late, by then the chewing flocks
Had ta'en their supper on the savoury herb
Of knot-grass dewbespent, and were in fold,
I sat me down to watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honey-suckle. Milton.

DEW-BURNING. adj. [from dew and burning.] The meaning of this compound is doubtful. Perhaps it alludes to the sparkling of dew.

He, now to prove his late renewed might,
High-brandishing his bright dew-burning blade,

3 U Upon

Upon his crested scalp so sore did smite,
That to the skull a yawning wound it made.

Fairy Queen.

DEWDROP. n. f. [dew and drop.] A drop of dew which sparkles at sun-rise.

I must go seek some dewdrops here,
And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear. Shakesp.
An host

Innumerable as the stars of night,
Or stars of morning, dewdrops, which the sun
Impearls on ev'ry leaf, and ev'ry flower. Milton.

Rest, sweet as dewdrops on the flow'ry lawns,
When the sky opens, and the morning dawns!

Tickell.

DEWLAP. n. f. [from lapping or licking the dew.]

1. The flesh that hangs down from the throat of oxen.

Large rowles of fat about his shoulders slung,
And from his neck the double dewlap hung. Add.

2. It is used in Shakespeare for a lip flaccid with age, in contempt.

And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab;
And when she drinks against her lips I bob,
And on the wither'd dewlap pour the ale. Shak.

DEWLAPT. adj. [from dewlap.] Furnished with dewlaps.

Who would believe that there were mountaineers Dewlapt like bulls, whose throats had hanging at em

Wallets of flesh? Shakespeare.

The dewlapt bull now chafes along the plain,
While burning love ferments in ev'ry vein. Gay.

DEW-WORM. n. f. [from dew and worm.] A worm found in dew.

For the trout, the dew worm, which some call the lob worm, and the brandling, are the chief.

Walton.

DEWY. adj. [from dew.]

1. Resembling dew; partaking of dew.

From the earth a dewy mist

Went up, and water'd all the ground, and each Plant of the field. Milton.

Where two adverse winds,
Sublim'd from dewy vapours in mid sky,
Engage with horrid shock, the ruffled brine Roars stormy. Phillips.

2. Moist with dew; roscid.

The joyous day 'gan early to appear,
And fair Aurora from her dewy bed
Of aged Tithone 'gan herself to rear,
With rosy cheeks, for shame as blushing red. Spens.

The bee with honied thigh,
That at her flow'ry work doth sing,
And the waters murmuring,
With such consort as they keep,
Entice the dewy feather'd sleep. Milton.

His dewy locks distill'd

Ambrosia. Milton.

Besides the succour which cold Ancien yields,
The rocks of Hircinus and dewy fields. Dryden.

My mother's blood

Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister Bounds in my fire's. Shakespeare.

DEXTERITY. n. f. [dexteritas, Lat.]

1. Readiness of limbs; activity; readiness to attain skill; skill; expertness.

2. Readiness of contrivance; quickness of expedient; skill of management.

His wisdom, by often evading from perils, was turned rather into a dexterity to deliver himself from dangers, when they pressed him, than into a providence to prevent and remove them afar off.

Bacon.

They attempted to be knaves, but wanted art and dexterity. South.

The same Protestants may, by their dexterity, make themselves the national religion, and dispose the church-revenues among their pastors. Swift.

DEXTEROUS. adj. [dexter, Latin.]

1. Expert at any manual employment; active; ready: as, a dexterous workman.
For both their dext'rous hands the lance could wield. Pope.

2. Expert in management; subtle; full of expedients.

They confine themselves, and are dexterous managers enough of the wares and products of that corner with which they content themselves. Locke.

DEXTEROUSLY. adv. [from dexterous.] Expertly; skilfully; artfully.

The magistrate sometimes cannot do his own office dexterously, but by acting the minister. South.

But then my study was to cog the dice,
And dext'rously to throw the lucky dice. Dryden.

As for any tunicles or skins, which should hinder the liver from enabling the dextral parts, we must not conceive it diffuseth its virtue by mere irradiation, but by its veins and proper vessels.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEXTRALITY. n. f. [from dextral.] The state of being on the right, not the left, side.

If there were a determinate prepotency in the right, and such as ariseth from a constant root in nature, we might expect the same in other animals, whose parts are also differenced by dextrality.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIABETES. n. f. [diabáilns.] A morbid copiousness of urine; a fatal colliquation by the urinary passages.

An increase of that secretion may accompany the general colliquations; as in fluxes, hectic sweats and coughs, diabetes, and other consumptions.

Derham's Physico-Theology.

DIABOLICAL. } adj. [from diabolus, La.
DIABOLICK. } tin.] Devilish; partaking of the qualities of the devil; impious; atrocious; nefarious; pertaining to the devil.

This, in other beasts observ'd,
Doubt might beget of diabolick pow'r,
Active within, beyond the sense of brute. Milton.

Does not the ambitious, the envious, and the revengeful man know very well, that the thirst of blood, and affectation of dominion by violence and oppression, is a most diabolical outrage upon the laws of God and Nature? L'Estrange.

The practice of lying is a diabolical exercise, and they that use it are the devil's children. Ray.

Damned spirits must needs be all envy, despair, and rage; and have so much of a diabolical nature in them, as to wish all men to share their misery.

Atterbury.

DIACODIUM. n. f. [διακόδιον.] The syrup of poppies.

DIACOSTICS. n. f. [διακοστικά.] The doctrine of sounds.

DI'ADEM. n. f. [diadema, Latin.]

1. A tiara; an ensign of royalty bound about the head of eastern monarchs.

The sacred diadem in pieces rent,
And purple robe gored with many a wound.

Spenser.

A list the coblers' temples ties,
To keep the hair out of their eyes;
From whence 'tis plain the diadem,
That princes wear, derives from them. Swift.

2. The mark of royalty worn on the head; the crown.

A crown,

Golden in shew, is but a wreath of thorns;
Brings dangers, troubles, cares, and sleepless nights,
To him who wears the regal diadem. Milton.

Why should he ravish then that diadem
From your grey temples, which the hand of time Must shortly plant on his?

Dante.

Faction, that once made diadems her prey,
And stopt our prince in his triumphant way,
Fled like a mist before this radiant day. Roscom.

DI'ADEMED. adj. [from diadem.] Adorned with a diadem; crowned.

Not so, when diadem'd with rays divine, Touch'd with the flame that breaks from virtue's shrine,

Her priestlike muse forbids the good to die,
And opens the temple of eternity. Pope.

DI'ADROM. n. f. [διαδρομή.] The time in which any motion is performed; the time in which a pendulum performs its vibration.

A gry is one tenth of a line, a line one tenth of an inch, an inch one tenth of a philosophical foot, a philosophical foot one third of a pendulum; whose diadroms, in the latitude of forty-five degrees, are each equal to one second of time, or a sixtieth of a minute. Locke.

DIÆRESIS. n. f. [διαίρεσις.] The separation or disjunction of syllables; as aër.

DIAGNOSTICK. n. f. [διαγνώσκω.] A symptom by which a disease is distinguished from others.

I shall lay down some indisputable marks of this vice, that whenever we see the tokens, we may conclude the plague is in the house:—let us hear your diagnosticks. Collier on Pride.

One of our physicians proved disappointed of his prognosticks, or rather diagnosticks.

Harvey on Consumptions.

DIA'GONAL. adj. [διαγώνιος.] Reaching from one angle to another, so as to divide a parallelogram into equal parts.

The monstrosity of the badger is ill-contrived, and with some disadvantage; the shortness being fixed unto the legs of one side, that might have been more properly placed upon the diagonal movers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

All sorts of stone composed of granules, will cut and rive in any direction, as well in a perpendicular, or in a diagonal, as horizontally and parallel to the side of the strata. Woodward.

DIA'GONAL. n. f. [from the adjective.] A line drawn from angle to angle, and dividing a square into equal parts.

When a man has in his mind the idea of two lines, viz. the side and diagonal of a square, whereof the diagonal is an inch long, he may have the idea also of the division of that line into a certain number of equal parts. Locke.

DIA'GONALLY. adv. [from diagonal.] In a diagonal direction.

The right and left are not defined by philosophers according to common acceptation, that is, respectively from one man unto another, or any constant site in each, as though that should be the right in one, which, upon confront or facing, stands athwart or diagonally unto the other; but were distinguished according unto their activity, and predominant locomotion, on the either side.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DI'AGRAM. n. f. [διάγραμμα.] A delineation of geometrical figures; a mathematical scheme.

Many a fair precept in poetry is like a seeming demonstration in the mathematicks; very specious in the diagram, but failing in the mechanick operation. Dryden.

Why do not these persons make a diagram of these cogitative lines and angles, and demonstrate their properties of perception and appetite, as plainly as we know the other properties of triangles and circles? Bentley.

DIAGRYDIATES. n. f. [from diagrydium, Lat.] Strong purgatives made with diagrydium.

All cholerick humours ought to be evacuated by diagrydiates, mixed with tartar, or some acid, or rhubarb powder.

Floyer.

DI'AL.

DIAL. n. f. [diale, Skinner.] A plate marked with lines, where a hand or shadow shews the hour.

O, gentlemen, the time of life is short:
To spend that shortness basely were too long;
Though life did ride upon a dial's point,
Still ending at th' arrival of an hour.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

If the motion be very slow, we perceive it not: we have no sense of the accretive motion of plants or animals; and the fly shadow steals away upon the dial, and the quickest eye can discover no more than that it is gone.

Glanville.

DIAL-PLATE. n. f. [dial and plate.] That on which hours or lines are marked.

Strada tells us that the two friends, being each of them possessed of a magnetical needle, made a kind of dial-plate, inscribing it with the four and twenty letters, in the same manner as the hours of the day are marked upon the ordinary dial-plate.

Addison's Spectator.

DIALECT. n. f. [διὰλεκτο.]

1. The subdivision of a language; as the Attic, Doric, Ionic, Æolic dialects.

2. Style; manner of expression.

When themselves do practise that whereof they write, they change their dialect; and those words they shun, as if there were in them some secret sting.

Hooker.

3. Language; speech.

In her youth

There is a prone and speechless dialect,
Such as moves men. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.

If the conferring of a kindness did not bind the person upon whom it was conferred to the returns of gratitude, why, in the universal dialect of the world, are kindnesses still called obligations? South.

DIALECTICAL. adj. [from dialectick.] Logical; argumental.

Those dialectical subtleties, that the schoolmen employ about physiological mysteries, more declare the wit of him that uses them, than increase the knowledge of sober lovers of truth.

Boyle.

DIALECTICK. n. f. [διαλεκτική.] Logic; the art of reasoning.

DIALING. n. f. [from dial.] The scia-terick science; the knowledge of shadow; the art of constructing dials on which the shadow may shew the hour.

DIALIST. n. f. [from dial.] A constructor of dials.

Scientifick dialists, by the geometrick considerations of lines, have found out rules to mark out the irregular motion of the shadow in all latitudes, and on all planes.

Moxon.

DIALOGIST. n. f. [from dialogue.] A speaker in a dialogue or conference; a writer of dialogues.

DIALOGUE. n. f. [διάλογος.] A conference; a conversation between two or more, either real or feigned.

Will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled in praise of the owl and cuckoo?

Shakespeare.

Oh, the impudence of this wicked sex! Lascivious dialogues are innocent with you.

Dryden's Spanish Friar.

In easy dialogues is Fletcher's praise;
He mov'd the mind, but had not pow'r to raise.

Dryden.

TO DIALOGUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To discourse with another; to confer.

Doft dialogue with thy shadow? Shak. Timon.

DIALYSIS. n. f. [διάλυσις.] The figure in rhetoric by which syllables or words are divided.

DIAMETER. n. f. [διά and μέτρον.] The line which, passing through the centre of a circle, or other curvilinear figure, divides it into equal parts.

The space between the earth and the moon, according to Ptolemy, is seventeen times the diameter of the earth, which makes, in a gross account, about one hundred and twenty thousand miles.

Raleigh.

The bay of Naples is the most delightful one that I ever saw: it lies in almost a round figure of about thirty miles in the diameter.

Addison on Italy.

DIAMETRICAL. adj. [from diameter.] Describing the diameter; relating to the diameter.

DIAMETRICALLY. adv. [from diametral.] According to the direction of a diameter; in direct opposition.

Christian piety is, beyond all other things, diametrically opposed to profaneness and impiety of actions.

Hammond.

DIAMETRICAL. adj. [from diameter.]

1. Describing a diameter.

2. Observing the direction of a diameter.

The sin of calumny is set in a most diametrical opposition to the evangelical precept of loving our neighbours as ourselves.

Government of the Tongue.

DIAMETRICALLY. adv. [from diametrical.] In a diametrical direction.

He persuaded the king to consent to what was diametrically against his conscience and his honour, and, in truth, his security.

Clarendon.

Thus intercepted in its passage, the vapour, which cannot penetrate the stratum diametrically, glides along the lower surface of it, permeating the horizontal interval, which is betwixt the said dense stratum and that which lies underneath it.

Woodw.

DIAMOND. n. f. [diamant, Fr. adamas, Latin.]

The diamond, the most valuable and hardest of all the gems, is, when pure, perfectly clear and pellucid as the purest water; and is eminently distinguished from all other substances by its vivid splendour, and the brightness of its reflexions.

It is extremely various in shape and size, being found in the greatest quantity very small, and the larger ones extremely seldom met with. The largest ever known is that in the possession of the Great Mogul, which weighs two hundred and seventy-nine carats, and is computed to be worth seven hundred and seventy-nine thousand two hundred and forty-four pounds.

The diamond bears the force of the strongest fires, except the concentrated solar rays, without hurt; and even that infinitely fiercest of all fires does it no injury unless directed to its weaker parts.

It bears a glass-house fire for many days, and if taken carefully out, and suffered to cool by degrees, is found as bright and beautiful as before; but if taken hastily out, it will sometimes crack, and even split into two or three pieces.

The places where we have diamonds are the East Indies and the Brasils; and though they are usually found clear and colourless, yet they are sometimes slightly tinged with the colours of the other gems, by the mixture of some metalline particles.

Hill on Fossils.

Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner;
Or, for the diamond, the chain you promis'd.

Shakespeare.

I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond: thou hast the right arched bent of the brow.

Shak.

The diamond is preferable and vastly superior to all others in lustre and beauty; as also in hardness, which renders it more durable and lasting, and therefore much more valuable, than any other stone.

Woodward.

The diamond is by mighty monarchs worn,
Fair as the star that ushers in the morn.

Blackm.

The lively diamond drinks thy purest rays,
Collected light, compact.

Thomson.

DIAPASE. n. f. [διά and πασών.] A chord including all tones. The old word for diapason.

See DIAPASON.

And 'twixt them both a quadrant was the base,
Proportion'd equally by seven and nine;

Nine was the circle set in heaven's place,
All which compacted made a good diapase.

Spenser.

The sweet numbers and melodious measures,
With which I wont the winged words to tie,

And make a tuneful diapase of pleasures,
Now being let to run at liberty.

Spenser.

DIAPASON. n. f. [διά and πασών.]

Diapason denotes a chord which includes all tones: it is the same with that we call an eighth, or an octave; because there are but seven tones or notes, and then the eighth is the same again with the first.

Harris.

It discovereth the true coincidence of sounds into diapasons, which is the return of the same sound.

Bacon.

Harsh din

Broke the fair music that all creatures made

To their great Lord, whose love their motion sway'd

In perfect diapason, whilst they stood

In first obedience, and their state of good.

Milton.

Many a sweet rise, many as sweet a fall,

A full-mouth diapason swallows all.

Crawshaw.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony,

This universal frame began;

From harmony to harmony

Through all the compass of the notes it ran,

The diapason closing full in man.

Dryden.

DIAPER. n. f. [diapre, Fr. of uncertain etymology.]

1. Linen cloth woven in flowers, and other figures; the finest species of figured linen after damask.

Not any damsel, which her vaunteth most

In skilful knitting of soft filken twine;

Nor any weaver, which his work doth boast

In diaper, in damask, or in linc,

Might in their diverse cunning ever dare

With this so curious net-work to compare.

Spens.

2. A napkin; a towel.

Let one attend him with a silver basin

Full of rose-water, and bestrew'd with flowers;

Another bear the ewer, a third a diaper.

Shaksp.

TO DIAPER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To variegate; to diversify; to flower.

For fear the stones her tender foot should wrong,

The ground he strew'd with flowers all along,

And diaper'd like the discolour'd mead.

Spenser.

Flora useth to cloath our grand-dame Earth with a new livery, diapered with various flowers, and chequered with delightful objects.

Hewel's Vocal Forest.

2. To draw flowers upon clothes.

If you diaper upon folds, let your work be broken, and taken, as it were, by the half; for reason tells you, that your fold must cover somewhat unseen.

Peasam on Drawing.

DIAPHANEITY. n. f. [from διαφανεία.]

Transparency; pellucidness; power of transmitting light.

Because the outward coat of the eye ought to be pellucid, to transmit the light, which, if the eyes should always stand open, would be apt to grow dry and shrink, and lose their diaphaneity;

therefore are the eyelids so contrived as often to wink, that so they may, as it were, glaze and varnish them over with the moisture they contain.

Ray.

DIAPHANICK. adj. [διά and φανός.]

Transparent; pellucid; having the power to transmit light.

Air is an element superior, and lighter than water, through whose vast, open, subtle, diaphanick, or transparent body, the light, afterwards created,

easily transpired.

Raleigh.

DIAPHANOUS. adj. [διά and φανός.]

Transparent; clear; translucent; pellucid; capable to transmit light.

Aristotle calleth light a quality inherent or cleaving to a diaphanous body.

Raleigh.

When he had taken off the insect, he found in the leaf very little and diaphanous eggs, exactly like to those which yet remained in the tubes of the fly's womb.

Ray.

What virtues grow from ignorance and choice,
Nor how the hero differs from the brute. Add. Cato.
The several parts of the same animal differ in their qualities. Arbutnot.

2. To contend; to be at variance.

A man of judgment shall sometimes hear ignorant men differ, and know well within himself that those which so differ mean one thing, and yet they themselves never agree. Bacon.

Here uncontroll'd you may in judgment sit;
We'll never differ with a crowded pit. Rowe.

3. To be of a contrary opinion.

In things purely speculative, as these are, and no ingredients of our faith, it is free to differ from one another in our opinions and sentiments. Burnet's Theory.

There are certain measures to be kept, which may leave a tendency rather to gain than to irritate those who differ with you in their sentiments. Addison's Freeholder.

Others differ with me about the truth and reality of these speculations. Chrym.

DIFFERENCE. n. f. [differentia, Latin.]

1. State of being distinct from something; contrariety to identity.

Where the faith of the holy church is one, a difference between customs of the church doth no harm. Hooker.

2. The quality by which one differs from another.

This nobility, or difference from the vulgar, was not in the beginning given to the succession of blood, but to the succession of virtue. Raleigh.

Thus, born alike, from virtue first began
The difference that distinguish'd man from man:
He claim'd no title from descent of blood;
But that, which made him noble, made him good. Dryden.

Though it be useful to discern every variety that is to be found in nature, yet it is not convenient to consider every difference that is in things, and divide them into distinct classes under every such difference. Locke.

3. The disproportion between one thing and another, caused by the qualities of each.

You shall see great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

To DIFFIDE, v. n. [diffido, Latin.] To distrust; to have no confidence in.

With hope and fear
The woman did the new solution hear;
The man diffides in his own augury,
And doubts the gods. Dryden.

DIFFIDENCE, n. f. [from diffide.]

1. Distrust; want of confidence in others.

No man almost thought himself secure, and men durst scarce commune or talk one with another; but there was a general diffidence every where. Bacon's Henry VII.

You have brought scandal
To Israel, diffidence of God, and doubt
In feeble hearts, propense enough before
To waver. Milton's Agonistes.

2. Doubt; want of confidence in ourselves.

If the evidence of its being, or that this is its true sense, be only on probable proofs, our assent can reach no higher than an assurance or diffidence arising from the more or less apparent probability of the proofs. Locke.

Be silent always when you doubt your sense;
And speak, though sure, with seeming diffidence. Pope.

Whatsoever atheists think on, or whatsoever they look on, all do administer some reasons for suspicion and diffidence, lest possibly they may be in the wrong; and then it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Bentley.

DIFFIDENT, adj. [from diffide.]

1. Distrustful; doubting others.

Be not diffident
Of wisdom; she deserts thee not, if thou Dismiss not her, when most thou need'st her nigh. Milton.

Pliny speaks of the Seres, the same people with the Chinese, as being very shy and diffident in their manner of dealing. Arbutnot.

2. Doubtful of an event, used of things; uncertain.

I was really so diffident of it, as to let it lie by me these two years, just as you now see it. Pope.

3. Doubtful of himself; not confident.

I am not so confident of my own sufficiency, as not willingly to admit the counsel of others; but yet I am not so diffident of myself, as brutally to submit to any man's dictates. King Charles.

Distress makes the humble heart diffident. Clarissa.

To DIFFIND, v. a. [diffindo, Latin.] To cleave in two; to split.

DIFFISSION, n. f. [diffisso, Latin.] The act of cleaving or splitting.

DIFFLATION, n. f. [difflare, Latin.] The act of scattering with a blast of wind.

DIFFLUENCE, } n. f. [from diffluo, Lat.]

DIFFLUENCY, } The quality of falling away on all sides; the effect of fluidity; the contrary to consistency.

Ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air, whereby it acquireth no new form, but rather a consistence or determination of its diffluency; and amitteth not its essence, but condition of fluidity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIFFLUENT, adj. [diffluens, Lat.] Flowing every way; not consistent; not fixed.

DIFFORM, adj. [from forma, Latin.] Contrary to uniform; having parts of different structure; dissimilar; unlike;

irregular: as, a difform flower, one of which the leaves are unlike each other.

The unequal refractions of difform rays proceed not from any contingent irregularities; such as are veins, an uneven polish, or fortuitous position of the pores of glass. Newton.

DIFFORMITY, n. f. [from difform.] Diversity of form; irregularity; dissimilitude.

While they murmur against the present disposure of things, they desire in them a difformity from the primitive rule, and the idea of that mind that formed all things best. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIFFRANCHISEMENT, n. f. [franchise, French.] The act of taking away the privileges of a city.

To DIFFUSE, v. a. [diffusus, Latin.]

1. To pour out upon a plane, so that the liquor may run every way; to pour without particular direction.

When these waters began to rise at first, long before they could swell to the height of the mountains, they would diffuse themselves every way. Burnet's Theory.

2. To spread; to scatter; to disperse.

Wisdom had ordain'd
Good out of evil to create; instead
Of spirits malign, a better race to bring Into their vacant room, and thence diffuse
His good to worlds, and ages, infinite. Milton.
No sect wants its apostles to propagate and diffuse it. Decay of Piety.

A chief renown'd in war,
Whose race shall bear aloft the Latian name,
And through the conquer'd world diffuse our fame. Dryden.

His eyes diffus'd a venerable grace,
And charity itself was in his face. Dryden's Good Parson.

DIFFUSE, adj. [diffusus, Latin.]

1. Scattered; widely spread.

2. Copious; not concise.

DIFFUSED, participial adj. [from diffuse.] This word seems to have signified, in Shakespeare's time, the same as wild, uncouth, irregular.

Let them from forth a sawpit rush at once,
With some diffused song. Shak. M. W. of Windsor.
He grows like savages,
To swearing and stern looks, diffus'd attire,
And every thing that seems unnatural. Shakespeare's Henry V.

DIFFUSEDLY, adv. [from diffused.] Widely; dispersedly; in manner of that which is spread every way.

DIFFUSEDNESS, n. f. [from diffused.] The state of being diffused; dispersion.

DIFFUSELY, adv. [from diffuse.]

1. Widely; extensively.

2. Copiously; not concisely.

DIFFUSION, n. f. [from diffuse.]

1. Dispersion; the state of being scattered every way.

Whereas all bodies act either by the communication of their natures, or by the impressions and signatures of their motions, the diffusion of species visible seemeth to participate more of the former operation, and the species audible of the latter. Bacon's Natural History.

A sheet of very well sleeked marbled paper did not cast distinct colours upon the wall, nor throw its light with an equal diffusion; but threw its beams, unstained and bright, to this and that part of the wall. Boyle on Colours.

2. Copiousness; exuberance of style.

DIFFUSIVE, adj. [from diffuse.]

1. Having the quality of scattering any thing every way.

Diffusive of themselves, where'er they pass
They make that warmth in others they expect;
Their valour works like bodies on a glass,
And does its image on their men project. Dryden.

2. Scattered; dispersed; having the quality of suffering diffusion.

All liquid bodies are diffusive; for their parts, being in motion, have no connexion, but glide and fall off any way. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

No man is of so general and diffusive a lust, as to prosecute his amours all the world over. South.

The stars, no longer overlaid with weight,
Exert their heads from underneath the mass,
And upward shoot, and kindle as they pass,
And with diffusive light adorn their heav'nly place. Dryden.

Cherish'd with hope, and fed with joy, it grows;
Its cheerful buds their opening bloom disclose,
And round the happy soil diffusive odour flows. Prior.

3. Extended.

They are not agreed among themselves where infallibility is seated; whether in the pope alone, or a council alone, or in both together, or in the diffusive body of Christians. Tilotsch.

DIFFUSIVELY, adv. [from diffusive.] Widely; extensively; every way.

DIFFUSIVENESS, n. f. [from diffusive.]

1. Extension; dispersion; the power of diffusing; the state of being diffused.

2. Want of conciseness; large compass of expression.

The fault that I find with a modern legend, is its diffusiveness: you have sometimes the whole side of a medal over-run with it. Addison on Meds.

To DIG, v. a. preter. dug, or digged; part. pass. dug, or digged. [dic, Saxon, a ditch; dyger, Danish, to dig.]

1. To pierce with a spade.

Then said he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall; and when I had digged in the wall, I beheld a door. Ezek.

2. To form by digging.

Seek with heart and mouth to build up the walls of Jerusalem, which you have broken down; and to fill up the mines that you have digged, by craft and subtlety, to overthrow the same. Whigist.

He built towers in the desert, and digged many wells; for he had much cattle. 2 Chron. xxvi. 10.

3. To cultivate the ground by turning it with a spade.

The walls of your garden, without their furniture, look as ill as those of your house; so that you cannot dig up your garden too often. Temple.

Be first to dig the ground, be first to burn
The branches lopt. Dryden's Virgil.

4. To pierce with a sharp point.

A ravenous vulture in his open'd side
Her crooked beak and cruel talons tried;
Still for the growing liver dig'd his breast,
The growing liver still supplied the feast. Dryden's Æneid.

5. To gain by digging.

It is digged out of even the highest mountains, and all parts of the earth contingently; as the pyrites. Woodward.

Nor was the ground alone requir'd to bear
Her annual income to the crooked share;
But greedy mortals, rummaging her store,
Digg'd from her entrails first the precious ore. Dryden's Ovid.

To DIG, v. n. To work with a spade; to work in making holes, or turning the ground.

They long for death, but it cometh not; and dig for it more than for hid treasures. Job, iii. 21.

The Italians have often dug into lands, described in old authors as the places where statues or obelisks stood, and seldom failed of success. Addison's Travels.

To DIG up. v. a. To throw up that which is covered with earth.

If I digg'd up thy fathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It would not shake mine ire. Shakespeare.

DI'OMY. n. f. [διγάμια.] Second marriage; marriage to a second wife after the death of the first: as bigamy, having two wives at once.

Dr. Champny only proves, that archbishop Cranmer was twice married; which is not denied: but brings nothing to prove that such bigamy, or digamy rather, deprives a bishop of the lawful use of his power of ordaining. Bishop Ferne.

DI'CERENT. adj. [digerens, Latin.] That which has the power of digesting, or causing digestion. DiB.

DI'GEST. n. f. [digesta, Latin.] The pandect of the civil law, containing the opinions of the ancient lawyers.

I had a purpose to make a particular digest, or recompilement to the laws of mine own nation. Bacon.

Laws in the digest shew that the Romans applied themselves to trade. Arbutnot on Coins.

To DIGEST. v. a. [digero, digestum, Latin.]

1. To distribute into various classes or repositories; to range or dispose methodically.

2. To concoct in the stomach, so as that the various particles of food may be applied to their proper use.

If little faults, proceeding on distemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
When capital crimes chew'd, swallow'd, and digested, Appear? Shakespeare's Henry V.

Each then has organs to digest his food;
One to beget, and one receive, the brood. Prior.

3. To soften by heat, as in a boiler, or in a dunghill: a chemical term.

4. To range methodically in the mind; to apply knowledge by meditation to its proper use.

Chosen friends, with sense refin'd,
Learning digested well. Thomson.

5. To reduce to any plan, scheme, or method.

Our play
Leaps o'er the vaunt and firstlings of those broils,
'Ginning i' th' middle: starting thence away
To what may be digested in a play. Shakespeare.

6. To receive without loathing or repugnance; not to reject.

First, let us go to dinner.
—Nay, let me praise you while I have a stomach.
—No, pray thee, let it serve for table-talk;
Then, howsoever thou speak'st, 'mong other things
I shall digest it. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
The pleasure of numbers is, that rudeness and barbarism might the better taste and digest the lessons of civility. Peacham.

7. To receive and enjoy.

Cornwall and Albany,
With my two daughters dowers, digest the third. Shakespeare.

8. [In chirurgery.] To dispose a wound to generate pus in order to a cure.

To DIGEST. v. n. To generate matter, as a wound, and tend to a cure.

DIGESTER. n. f. [from digest.]

1. He that digests or disposes.

2. He that digests or concocts his food.

People that are bilious and fat, rather than lean, are great eaters and ill digesters. Arbutnot.

3. A strong vessel or engine, contrived by M. Papin, wherein to boil, with a very strong heat, any bony substances, so as to reduce them into a fluid state. Quincy.

4. That which causes or strengthens the concoctive power.

Rice is of excellent use for all illnesses of the stomach, a great restorer of health, and a great digester. Temple.

DIGESTIBLE. adj. [from digest.] That which is capable of being digested or concocted in the stomach.

Those medicines that purge by stool are, at the first, not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts. Bacon's Natural History.

DIGESTION. n. f. [from digest.]

1. The act of digesting or concocting food in the stomach.

Now good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Digestion is a fermentation begun, because there are all the requisites of such a fermentation; heat, air, and motion: but it is not a complete fermentation, because that requires a greater time than the continuance of the aliment in the stomach: vegetable putrefaction resembles very much animal digestion. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Quantity of food cannot be determined by measures and weights, or any general Lessian rules; but must vary with the vigour or decays of age or of health, and the use or disuse of air or of exercise, with the changes of appetite; and then, by what every man may find or suspect of the present strength or weakness of digestion. Temple.

Every morsel to a satisfied hunger, is only a new labour to a tired digestion. South.

2. The preparation of matter by a chemical heat.

We conceive, indeed, that a perfect good concoction, or digestion, or maturation of some metals, will produce gold. Bacon's Natural History.

Did chymick chance the furnaces prepare,
Raise all the labour-houses of the air,
And lay crude vapours in digestion there? Blackmore.

3. Reduction to a plan; the act of methodising; the maturation of a design.

The digestion of the counsels in Sweden is made in senate, consisting of forty counsellors, who are generally the greatest men. Temple.

4. The act of disposing a wound to generate matter.

5. The disposition of a wound or sore to generate matter.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion. Schurp's Surgery.

DIGESTIVE. adj. [from digest.]

1. Having the power to cause digestion, or to strengthen the stomach.

A chylifactory menstruum, or a digestive preparation, drawn from species or individuals, whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapideous bodies. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Capable by heat to soften and subdue.

The earth and sun were in that very state; the one active, piercing, and digestive, by its heat; the other passive, receptive, and stored with materials for such a production. Hale.

3. Methodising; adjusting.

To business, ripen'd by digestive thought,
This future rule is into method brought. Dryden.

DIGESTIVE. n. f. [from digest.] An application which disposes a wound to generate matter.

I dressed it with digestives. Wisem. on Abscesses.

DIGESTURE. n. f. Concoction: not used.

Neither tie yourself always to eat meats of easy digestion; such as veal, sweetbreads. Harvey.

DIGGER. n. f. [from dig.] One that opens the ground with a spade.

When I visited mines, we have been told by diggers, that even when the sky seemed clear, there would suddenly arise a steam so thick, that it would put out their candles. Boyle.

To DI'GHT. v. a. [dihtan, to prepare, to regulate, Saxon.]

1. To dress; to deck; to bedeck; to embellish; to adorn. It seems always to signify the past; the participle passive is dight, as dighted in Hudibras is perhaps improper.

Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloisters pale;
And love the high embowed roof,
With antic pillar, massy proof;
And storied windows richly dight,
Casting a dim religious light. Milton.
Just to the proud insulting lass Array'd and dighted Hudibras. Hudibras.

2. To put on.

On his head his dreadful hat he dight,
Which maketh him invisible to sight. Hub. Tale.

DI'GIT. n. f. [digitus, Latin.]

1. The measure of length containing three fourths of an inch.

If the inverted tube of mercury be but twenty-five digits high, or somewhat more, the quicksilver will not fall, but remain suspended in the tube, because it cannot press the subjacent mercury with so great a force as doth the incumbent cylinder of the air, reaching thence to the top of the atmosphere. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

2. The twelfth part of the diameter of the sun or moon.

3. Any of the numbers expressed by single figures; any number to ten: so called from counting upon the fingers.

Not only the numbers seven and nine, from considerations abstruse, have been extolled by most, but all or most of other digits have been as mystically applauded. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DI'GITATED. adj. [from digitus, Latin.] Branched out into divisions like fingers; as a digitated leaf is a leaf composed of many small leaves.

For animals multitudes, or such as are digitated, or have several divisions in their feet, there are but two that are uniparous; that is, men and elephants. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIGLADIATION. n. f. [digladiatio, Latin.] A combat with swords; any quarrel or contest.

Aristotle seems purposely to intend the cherishing of controversial digladiations, by his own affection of an intricate obscurity. Glanville's Scipis.

DIGNIFIED, adj. [from dignify.] Invested with some dignity: it is used chiefly of the clergy.

Abbots are stiled dignified clerks, as having some dignity in the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DIGNIFICATION. n. f. [from dignify.] Exaltation.

I grant that where a noble and ancient descent and merit meet in any man, it is a double dignification of that person. Walton's Angler.

To DI'GNIFY. v. a. [from dignus and facio, Latin.]

1. To advance; to prefer; to exalt. Used chiefly of the clergy.

2. To honour; to adorn; to give lustre to; to improve by some adventitious excellence, or honourable distinction.

Such a day,
So fought, so follow'd, and so fairly won,
Came not till now to dignify the times
Since Cæsar's fortunes I. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Not that we think us worthy such a guest,
But that your worth will dignify our feast. Ben Jonson.

No

No turbots dignify my boards;
But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords.

Pope.

DIGNITARY. n. f. [from dignus, Latin.]
A clergyman advanced to some dignity, to some rank above that of a parochial priest.

If there be any dignitaries, whose preferments are perhaps not liable to the accusation of superfluity, they may be persons of superior merit.

Swift.

DIGNITY. n. f. [dignitas, Latin.]

1. Rank of elevation.

Angels are not any where spoken so highly of as our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and are not in dignity equal to him.

Hooker.

2. Grandeur of mien; elevation of aspect.

Some men have a native dignity, which will procure them more regard by a look, than others can obtain by the most imperious commands.

Clarissa.

3. Advancement; preferment; high place.

Faster than spring-time show'rs comes thought on thought,

And not a thought but thinks on dignity.

Shak.

For those of old,
And these late dignities heap'd up to them.

Shak.

4. [Among ecclesiasticks.] By a dignity
we understand that promotion or preferment to which any jurisdiction is an-nexed.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. Maxims; general principles: axioma dogma.

The sciences concluding from dignities, and principles known by themselves, receive not satisfaction from probable reasons, much less from bare as-severations.

Brown.

6. [In astrology.] The planet is in dignity when it is in any sign.

DIGNOTION. n. f. [from dignosco, Latin.]
Distinction; distinguishing mark.

That temperamental dignotions, and conjecture of prevailing humours, may be collected from spots in our nails, we are not averse to concede.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIGRESS. v. n. [digressus, Latin.]

1. To turn aside out of the road.

2. To depart from the main design of a discourse, or chief tenour of an argument.

In the pursuit of an argument there is hardly room to digress into a particular definition, as often as a man varies the signification of any term.

Locke.

3. To wander; to expatiate.

It seemeth (to digress no farther) that the Tartarians, spreading so far, cannot be the Israelites.

Brerewood.

4. To go out of the right way, or common track; to transgress; to deviate: not
in use.

I am come to keep my word,
Though in some part am forced to digress,
Which at more leisure I will so excuse
As you shall well be satisfied.

Shakespeare.

Thy noble shape is but a form of war,
Digressing from the valour of a man.

Shakespeare.

DIGRESSION. n. f. [digressio, Latin.]

1. A passage deviating from the main te-nour or design of a discourse.

The good man thought so much of his late conceived commonwealth, that all other matters were but digressions to him.

Sidney.

He, she knew, would intermix
Grateful digressions, and solve high dispute
With conjugal caresses.

Milton.

Here some digression I must make, to accuse
Thee, my forgetful and ungrateful muse.

Denham.

To content and fill the eye of the understanding,
the best authors sprinkle their works with pleasing digressions, with which they recreate the minds of their readers.

Dryden.

VOL. I.

2. Deviation.

The digression of the sun is not equal; but, near the equinoctial intersections, it is right and greater;
near the solstices, more oblique and lesser.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIJUDICATION. n. f. [dijudicatio, Latin.]
Judicial distinction.

DIKE. n. f. [dic, Saxon; dyk, Erse.]

1. A channel to receive water.

The dykes are fill'd, and with a roaring sound
The rising rivers float the nether ground.

Dryden's Virgil.

The king of dykes! than whom no sluice of mud

With deeper sable blots the silver flood.

Pope's Dunciad.

2. A mound to hinder inundations.

God, that breaks up the flood-gates of so great a deluge, and all the art and industry of man is not sufficient to raise up dykes and ramparts against it.

Cowley.

TO DILACERATE. v. a. [dilacero, Latin.] To tear; to rend; to force in two.

The infant, at the accomplished period, struggling to come forth, dilacerates and breaks those parts which restrained him before.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DILACERATION. n. f. [from dilaceratio,
Latin.] The act of rending in two.

The greatest sensation of pain is by the obstruction of the small vessels, and dilaceration of the nervous fibres.

Arbutnot.

TO DILANIATE. v. a. [dilanio, Latin.]
To tear; to rend in pieces.

Rather than they would dilaniate the entrails of their own mother, and expose her thereby to be ravished, they met half way in a gallant kind.

Howell's Eng. Tears.

TO DILAPIDATE. v. n. [dilapido, Latin.] To go to ruin; to fall by decay.

DILAPIDATION. n. f. [dilapidatio, Latin.]
The incumbent's suffering the chancel, or any other edifices of his ecclesiastical living, to go to ruin or decay, by neglecting to repair the same: and it likewise extends to his committing, or suffering to be committed, any wilful waste in or upon the glebe-woods, or any other inheritance of the church.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

'Tis the duty of all church-wardens to prevent the dilapidations of the chancel and mansion-house belonging to the rector or vicar.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

DILATABILITY. n. f. [from dilatable.]
The quality of admitting extension.

We take notice of the wonderful dilatability or extensiveness of the gullets of serpents: I have taken two adult mice out of the stomach of an adder, whose neck was not bigger than my little finger.

Ray.

By this continual contractibility and dilatability, by different degrees of heat, the air is kept in a constant motion.

Arbutnot.

DILATABLE. adj. [from dilate.] Capable of extension.

The windpipe divides itself into a great number of branches called bronchia: these end in small air bladders, dilatable and contractible, capable to be inflated by the admission of air, and to subside at the expulsion of it.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

DILATATION. n. f. [from dilatatio, Latin.]

1. The act of extending into greater space: opposed to contraction.

The motions of the tongue, by contraction and dilatation, are so easy and so subtle, that you can hardly conceive or distinguish them aright.

Gold.

2. The state of being extended; the state in which the parts are at more distance from each other.

Joy causeth a cheerfulness and vigour in the eyes; singing, leaping, dancing, and sometimes tears: all these are the effects of the dilatation, and coming forth of the spirits into the outward parts.

Bacon's Natural History.

The image of the sun should be drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other casual inequality of the refractions.

Newton.

TO DILATE. v. a. [dilato, Latin.]

1. To extend; to spread out; to enlarge:
opposed to contract.

But ye thereby much greater glory gate,
Than had ye sort'd with a prince's peer;
For now your light doth more itself dilate,
And in my darkness greater doth appear.

Spenser.

Satan alarm'd,
Collecting all his might, dilated stood,
Like Teneriff, or Atlas, unremov'd.

Milton.

Opener of mine eyes,
Dim erst; dilated spirits, ampler heart,
And growing up to godhead: which for thee
Chiefly I sought; without thee can despise.

Milt.

Through all the air his sounding strings dilate
Sorrow, like that which touch'd our hearts of late.

Waller.

Diffus'd, it rises in a higher sphere;
Dilates its drops, and softens into air.

Prior.

I mark the various fury of the winds;
These neither seasons guide, nor order binds:
They now dilate and now contract their force;
Various their speed, but endless is their course.

Prior.

The second refraction would spread the rays one way as much as the first doth another, and so dilate the image in breadth as much as the first doth its length.

Newton.

2. To relate at large; to tell diffusely and copiously.

But he would not endure that woful theme
For to dilate at large; but urged sore,
With piercing words, and pitiful implore,
Him hasty to arise.

Fairy Queen.

I observing,
Took once a pliant hour, and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not distinctively.

Shakespeare's Othello.

TO DILATE. v. n.

1. To widen; to grow wide.

His heart dilates and glories in his strength.

Addison.

2. To speak largely and copiously.

It may be behoveful for princes, in matters of grace, to transact the same publicly, and by themselves; or their ministers to dilate upon it, and improve their lustre, by any addition or eloquence of speech.

Clarendon.

DILATOR. n. f. [from dilate.] That which widens or extends.

The buccinators, or blowers up of the cheeks, and the dilators of the nose, are too strong in cho-lerick people.

Arbutnot.

DILATORINESS. n. f. [from dilatory.]
The quality of being dilatory; slowness; sluggishness.

DILATORY. adj. [dilatoire, Fr. dilatorius, Latin.] Tardy; slow; given to procrastination; addicted to delay; sluggish; loitering.

An inferior council, after former tedious suits in a higher court, would be but dilatory, and so to little purpose.

Hayward.

What wound did ever heal but by degrees?
Thou know'st we work by wit, and not by witchcraft;

And wit depends on dilatory time.

Shak. Othello.

These cardinals trifle with me; I abhor
This dilatory sloth, and tricks of Rome.

Shakespeare's Henry VII.

3 X Dilatory

Dilatory fortune plays the jilt
With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,
To throw herself away on fools and knaves. Orway.
A dilatory temper commits innumerable cruelties without design. Addison's Spectator.

DILECTION. n. f. [dilectio, Latin.] The act of loving; kindness.

So free is Christ's dilection, that the grand condition of our felicity is our belief.

Boyle's Seraphic Love.

DILEMMA. n. f. [διλημμα.]

1. An argument equally conclusive by contrary suppositions. A young rhetorician applied to an old sophist to be taught the art of pleading, and bargained for a certain reward to be paid, when he should gain a cause. The master sued for his reward, and the scholar endeavoured to elude his claim by a dilemma:
If I gain my cause, I shall withhold your pay, because the judge's award will be against you; if I lose it, I may withhold it, because I shall not yet have gained a cause. On the contrary, says the master, if you gain your cause, you must pay me, because you are to pay me when you gain a cause; if you lose it you must pay me, because the judge will award it.

A dilemma, that Morton used to raise benevolence, some called his fork, and some his crotch.

Bacon's Henry VII.

Hope, whose weak being ruin'd is Alike if it succeed, and if it miss;
Whom good or ill does equally confound,
And both the horns of fate's dilemma wound.

Cowley.

2. A difficult or doubtful choice; a vexa-tious alternative.

A strong dilemma in a desp'rate case!
To act with infamy, or quit the place. Swift.
A dire dilemma; either way I'm sped;
If foes they write, if friends they read, me dead.

Pope.

DILIGENCE. n. f. [diligentia, Latin.] Industry; assiduity; constancy in business; continuance of endeavour; unintermitted application; the contrary to idleness.

Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me.

2. Clear; plain; not obscure.

To DILUCIDATE. v. a. [from dilucidare, Latin.] To make clear or plain; to explain; to free from obscurity.

I shall not extenuate, but explain and dilucidate,
according to the custom of the ancients.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DILUCIDATION. n. f. [from dilucidatio, Latin.] The act of making clear; explanation; exposition.

DILUENT. adj. [diluens, Latin.] Having the power to thin and attenuate other matter.

DILUENT. n. f. [from the adjective.]
That which thins other matter.

There is no real diluent but water: every fluid is diluent, as it contains water in it.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

To DILUTE. v. a. [diluo, Latin.]

1. To make thin; to attenuate by the admixture of other parts.

Drinking a large dose of diluted tea, as she was ordered by a physician, she got to bed.

Locke.

The aliment ought to be thin to dilute, demulcent to temper, or acid to subdue.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. To make weak.

The chamber was dark, lest these colours should be diluted and weakened by the mixture of any adventitious light.

Newton.

DILUTE. adj. Thin; attenuated.

If the red and blue colours were more dilute and weak, the distance of the images would be less than an inch; and if they were more intense and full, that distance would be greater.

Newton.

DILUTER. n. f. [from dilute.] That which makes any thing else thin.

Water is the only diluter, and the best dissolvent of most of the ingredients of our aliment.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

DILUTION. n. f. [dilutio, Latin.] The act of making any thing thin or weak.

Opposite to dilution is coagulation, or thickening, which is performed by dissipating the most liquid parts by heat, or by insinuating some substances, which make the parts of the fluid cohere more strongly.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

DILUVIAN. adj. [from diluvium, Latin.]
Relating to the deluge.

Suppose that this diluvian lake should rise to the mountain tops in one place, and not diffuse itself equally into all countries about.

Burnet's Theory.

DIM. adj. [bimme, Saxon; dy, Welsh;
dow, Erse.]

1. Not having a quick sight; not seeing clearly.

For her true form how can my spark discern,
Which, dim by nature, art did never clear?

Davies.

2. Dull of apprehension.

The understanding is dim, and cannot by its natural light discover spiritual truths.

Rogers.

3. Not clearly seen; obscure; imperfectly discovered.

We might be able to aim at some dim and seeming conception, how matter might begin to exist by the power of that eternal first Being.

Locke.

Something, as dim to our internal view,
Is thus perhaps the cause of all we do.

Pope.

4. Obstructing the act of vision; not luminous; somewhat dark.

Her face right wond'rous fair did seem to be,
That her broad beauty's beam great brightness threw
Through the dim shade, that all men might it see.

Spenser.

To DIM. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To cloud; to darken; to hinder from a full perception of light, and free exercise of vision.

As where the Almighty's lightning brand does light,

It dims the dazed eyes, and daunts the senses quite.

Spenser's Fairy Queen.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that much use of Venus doth dim the sight; and yet eunuchs, which are unable to generate, are nevertheless also dim sighted.

Bacon.

Every one declares against blindness, and yet who almost is not fond of that which dims his sight?

Locke.

For thee I dim these eyes, and stuff this head,
With all such reading as was never read.

Pope's Dunciad.

2. To make less bright; to obscure.

A ship that through the ocean wide,
By conduct of some star, doth make her way,
When as a storm hath dimin'd her trusty guide,
Out of her course doth wander far astray.

Spenser.

All of us have cause

To wail the dimming of our shining star.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

Thus while he spake, each passion dimin'd his face,

Thrice chang'd.

Milton.

The principal figure in a picture is like a king
among his courtiers, who dims all his attendants.

Dryden.

DIMENSION. n. f. [dimensio, Latin.]

Space contained in any thing; bulk; extent; capacity. It is seldom used but in the plural. The three dimensions are length, breadth, and depth.

He tried

The tomb, and found the strait dimensions wide.

Dryden.

My gentleman was measuring my walls, and taking the dimensions of the room.

Swift.

tion of any part: the opposite to increase.

That we call good which is apt to cause or increase pleasure, or diminish pain in us.

Locke.

2. To impair; to lessen; to degrade.

Impiously they thought

Thee to diminish, and from thee withdraw

The number of thy worshippers.

Milton.

3. To take any thing from that to which it belongs: the contrary to add.

Nothing was diminished from the safety of the king by the imprisonment of the duke.

Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall you diminish aught from it.

Deut. iv. 2.

To DIMINISH. v. n. To grow less; to be impaired.

What judgment I had, increases rather than diminishes;
and thoughts, such as they are, come crowding in so fast upon me, that my only difficulty is to chuse or to reject.

Dryden.

Crete's ample fields diminish to our eye;

Before the Boreal blasts the vessels fly.

Pope's Odyssey.

DIMINISH-

DIMI'NISHINGLY. adv. [from diminish.] In a manner tending to vilify, or lessen.

I never heard him censure, or so much as speak diminishingly of any one that was absent. Locke.

DIMINUTION. n. [diminutio, Lat.]

1. The act of making less: opposed to augmentation.

The one is not capable of any diminution or augmentation at all by men; the other apt to admit both. Hooker.

2. The state of growing less: opposed to increase.

The gravitating power of the sun is transmitted through the vast bodies of the planets without any diminution, so as to act upon all their parts, to their very centres, with the same force, and according to the same laws, as if the part upon which it acts were not surrounded with the body of the planet. Newton.

Finite and infinite seem to be looked upon as the modes of quantity, and to be attributed primarily to those things which are capable of increase or diminution. Locke.

3. Discredit; loss of dignity; degradation.

Gladly to thee

Heroick laurel'd Eugene yields the prime;

Nor thinks it diminution to be rank'd

In military honour next. Philips.

4. Deprivation of dignity; injury of reputation.

Make me wise by thy truth, for my own soul's salvation, and I shall not regard the world's opinion or diminution of me. King Charles.

They might raise the reputation of another, though they are a diminution to his. Addis Spect.

5. [In architecture.] The contraction of the diameter of a column, as it ascends.

DIMINUTIVE. adj. [diminutivus, Lat.] Small; little; narrow; contracted.

The poor wren,

The most diminutive of birds, will fight,

Her young ones in her nest, against the owl. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

It is the interest of mankind, in order to the advance of knowledge, to be sensible they have yet attained it but in poor and diminutive measure. Glanville's Sceptis.

The light of man's understanding is but a short, diminutive, contracted light, and looks not beyond the present. Scot.

If the ladies should once take a liking to such a diminutive race of lovers, we should, in a little time, see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature. Addison.

They know how weak and awkward many of those little diminutive discourses are. Watts.

DIMINUTIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A word formed to express littleness; as lapillus, in Latin, a little stone; maisonette, in French, a little house; manniken, in English, a little man.

He afterwards proving a dainty and effeminate youth, was commonly called, by the diminutive of his name, Peterkin or Perkin. Bacon's Henr. VII.

In her forehead's fair half-round,

Love sits in open triumph crown'd;

He in the dimple of her chin,

In private state, by friends is seen. Prior.

To D'IMPLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To sink in small cavities, or little inequalities.

The wild waves master'd him, and suck'd him in, And smiling eddies dimpled on the main. Dryden.

Eternal smiles his emptiness betray, As shallow streams run dimpling all the way. Pope.

D'IMPLED. adj. [from dimple.] Set with dimples.

On each side her

Stood pretty dimpled boys like smiling Cupids. Shakespeare.

D'IMPLY. adj. [from dimple.] Full of dimples; sinking in little inequalities.

As the smooth surface of the dimply flood

The silver-slipper'd virgin lightly trod. Warton's Isis.

DIN. n. f. [byn, a noise; dynan, to make a noise, Sax. dyna, to thunder, Island-ick.] A loud noise; a violent and continued sound.

And all the way he roared as he went, That all the forest with astonishment Thereof did tremble; and the beasts therein Fled fast away from that so dreadful din. Hubbard's Tale.

O, 'twas a din to fright a monster's ear; To make an earthquake: sure, it was the roar Of a whole herd of lions. Shakespeare's Tempest.

While the cock with lively din

Scatters the rear of darkness thin;

And to the stack, or the barn-door,

Stoutly struts his dame before. Milton.

Now night over heav'n Inducing darkness, grateful truce impos'd, And silence, on the odious din of war. Milton.

How, while the troubled elements around, Earth, water, air, the stunning din resound, Thro' streams of smoke and adverse fire he rides, While every shot is levell'd at his sides. Smith.

Some independent ideas, of no alliance to one another, are, by education, custom, and the constant din of their party, so coupled in their minds, that they always appear there together. Locke.

To DIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stun with noise; to harass with clamour.

Rather live

To bait thee for his bread, and din your ears

With hungry cries. Ossway's Venice Preserved.

2. To impress with violent and continued noise.

What shall we do, if his majesty puts out a proclamation commanding us to take Wood's half-pence? This hath been often dinned in my ears. Swift.

Let us all ring fancy's knell;

Ding, dong bell. Shakespeare.

DINGLE. n. f. [from ben, or bin, a hollow, Sax.] A hollow between hills; a dale.

I know each lane, and every alley green,

Dingle, or bushy dell of this wild wood;

And every bosky bourn from side to side,

My daily walks and ancient neighbourhoo. Milt.

DINING-ROOM. n. f. [dine and room.] The principal apartment of the house; the room where entertainments are made.

He went out from the dining-room before he had fallen into error by the intemperance of his meat, or the deluge of drink. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

DINNER. n. f. [diner, French.] The chief meal; the meal eaten about the middle of the day.

Let me not stay a jot for dinner;

Go, get it ready. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Before dinner and supper, as often as it is convenient, or can be had, let the public prayers of the church, church, or some parts of them, be said publicly in the family. Taylor.

The jolly crew, unmindful of the past,
The quarry share, their plenteous dinner haste. Dryden's Æneid.

DINNER-TIME. n. f. [dinner and time.]

The time of dining.

At dinner-time,

I pray you, have in mind where we must meet. Shakespeare.

Then from the mint walks forth the man of rhyme,

Happy to catch me just at dinner-time. Pope.

DINT. n. f. [býnt, Saxon.]

1. A blow; a stroke.

Much daunted with that dint, her sense was daz'd;
Yet, kindling rage, herself she gather'd round. Spenser.

Neither vainly hope

To be invulnerable in these bright arms,
Though temper'd heav'nly; for that mortal dint,
Save he who reigns above, none can resist. Milton.

2. The mark made by a blow; the cavity remaining after a violent pressure.

He embrac'd her naked body o'er;
And, straining hard the statue, was afraid
His hands had made a dint, and hurt the maid. Dryden.

3. Violence; force; power.

Now you weep; and, I perceive, you feel
The dint of pity. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

We are to wrest the whole Spanish monarchy out Of the hands of the enemy; and, in order to it, to work our way into the heart of his country by dint of arms. Addison.

The dew-lapt bull now chafes along the plain,
While burning love ferments in ev'ry vein;
His well-arm'd front against his rival aims,
And by the dint of war his mistress claims. Gay.

TO DINT. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark with a cavity by a blow, or violent impression.

With greedy force each other both assail,
And strike so fiercely, that they do impress
Deep-dinted furrows in the batter'd mail:
The iron walls to ward their blows were weak and frail. Fairy Queen.

Leave, leave, fair bride, your solitary bone,
No more shall you return to it alone;
It nuzzeth sadness; and your body's print,
Like to a grave, the yielding down doth dint. Donne.

Deep-dinted wrinkles on her cheeks she draws;
Sunk are her eyes, and toothless are her jaws. Dryden's Æneid.

DINUMERATION. n. f. [dinumeratio, Lat.] The act of numbering out singly.

DIOCESAN. n. f. [from diocesis.] A bishop, as he stands related to his own clergy or flock.

As a diocesan you are like to outdo yourself in all other capacities, and exemplify every word of this discourse. South.

I have heard it has been advised by a diocesan to his inferior clergy, that they should read some of the most celebrated sermons printed by others. Tatler.

DIOCESS. n. f. [diocesis; a Greek word, compounded of διὰ and ἐκκλησία.]

The circuit of every bishop's jurisdiction; for this realm has two divisions, one into shires or counties, in respect of temporal policy; another into dioceses, in respect of jurisdiction ecclesiastical. Corwell.

None ought to be admitted by any bishop, but such as have dwelt and remained in his diocesis a convenient time. Whigist.

He should regard the bishop of Rome as the islanders of Jersey and Guernsey do him of Constance in Normandy; that is, nothing at all, since by that French bishop's refusal to swear unto our king, those isles were annexed to the diocesis of Winchester. Raleigh's Essays.

St. Paul looks upon Titus as advanced to the dignity of a prince, ruler of the church, and intrusted with a large diocesis, containing many particular cities, under the immediate government of their respective elders, and those deriving authority from his ordination. South.

DIOPTRIC AL. } n. f. [διόπτρις.] AF-DIOPTRICK. } fording a medium for the sight; assisting the sight in the view of distant objects.

Being excellently well furnished with dioptrical glasses, he had not been able to see the sun spotted. Boyle.

View the asperities of the moon through a dioptrick glass, and venture at the proportion of her hills by their shadows. Mercet's Antidote against Atheism.

DIOPTRICKS. n. f. A part of opticks, treating of the different refractions of the light passing through different mediums; as the air, water, glasses, &c. Harris.

TO DIP. v. a. pret. dipped; particip. dipped, or dipt. [bippan, Saxon; doopen, Dutch.]

1. To immerge; to put into any liquor. The person to be baptized may be dipped in water; and such an immersion or dipping ought to be made thrice, according to the canon. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Old Corineus compass'd thrice the crew,
And dipp'd an olive-branch in holy dew,
Which thrice he sprinkled round, and thrice aloud
Invok'd the dead, and then dismiss'd the crowd. Dryden's Æneid.

He turn'd a tyrant in his latter days,
And from the bright meridian where he stood,
Descending, dipp'd his hands in lovers' blood. Dryden's Fables.

The kindred arts shall in their praise conspire,
One dip the pencil, and one string the lyre. Pope.
Now, on fancy's easy wing convey'd,
The king descended to th' Elysian shade;
There in a dusky vale, where Lethe rolls,
Old Bavius fits to dip poetic souls. Pope's Dunci.
So fishes, rising from the main,
Can soar with moisten'd wings on high;
The moisture dried, they sink again,
And dip their wings again to fly. Swift.

2. To moisten; to wet. And though not mortal, yet a cold shudd'ring dew

Dips me all o'er, as when the wrath of Jove Speaks thunder. Milton.

3. To be engaged in any affair. When men are once dip't, what with the encouragements of sense, custom, facility, and shame of departing from what they have given themselves up to, they go on till they are stifled. L'Estrange.

In Richard's time, I doubt, he was a little dip't in the rebellion of the commons. Dryden's Fables.

4. To engage as a pledge: generally used for the first mortgage.

Be careful still of the main chance, my son;
Put out the principal in trusty hands,
Live on the use, and never dip thy lands. Dryden's Persius.

TO DIP. v. n.

1. To sink; to immerge.

We have snakes in our cups, and in our dishes;
and whoever dips too deep will find death in the pot. L'Estrange.

2. To enter; to pierce.

The vulture dipping in Prometheus' side,
His bloody beak with his torn liver dyed. Granville.

3. To enter slightly into any thing. When I think all the repetitions are struck out in a copy, I sometimes find more upon dipping in the first volume. Pope.

4. To take that which comes first; to chuse by chance.

With what ill thoughts of Jove art thou possess'd?

Wouldst thou prefer him to some man? Suppose I dipp'd among the worst, and Staius chose? Dryden's Persius.

DIPCHICK. n. f. [from dip and chick.] The name of a bird. Dipchick is so named of his diving and littleness. Carew.

DIPETALOUS. adj. [δις and πίταλον.] Having two flower leaves.

DIPHTHONG. n. f. [διφθόγγη.] A coalition of two vowels to form one sound; as, vain, leaf, Cæsar.

We see how many disputes the simple and ambiguous nature of vowels created among grammarians, and how it has begot the mistake concerning diphthongs: all that are properly so are syllables, and not diphthongs, as is intended to be signified by that word. Helder's Elements of Speech.

Make a diphthong of the second ita and iota, instead of their being two syllables, and the objection is gone. Pope.

DIFLOB. n. f. The inner plate or lamina of the skull.

DIPLOMA. n. f. [διπλωμα.] A letter or writing conferring some privilege; so called, because they used formerly to be written on waxed tables, and folded together.

DIPPER. n. f. [from dip.] One that dips in the water.

DIPPING Needle. n. f. A devise which shews a particular property of the magnetick needle, so that, besides its polarity or verticity, which is its direction of altitude, or height above the horizon, when duly poised about an horizontal axis, it will always point to a determined degree of altitude, or elevation above the horizon, in this or that place respectively.

DIPSAS. n. f. [Latin, from διψάω, to thirst.] A serpent, whose bite produces the sensation of unquenchable thirst.

Scorpion, and asp, and amphispæna dire,
Cerafæ horn'd, hydrus, and ellops drear,
And dipsas. Milton.

DIPLOTE. n. f. [διπλωτα.] A noun consisting of two cases only. Clark.

DIPTRYCH. n. f. [διπτυχα, Lat. two leaves folded together.] A register of bishops and martyrs.

The commemoration of saints was made out of the diptrychs of the church, as appears by multitudes of places in St. Austin. Stillingfleet.

DIRE. adj. [dirus, Lat.] Dreadful; dismal; mournful; horrible; terrible; evil in a great degree.

Women fight,
To doff their dire distresses. Shakesp. Macbeth.

More by intemperance die
In meats, and drinks, which on the earth shall bring

Diseases dire; of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear. Milton.

Hydras, and gorgons, and chimæras dire. Milton.

Or

Or what the cross dire-looking planet smites,
Or hurtful worm with ca-ker'd venom bites.

Milton.
Dire was the tossing, deep the groans, despair
Tended the sick.

Milton.
Discord! dire loss of the slaughter'd pow'r,
Small at her birth, but rising ev'ry hour;
While scarce the skies her horrid head can bound,
She stalks on earth, and shakes the world around.

Pope.

DIRE'CT. adj. [directus, Latin.]

1. Straight; not crooked.
2. Not oblique.

The ships would move in one and the same surface; and consequently must needs encounter when they either advance towards one another in direct lines, or meet in the intersection of cross lines.

Bentley.

3. [In astronomy.] Appearing to an eye on earth to move progressively through the zodiac; not retrograde.

Two geomantick figures were display'd
Above his head, a warrior and a maid,
One when direct, and one when retrograde.

Dryden's Fables.

4. Not collateral, as the grandson succeeds his grandfire in a direct line.

5. Apparently tending to some end, as in a straight line.

Such was as then the state of the king, as it was no time by direct means to seek her. And such was the state of his captivated will, as he would delay no time of seeking her.

Sidney.

He that does this, will be able to cast off all that is superfluous: he will see what is pertinent, what coherent; what is direct to, what slides by, the question.

Locke.

6. Open; not ambiguous.

There be, that are in nature faithful and sincere, and plain and direct, not crafty and involved.

Bacon.

7. Plain; express.

He no where, that I know, says it in direct words.

Locke.

TO DIRE'CT. v. a. [dirigo, directum, Latin.]

1. To aim or drive in a straight line.

Two eagles from a mountain's height,
By Jove's command, direct their rapid flight.

Pope.

2. To point against as a mark.

The spear flew hissing thro' the middle space,
And pierc'd his throat, directed at his face.

Dryden's Æneid.

3. To regulate; to adjust.

It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps.

Jer. x. 23.

Wisdom is profitable to direct.

Eccles. x. 10.

All that is in a man's power, is to mind what the ideas are that take their turns in his understanding; or else to direct and sort, and call in such as he desires.

Locke.

4. To prescribe certain measure; to mark out a certain course.

He directed it under the whole heavens, and his lightning unto the ends of the earth.

Jeb xxxvii. 3.

5. To order; to command: to direct is a softer term than to command.

DIRE'CTER. n. s. [director, Latin.]

1. One that directs; one that prescribes.
2. An instrument that serves to guide any manual operation.

DIRE'CTION. n. s. [directio, Latin.]

1. Aim at a certain point.

These men's opinions are not the product of judgment, or the consequence of reason; but the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice, and without direction.

Locke.

The direction of good works to a good end, is the only principle that distinguishes charity.

Smalridge.

2. Motion impressed by a certain impulse.

No particle of matter, nor any combination of particles, that is, no body, can either move of itself, or of itself alter the direction of its motion.

Cheyne.

3. Order; command; prescription.

From the counsel that St. Jerome giveth Læta, of taking heed how she read the apocrypha; as also by the help of other learned men's judgments, delivered in like case, we may take direction.

Hooker.

Ev'n now

I put myself to thy direction.

Shaksp. Macbeth.

The nobles of the people digged it, by the direction of the law-giver.

Numb. xxi. 18.

Men's passions and God's direction seldom agree.

King Charles.

General directions for scholastic disputers, is, never to dispute upon mere trifles.

Watts.

4. Regularity; adjustment.

All nature is but art unknown to thee;
All chance, direction which thou canst not see.

Pope.

DIRE'CTIVE. n. s. [from direct.]

1. Having the power of direction.

A law therefore, generally taken, is a directive rule unto goodness of operation.

Hooker.

A power of command there is without all question, though there be some doubt in what faculty this command doth principally reside, whether in the will or the understanding. The true resolution is, that the directive command for counsel is in the understanding; and the applicative command, or empire, for putting in execution of what is directed, is in the will.

Bramhall against Hobbes.

On the directive powers of the former, and the regularity of the latter, whereby it is capable of direction, depends the generation of all bodies.

Grew.

2. Informing; shewing the way.

Nor visited by one directive ray.
From cottage streaming, or from airy hall.

Thomson.

DIRE'CTLY. adv. [from direct.]

1. In a straight line; rectilinearly.

The more a body is nearer to the eyes, and the more directly it is opposed to them, the more it is enlightened; because the light languishes and lessens, the farther it removes from its proper source.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

There was no other place assigned to any of this matter, than that whereunto its own gravity bore it, which was only directly downwards, whereby it obtained that place in the globe which was just underneath.

Woodward.

If the refracted ray be returned directly back to the point of incidence, it shall be reflected by the incident ray.

Newton's Opticks.

2. Immediately; apparently; without circumlocution; without any long train of consequence.

Infidels, being clean without the church, deny directly, and utterly reject, the very principles of Christianity, which hereticks embrace erroneously by misconstruction.

Haker.

No man hath hitherto been so impious, as plainly and directly to condemn prayer.

Hooker.

By asserting the scripture to be the canon of our faith, I have unavoidably created to myself enemies in the papists directly, because they have kept the scripture from us what they could.

Dryd. Pref. to Religi. Laici.

His work directly tends to raise sentiments of honour and virtue in his readers.

Addison's Freeholder.

No reason can be assigned, why it is best for the world that God Almighty hath absolute power, which doth not directly prove that no mortal man should have the like.

Swift.

DIRE'CTNESS. n. s. [from direct.]

Straightness; tendency to any point; the nearest way.

They argued from celestial causes only, the constant vicinity of the sun, and the directness of his rays; never suspecting that the body of the earth had so great an efficiency in the changes of the air.

Bentley.

DIREC'TOR. n. s. [director, Latin.]

1. One that has authority over others; a superintendent; one that has the general management of a design or work.

Himself stood director over them, with nodding or stamping, shewing he did like or dislike those things he did not understand.

Sidney.

In all affairs thou sole director.

Swift.

2. A rule; an ordinance.

Common forms were not design'd
Directors to a noble mind.

Swift.

3. An instructor; one who shews the proper methods of proceeding.

They are glad to use counsellors and directors in all their dealings of weight, as contracts, testaments.

What made directors cheat in south-sea year?

Pope.

6. An instrument in surgery, by which the hand is guided in its operation.

The manner of opening with a knife, is by sliding it on a director, the groove of which prevents its being misguided.

Sharp's Surgery.

DIRE'CTORY. n. s. [from director.] The book which the factious preachers published in the rebellion for the direction of their sect in acts of worship.

As to the ordinance concerning the directory, we cannot consent to the taking away of the book of common prayer.

Oxford Reasons against the Cov.

DIRE'FUL. adj. [This word is frequent among the poets, but has been censured as not analogical; all other words compounded with full consisting of a substantive and full; as, dreadful, or full of dread; joyful, or full of joy.] Dire; dreadful; dismal.

Point of spear it never piercen would,
Ne dint of direful sword divide the substance could.

Fairy Queen.

But yet at last, whereas the direful fiend
She saw not stir, off shaking vain alright,
She nigher drew, and saw that joyous end;
Then God she pray'd, and thank'd her faithful knight.

Fairy Queen.

Direful hap betide that hated wretch
That makes us wretched by the death of thee.

Shakespeare.

The voice of God himself speaks in the heart of men, whether they understand it or no; and by secret intimations gives the sinner a foretaste of that direful cup, which he is like to drink more deeply of hereafter.

South.

I cur'd the direful author of my woes:
'Twas told again, and thence my ruin rose.

Dryden.

Achilles' wrath, to Greeks the direful spring
Of woes unnumber'd, heavenly goddess! sing.

Pope.

DIRE'NESS. n. s. [from dire.] Dismalness; horror; hideousness.

Direness, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts,
Cannot once start me.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

DIRE'PTION. n. s. [direptio, Latin.] The act of plundering.

Dirce.

DIRGE. [This is not a contraction of the Latin dirige, in the popish hymn, Dirige gressus meus, as some pretend; but from the Teutonic dyrke, laudare, to praise and extol. Whence it is possible their dyrke, and our dirge, was a laudatory song to commemorate and applaud the dead. Verstegan. Bacon apparently derives it from dirigé.] A mournful ditty; a song of lamentation.

Th' imperial jointress of this warlike state
Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,
With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,
In equal scale weighing delight and dole,
Taken to wife. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Meanwhile the body of Richard, after many indignities and reproaches, the diriges and obsequies of the common people towards tyrants, was obscurely buried. Bacon.

You from above shall hear each day
One dirge dispatch'd unto your clay;
These your own anthems shall become,
Your lasting epicedium. Sandys.

All due measures of her mourning kept,
Did office at the dirge, and by infection wept. Dryden.

DIRIGENT. adj. [dirigens, Latin.]

The dirigent line in geometry is that along which the line descript is carried in the generation of any figure. Harris.

DIRK. n. f. [an Erse word.] A kind of dagger used in the Highlands of Scotland.

In vain thy hungry mountaineers
Come forth in all their warlike geers,
The shield, the pistol, dirk, and dagger,
In which they daily went to swagger. Tickell.

TO DIRKE. v. a. To spoil; to ruin. Obsolete.

Thy waste bigness but cambers the ground,
And dirkes the beauties of my blossoms round. Spenser.

DIRT. n. f. [dryt, Dutch; dirt, Islandick.]

1. Mud; filth; mire; any thing that sticks to the clothes or body.

They, gilding dirt in noble verse,
Rustick philosophy rehearse. Denham.

Numbers engage their lives and labours to heap together a little dirt that shall bury them in the
and. Wals.

The sea rises as high as ever, though the great heaps of dirt it brings along with it are apt to choak up the shallows. Addison.

Mark by what wretched steps their glory grows;
From dirt and sea-weed as proud Venice rose:

In each how guilt and greatness equal ran,
And all that rais'd the hero sunk the man. Pope.

Is yellow dirt the passion of thy life?
Look but on Gripus, or on Gripus' wife. Pope.

2. Meanness; sordidness.

TO DIRT. v. a. [from the noun.] To foul; to bemire; to make filthy; to bedaub; to soil; to pollute; to nasty.

All company is like a dog, who dirts those most whom he loves best. Swift.

DIRT-PIE. n. f. [dirt and pie.] Forms moulded by children of clay, in imitation of pastry.

Thou settest thy heart upon that which has newly left off making of dirt-pies, and is but preparing itself for a green-sickness. Suckling.

DIRTILY. adv. [from dirty.]

Thy Dol and Helen of thy noble thoughts
Is in base durance, and contagious prison,
Haul'd thither by mechanic, dirty hands. Shakespeare.

2. Sullied; cloudy; not elegant.

Pound an almond, and the clear white colour will be altered into a dirty one, and the sweet taste into an oily one. Locke.

3. Mean; base; despicable.

Such employments are the diseases of labour, and the rust of time, which it contracts not by lying still, but by dirty employment. Taylor's Holy Living.

Marriages would be made up upon more natural motives than meer dirty interests, and increase of riches without measure or end. Temple.

They come at length to grow sots and epicures, mean in their discourses, and dirty in their practices. South.

TO DIRTY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To foul; to soil.

The lords Strutts lived generously, and never used to dirty their fingers with pen, ink, and counters. Arbutnot.

2. To disgrace; to scandalize.

DIRUPTION. n. f. [diruptio, Latin.]

1. The act of bursting, or breaking.

2. The state of bursting, or breaking.

DIS. An inseparable particle used in composition, implying commonly a privative or negative signification of the word to which it is joined: as, to arm, to disarm; to join, to disjoin. It is borrowed from des, used by the French and Spaniards in this sense: as, desnouer, to untie; desferrar, to banish: from the Latin de; as, struo, to build; destruo, to destroy.

DISABILITY. n. f. [from disable.]

1. Want of power to do any thing; weakness; impotence.

Our consideration of creatures, and attention unto scriptures, are not in themselves things of like disability to breed or beget faith. Hooker.

Many withdrew themselves out of pure faintness, and disability to attend the conclusion. Raleigh.

He that knows most of himself, knows least of his knowledge, and the exercised understanding is conscious of its disability. Glanville.

The ability of mankind does not lie in the impotency or disabilities of brutes. Locke.

2. Want of proper qualifications for any purpose; legal impediment.

A suit is commenced in a temporal court for an inheritance; and the defendant pleads, in disability, that the plaintiff is a bastard. Ayliffe's Parergon.

This disadvantage which the dissenters at present lie under, of a disability to receive church preferments, will be easily remedied by the repeal of the test. Swift.

TO DISABLE. v. a. [dis and able.]

1. To deprive of force; to weaken; to disqualify for any act.

The invasion and rebellion did not only disable this king to be a conqueror, but deprived him both of his kingdom and life. Davies's Ireland.

Nor so is overcome
Satan, whose fall from heaven, a deadlier bruise Disabled not to give thee thy death's wound. Milton.

A Christian's life is a perpetual exercise, a wrestling and warfare, for which sensual pleasure disables him, by yielding to that enemy with whom he must strive. Taylor's Holy Living.

2. To hinder from action: used of things.

I have known a great fleet disabled for two months, and thereby lose great occasions by an indisposition of the admiral. Temple.

I have disabled mine estate,
By shewing something a more swelling port
Than my faint means would grant continuance. Shakespeare.

4. To deprive of usefulness or efficacy.

Farewel, Monsieur Traveller; took you list, and wear strange suits; disable all the benefits of your own country. Shakespeare.

Your days I will alarm, I'll haunt your nights,
And worse than age disable your delights. Dryden.

5. To exclude, as wanting proper qualifications.

I will not disable any for proving a scholar, nor yet dissemble that I have seen many happily forced upon the course to which by nature they seemed much indisposed. Watson.

TO DISABUSE. v. a. [dis and abuse.] To set free from a mistake; to disentangle from a fallacy; to set right; to undeceive.

The imposture and fallacy of our senses impose not only on common heads, but even more refined mercuries, who have the advantages of an improved reason to disabuse you. Glanville's Sceptis.

Those teeth fair Lyce must not show,
If she would bite: her lovers, though
Like birds they stoop at seeming grapes,
Are disabus'd when first she gapes. Wallr.

If by simplicity you meant a general defect in those that profess angling, I hope to disabuse you. Walton's Angler.

Chaos of thought and passions, all confus'd;
Still by himself abus'd or disabus'd. Pope.

DISACCOMMODATION. n. f. [dis and accommodation.] The state of being unfit or unprepared.

Devastations have happened in some places more than in others, according to the accommodation or disaccommodation of them to such calamities. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

was, by words and oral expressions verbally to deny and disacknowledge it. South.

DISACQUAINTANCE. n. f. [dis and acquaintance.] Disuse of familiarity.

Conscience, by a long neglect of, and disacquaintance with itself, contracts an inveterate rust or soil. South.

DISADVANTAGE. n. f. [dis and advantage.]

1. Loss; injury to interest: as, he sold to disadvantage.

2. Diminution of any thing desirable, as credit, fame, honour.

Chaucer in many things resembled Ovid, and that with no disadvantage on the side of the modern author. Dryden.

The most shining merit goes down to posterity with disadvantage, when it is not placed by writers in its proper light. Addison's Freeholder.

Those parts already published give reason to think, that the Iliad will appear with no disadvantage to that immortal poem. Addison's Freeholder.

Their testimony will not be of much weight to its disadvantage, since they are liable to the common objection of condemning what they did not understand. Swift.

3. A state not prepared for defence.

No fort can be so strong,
No fleshly breast can armed be so sound, But

But will at last be won with batt'ry long,
Or unawares at disadvantage found. Fairy Queen.
TO DISADVANTAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To injure in interest of any kind.

All other violences are so far from advancing Christianity, that they extremely weaken and disadvantage it. Decay of Piety.

DISADVANTAGEABLE. adj. [from disadvantage.] Contrary to profit; producing loss. A word not used.

In clearing of a man's estate, he may as well hurt himself in being too sudden, as in letting it run on too long; for hasty selling is commonly as disadvantageable as interest. Bacon.

DISADVANTAGEOUS. adj. [from disadvantage.] Contrary to interest; contrary to convenience; unfavourable.

A multitude of eyes will narrowly inspect every part of an eminent man, consider him nicely in all views, and not be a little pleased when they have taken him in the worst and most disadvantageous lights. Addison's Spectator.

DISADVANTAGEOUSLY. adv. [from disadvantageous.] In a manner contrary to interest or profit; in a manner not favourable.

An approving nod or smile serves to drive you on, and make you display yourselves more disadvantageously. Government of the Tongue.

DISADVANTAGEOUSNESS. n. f. [from disadvantageous.] Contrariety to profit; inconvenience; mischief; loss.

DISADVENTUROUS. adj. [dis and adventurous.] Unhappy; unprosperous.

DISAFFE'CTED. part. adj. [from disaffect.] Not disposed to zeal or affection. Usually applied to those who are enemies to the government.

By denying civil worship to the emperor's statues, which the custom then was to give, they were proceeded against as disaffected to the emperor. Stillingfleet.

DISAFFE'CTEDLY. adv. [from disaffected.] After a disaffected manner.

DISAFFE'CTENESS. n. f. [from disaffected.] The quality of being disaffected.

DISAFFE'CTION. n. f. [from disaffect.]

1. Dislike; ill will.

In making laws, princes must have regard to the public dispositions, to the affections and disaffections, of the people; and must not introduce a law with public scandal and displeasure. Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.

2. Want of zeal for the government; want of ardour for the reigning prince.

In this age, every thing disliked by those who think with the majority, is called disaffection. Swift.

3. Disorder; bad constitution: in a physical sense.

The disease took its original merely from the disaffection of the part, and not from the peccancy of the humours. Wise man.

DISAFFIRMANCE. n. f. [dis and affirm.] Confutation; negation.

That kind of reasoning which reduceth the opposite conclusion to something that is apparently absurd, is a demonstration in disaffirmance of any thing that is affirmed. Hale.

TO DISAFFO'REST. v. a. [dis and forest.]

To throw open to common purposes; to reduce from the privileges of a forest to the state of common ground.

The commissioners of the treasury moved the king to disafforest some forests of his, explaining themselves of such forests as lay out of the way, not near any of the king's houses. Bacon.

How happy 's he, which hath due place assign'd
To his beasts; and disafforested his mind! Donne.

TO DISAGREE. v. n. [dis and agree.]

1. To differ; not to be the same.

The mind clearly and infallibly perceives all distinct ideas to disagree; that is, the one not to be the other. Locke.

2. To differ; not to be of the same opinion.

Why both the bands in worship disagree,
And some adore the flow'r, and some the tree. Dryden.

3. To be in a state of opposition: followed by from or with, before the opposite.

It containeth many improprieties, disagreeing almost in all things from the true and proper description. Brown.

Strange it is, that they reject the plainest sense of scripture, because it seems to disagree with what they call reason. Atterbury.

DISAGREE'ABLE. adj. [from disagree.]

1. Contrary; unsuitable.

Some demon, an enemy to the Greeks, had forced her to a conduct disagreeable to her sincerity. Broome.

2. Unpleasing; offensive.

To make the sense of esteem or disgrace sink the deeper, and be of the more weight, either agreeable or disagreeable things should constantly accompany these different states. Locke.

DISAGREE'ABLENESS. n. f. [from disagreeable.]

1. Unsuitableness; contrariety.

2. Unpleasantness; offensiveness.

A father will hug and embrace his beloved son, for all the dirt and foulness of his cloaths; the dearth of the person easily apologizing for the disagreeableness of the habit. South.

DISAGREEMENT. n. f. [from disagree.]

1. Difference; dissimilitude; diversity; not identity; not likeness.

These carry such plain and evident notes and characters, either of disagreement or affinity with one another, that the several kinds of them are easily distinguished. Woodward.

2. Difference of opinion; contrariety of sentiments.

They seemed one to cross another, as touching their several opinions about the necessity of sacraments, whereas in truth their disagreement is not great. Hooker.

TO DISALLOW. v. a. [dis and allow.]

1. To deny authority to any.

When, said she,
Were those first councils disallow'd by me?
Or where did I at sure tradition strike,
Provided still it were apostolic? Dryden's Hind and Panther.

2. To consider as unlawful; not to permit.

Their usual kind of disputing sheweth, that they do not disallow only these Romish ceremonies which are unprofitable, but count all unprofitable which are Romish. Hooker.

3. To censure by some posterior act.

It was known that the most eminent of those who professed his own principles, publicly disallowed his proceedings. Swift.

4. To censure; not to justify.

There is a secret, inward foreboding fear, that some evil or other will follow the doing of that which a man's own conscience disallows him in. South.

TO DISALLOW. v. n. To refuse permission; not to grant; not to make or suppose lawful.

God doth in converts, being married, allow continuance with infidels, and yet disallow that the faithful, when they are free, should enter into bonds of wedlock with such. Hooker.

DISALLOWABLE. adj. [from disallow.] Not allowable; not to be suffered.

DISALLOWANCE. n. f. [from disallow.] Prohibition.

God accepta of a thing suitable for him to receive, and for us to give, where he does not declare his refusal and disallowance of it. South.

TO DISANIMATE. v. a. [dis and animate.]

1. To deprive of life.

2. To discourage; to deject; to depress.

The presence of a king engenders love amongst his subjects and his loyal friends, as it disanimates his enemies. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

He was confounded and disanimated at his presence, and added, How can the servant of my lord talk with my lord? Boyle's Seraphic Love.

DISANIMATION. n. f. [from disanimate.] Privation of life.

They cannot in reason retain that apprehension after death, as being affections which depend on life, and depart upon disanimation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO DISANNU'L. v. a. [dis and annul.] This word is formed, contrarily to analogy, by those who, not knowing the meaning of the word annul, intended to form a negative sense by the needless use of the negative particle. It ought therefore to be rejected, as ungrammatical and barbarous.] To annul; to deprive of authority; to vacate; to make null; to make void; to nullify.

The Jews ordinances for us to resume, were to check our Lord himself, which hath disannulled them. Hooker.

That gave him power of disannulling of laws, and disposing of men's fortunes and estates, and the like points of absolute power, being in themselves harsh and odious. Bacon.

To be in both worlds full,
Is more than God was, who was hungry here:
Wouldst thou his laws of fasting disannul? Herbert.

Wilt thou my judgments disannul? Defame
My equal rule, to clear thyself of blame? Sandys.

DISANNU'LEMENT. n. f. [from disannul.] The act of making void.

TO DISAPPE'AR. v. n. [disparoitre, Fr.] To be lost to view; to vanish out of sight; to fly; to go away.

She disappear'd, and left me dark! I wak'd
To find her, or for ever to deplore. Milton.

When the night and winter disappear,
The purple morning, rising with the year,
Salutes the spring. Dryden.

The pictures drawn in our minds are laid in fading colours, and, if not sometimes refreshed, vanish and disappear. Locke.

Crickets I saw that others named deface,
And fix their own with labour in their place;
Their own, like others, soon their place resign'd,
Or disappear'd, and left the first behind. Pope.

TO DISAPPO'INT. v. a. [dis and appoint.]

1. To defeat of expectation; to balk; to hinder from something expected.

The superior Being can defeat all his designs, and disappoint all his hopes. Tillotson.

Whilst

Whilst the champion, with redoubled might,
Strikes home the jav'lin, his retiring foe
Shrinks from the wound, and disappoints the blow.

Addison.

There's nothing like surprising the rogues; how will they be disappointed, when they hear that thou hast prevented their revenge!

Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

We are not only tortured by the reproaches which are offered us, but are disappointed by the silence of men when it is unexpected, and humbled even by their praise.

Addison.

2. It has of before the thing lost by disappointment.

The Janizaries, disappointed by the bassas of the spoils, received of the bounty of Solyman a great largess.

Kneller.

DISAPPOINTMENT. n. f. [from disap-point.] Defeat of hopes; miscarriage of expectations.

It is impossible for us to know what are calamities, and what are blessings. How many accidents have passed for misfortunes, which have turned to the welfare and prosperity of the persons in whose lot they have fallen! How many disappointments have, in their consequences, saved a man from ruin!

Spectator.

If we hope for things, of which we have not thoroughly considered the value, our disappointment will be greater than our pleasure in the fruition of them.

Addison's Spectator.

DISAPPROBATION. n. f. [dis and approbation.] Censure; condemnation; expression of dislike.

He was obliged to publish his letters, to shew his disapprobation of the publishing of others.

Pope.

DISAPPROVE. v. a. [disapprover, Fr.]

1. To dislike; to censure.

I reason'd much, alas! but more I lov'd;

Sent and recall'd, ordain'd and disapproved.

Without good breeding truth is disapproved;

That only makes superior sense belov'd.

Pope.

2. To reject as disliked; not to confirm by concurrence.

A project for a treaty of barrier with the States was transmitted hither from Holland, and was disapproved of by our courts.

Disarray and shameful rout ensue,

And force is added to the fainting crew.

Dryden's Fables.

2. Undress.

DISASSIDUITY. n. f. Absence of care or attention.

The Cecilians kept him back; as very well knowing that, upon every little absence or disassiduity, he should be subject to take cold at his back.

Wotton.

DISASTER. n. f. [disastre, French.]

1. The blast or stroke of an unfavourable planet.

Stars shone with trains of fire, dews of blood
fall;

Disasters veil'd the sun; and the moist star,
Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stands,
Was sick almost to doomsday with eclipse.

Shak.

2. Misfortune; grief; mishap; misery; calamity.

This day black omens threat the brightest fair,
That e'er deserv'd a watchful spirit's care,
Some dire disaster, or by force or flight;
But what, or where, the fates have wrapt in night.

Pope.

TO DISASTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To blast by the stroke of an unfavourable star.

Ah, chaste bed of mine, said she, which never heretofore couldst accuse me of one defiled thought, how canst thou now receive that disaster'd change-ling?

disown; to deny knowledge of; to deny concurrence in any thing, or with any person.

The heirs and posterity of them which yielded the same, are either ignorant thereof, or do wilfully deny, or steadfastly disavow it.

Spenser's State of Ireland.

The English did believe his name was therein abused; which he manifested to be true, by disavow-ing it openly afterwards.

Hayward.

To deal in person is good, when a man's face breedeth regard, and generally when a man will reserve to himself liberty either to disavow or to expound.

Baron.

A man that acts below his rank, doth but disavow fortune, and seemeth to be conscious of his own want in worth, and doth but teach others to

Ham.

He only does his conquest disavow,
And thinks too little what they found too much.

Dryden.

We are reminded by the ceremony of taking an oath, that it is a part of that obedience which we learn from the gospel, expressly to disavow all evasions and mental reservations whatsoever.

Addison's Freeholder.

DISAVOWAL. n. f. [from disavow.] Denial.

An earnest disavowal of fear often proceeds from fear.

Till God, our general, shall us disband.

Denham.

I am content to lead a private life;

Disband my army to secure the state.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Bid him disband his legions.

Addison's Cato.

2. To dismiss from service.

Some imagine that a quantity of water, sufficient to make such a deluge, was created upon that occasion; and, when the business was done, all disbanded again, and annihilated.

Woodward.

TO DISBAND. v. n.

1. To retire from military service; to separate; to break up.

Our navy was upon the point of disbanding, and many of our men come ashore.

Bac. War with Sp.

The rag'd pow'rs

Disband, and wand'ring each his several way

Part us.

Milton.

The common soldiers, and inferior officers,

sh and be fully paid upon their disbanding.

Were it not for the small remainders of piety and virtue, which are yet left scattered among mankind, human society would in a short space disband and run into confusion, and the earth would grow wild and become a forest.

Tillotson.

2. To be dissolved.

White rocks stand,

And rivers stir, thou canst not shrink or quail;

Yea, when both rocks and all things shall disband,

Then shalt thou be my rock and tower.

Herb.

TO DISBARK. v. a. [debarquer, French.]

To land from a ship; to put on shore.

Together fall'd they, traught with all the things

To service done by land that might belong,

And, when occasion serv'd, disbarked them.

The ship we moor on these obscure abodes;

Disbark the sheep, an offering to the gods.

Pope's Odyssey.

DISBELIEF. n. f. [from disbelieve.] Refusal of credit; denial of belief.

Our belief or disbelief of a thing does not alter
the nature of the thing.

Tillotson.

TO DISBELIEVE. v. a. [dis and believe.]

Not to credit; not to hold true.

The thinking it impossible his sins should be forgiven, though he should be truly penitent, is a sin, but rather of infidelity than despair; it being the disbelieving of an eternal truth of God's.

Hammond's Pract. Catech.

Such who profess to disbelieve a future state, are not always equally satisfied with their own reasonings.

Asterbury.

From

From a fondness to some vices, which the doctrine of futurity rendered uneasy, they brought themselves to doubt of religion; or, out of a vain affectation of seeing farther than other men, pretended to disbelieve it. Rogers.

DISBELI'EVER. s. [from disbelieve.] One who refuses belief; one who denies any position to be true.

An humble soul is frightened into sentiments, because a man of great name pronounces heresy upon the contrary sentiments, and casts the disbeliever out of the church. Watts.

To DISBE'NCH. v. a. [dis and bench.] To drive from a seat.

Sir, I hope
My words disbench'd you not?

—No, Sir; yet oft,

When blows have made me stay, I fled from words. Shakespeare.

To DISBRA'NCH. v. a. [dis and branch.] To separate, or break off, as a branch from a tree.

She that herself will siver and disbranch
From her maternal sap, perforce must wither,
And come to deadly use. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Such as are newly planted, need not be disbranched till the sap begins to stir, that so the wound may be healed without the scar. Evelyn's Kalendar.

To DISBU'D. v. a. [With gardeners.] To take away the branches or sprigs newly put forth, that are ill placed. Dict.

Does any here know me? This is not Lear:
Does ear walk thus, speak thus? Where are his eyes?

Either his motion weakens, or his discernings
Are lethargied. Shakespeare.

You should be rul'd and led
By some discretion, that discerns your state Better than you yourself. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. To distinguish.

To discern such buds as are fit to produce blossoms, from such as will display themselves but in leaves, is no difficult matter. Boyle.

4. To make the difference between.

They follow virtue for reward to-day;
To-morrow vice, if she give better pay:
We are so good, or bad, just at a price;
For nothing else discerns the virtue or vice. Ben Jonson.

To DISCE'RN. v. n.

1. To make distinction.

Great part of the country was abandoned to the spoils of the soldiers, who not troubling themselves to discern between a subject and a rebel, whilst their liberty lasted, made indifferently profit of both. Hayward.

The custom of arguing on any side, even against our persuasions, dims the understanding, and makes it by degrees lose the faculty of discerning between truth and falsehood. Locke.

2. To have judicial cognizance: not in use.

It discerneth of forces, frauds, crimes various of felonious, and the inchoations towards crimes capital, not actually perpetrated. Bacon.

without aid of discipline, doth make the bodies hardest, and the courage warmest. Bacon.
They who want that sense of discipline, hearing,
are also by consequence deprived of speech. Holder.
It is by the assistance of the eye and the ear especially, which are called the senses of discipline, that our minds are furnished with various parts of knowledge. Watts.
2. Rule of government; order; method of government.
They hold, that from the very apostles time till this present age, wherein yourselves imagine ye have found out a right pattern of sound discipline, there never was any time safe to be followed. Hooker.
As we are to believe for ever the articles of evangelical doctrine, so the precepts of discipline we are, in like sort, bound for ever to observe. Hooker.
While

While we do admire
This virtue and this moral discipline,
Let's be no stoicks. Shakespeare.

3. Military regulation.

This opens all your victories in Scotland,
Your discipline in war, wisdom in peace. Shakespeare.
Let crooked steel invade
The lawless troops which discipline disclaim,
And their superfluous growth with rigour tame. Dryden.

4. A state of subjection.

The most perfect, who have their passions in the best discipline, are yet obliged to be constantly on their guard. Rogers.

5. Any thing taught; art; science.

Art may be said to overcome and advance nature in these mechanical disciplines, which, in this respect, are much to be preferred. Wilkins.

6. Punishment; chastisement; correction.

A lively cobbler kicked and spurred while his wife was carrying him, and had scarce passed a day without giving her the discipline of the strap. Addison's Spectator.

7. External mortification.

The love of God makes a man chaste without the laborious arts of fasting and exterior discipline;
he reaches at glory without any other arms but those of love. Taylor.

To DISCIPLINE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To educate; to instruct; to bring up.

We are wise enough to begin when they are very young, and discipline by times those other creatures we would make useful and good for somewhat. Locke.

They were with care prepared and disciplined for confirmation, which they could not arrive at till they were found, upon examination, to have made a sufficient progress in the knowledge of Christianity. Addison on the Christian Religion.

2. To regulate; to keep in order.

They look to us, as we should judge of an army of well-disciplined soldiers at a distance. Derham's Astro-Theology.

3. To punish; to correct; to chastise.

4. To advance by instruction.

The law appear'd imperfect, and but giv'n
With purpose to refine them in full time
Up to a better covenant, disciplin'd
From shadowy types to truth, from flesh to spirit. Milton.

To DISCLAIM. v. a. [dis and claim.]

To disown; to deny any knowledge of; to retract any union with; to abrogate;
to renounce.

You cowardly rascal! nature disclaims all share in thee: a taylor made thee. Shakespeare. King Lear.
He calls the gods to witness their offence;
Disclaims the war, asserts his innocence. Dryden's Æneid.

We find our Lord, on all occasions, disclaiming all pretensions to a temporal kingdom. Rogers.

Very few, among those who profess themselves Christians, disclaim all concern for their souls, disown the authority, or renounce the expectations, of the gospel. Rogers.

DISCLAIMER. n. s. [from disclaim.]

1. One that disclaims, disowns, or re- nounces.

2. [In law.] A plea containing an express denial or refusal. Corwell.

To DISCLOSE. v. a. [disclose, Latin; dis and close.]

1. To uncover; to produce from a state of latency to open view.

In this deep quiet, from what source unknown,
Those seeds of fire their fatal birth disclose;
And first few scattering sparks about were blown,
Big with the flames that to our ruin rose. Dryden.
Then earth and ocean various forms disclose.
The shells being broken, struck off, and gone,

the stone included in them is thereby disclosed and set at liberty. Woodward.

2. To hatch; to open.

It is reported by the ancients, that the ostrich layeth her eggs under sand, where the heat of the sun discloseth them. Bacon.

3. To reveal; to tell; to impart what is secret.

There may be a reconciliation, except for upbraiding, or pride, or disclosing of secrets, or a treacherous wound; for from these things every friend will depart. Ecclus.

If I disclose my passion,
Our friendship's at an end; if I conceal it,
The world will call me false. Addison's Cato.

DISCLOSER. n. s. [from disclose.] One that reveals or discovers.

DISCLOSURE. n. s. [from disclose.]

1. Discovery; production into view.

The producing of cold is a thing very worthy the inquisition, both for the use and disclosure of causes. Bacon.

2. Act of revealing any thing secret.

After so happy a marriage between the king and her daughter, she was, upon a sudden mutability and disclosure of the king's mind, severely handled. Bacon.

DISCLOSURE. n. s. [disclosure, Lat.] Emis- sion.

Judge what a ridiculous thing it were, that the continued shadow of the earth should be broken by sudden miraculous eruptions and disclosures of light, to prevent the art of the lanthorn-maker. Morgan.

DISCOLORATION. n. s. [from discolour.]

1. The act of changing the colour; the act of staining.

2. Change of colour; stain; die.

In a depravation of the humours from a sound state to what the physicians call by a general name of a cacochymy, spots and discolorations of the skin are signs of weak fibres. Arbutnot.

To DISCOLOUR. v. a. [decoloro, Lat.]

To change from the natural hue; to stain.

Many a widow's husband groveling lies,
Coldly embracing the discoloured earth. Shakespeare. King John.

Drink water, either pure, or but discoloured with malt. Temple.

Suspensions, and fantastical surmise,
And jealousy, with jaundice in her eyes,
Discolouring all she view'd. Dryden.

He who looks upon the soul through its outward actions, sees it through a deceitful medium, which is apt to discolour and pervert the object. Add. Spect.

Have a care lest some beloved notion, or some darling science, so prevail over your mind as to dis-colour all your ideas. Watts.

To DISCOMFIT. v. a. [desconfire, Fr.

scouffigere, Ital. as if from disconfigere, Lat.] To defeat; to conquer; to vanquish; to overpower; to subdue; to beat; to overthrow.

Fight against that monstrous rebel, Cade,
Whom, since, I heard to be discomfited. Shakespeare.
Joshua discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword. Exodus.

He, fugitive, declin'd superior strength;
Discomfited, pursued, in the sad chase
Ten thousand ignominious fall. Philips.

While my gallant countrymen are employed in pursuing rebels half discomfited through the consciousness of their guilt, I shall improve those victories to the good of my fellow subjects. Addison.

DISCOMFIT. n. s. [from the verb.] Defeat; rout; overthrow.

Fly you must: incurable discomfit
Reigns in the hearts of all our present party. Shakespeare.

Dagon must stoop, and shall ere long receive
Such a discomfit, as shall quite despoil him
Of all these boasted trophies. Milton's Agonistes.

DISCOMFITURE. n. s. [from discomfit.]

Defeat; loss of battle; rout; ruin;
overthrow.

Sad tidings bring I to you out of France,
Of loss, of slaughter, and discomfiture. Shakespeare.

Behold, every man's sword was against his fellow,
and there was a very great discomfiture. Sam.

What a defeat and discomfiture is it to a man, when he comes to use this wealth, to find it all false metal! Government of the Tongue.

He sent his angels to fight for his people; and the discomfiture and slaughter of great hosts is attributed to their assistance. Asterbury.

DISCOMFORT. n. s. [dis and comfort.]

Uneasiness; sorrow; melancholy;
gloom.

This himself did foresee, and therefore armed his church, to the end they might sustain it without discomfort. Hooker.

Discomfort guides my tongue,
And bids me speak of nothing but despair. Shak.
In solitude there is not only discomfort, but weakness also. South.

To DISCOMFORT. v. a. [from the noun.]

To grieve; to sadden; to deject.

Her champion went away discomfited as much as discomfited. Sidney.

His funeral shall not be in our camp,
Lest it discomfort us. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

DISCOMFORTABLE. adj. [from discomfort.]

1. That is melancholy and refuses comfort.

Discomfortable cousin, know'st thou not
That when the searching eye of Heav'n is hid Behind the globe, it lights the lower world? Shak.

2. That causes sadness.

What! did that help poor Dorus, whose eyes could carry unto him no other news but discomfort-able? Sidney.

To DISCOMME'ND. v. a. [dis and com-meud.] To blame; to censure; to mention with disapprobation.

Absolutely we cannot discommend, we cannot absolutely approve, either willingness to live, or forwardness to die. Hooker.

Now you will all be wits; and he, I pray,
And you, that discommend it, mend the play. Derham.

Neither do I discommend the lofty style in tragedy, which is naturally pompous and magnificent. Dryden.

DISCOMME'NDABLE. adj. [from discommeud.] Blameable; censurable; deserving blame.

Puillanimité is, according to Aristotle's morality, a vice very discommendable. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DISCOMME'NDABLENESS. n. s. [from dis-commendable.] Blameableness; liable-ness to censure. Diſt.

DISCOMMENDA'TION. n. s. [from discommeud.] Blame; reproach; censure.

Tully assigns three motions, whereby, without any discommendation, a man might be drawn to become an accuser of others. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DISCOMME'NDER. n. s. [from discommend.]

One that discommends; a dispraiser.

To DISCOMMO'DE. v. a. [dis and commode,

Fr.] To put to inconvenience; to molest; to incommode.

DISCOMMO'DIOUS. adj. [from discommode.]

Inconvenient; troublesome; unpleasing.

So many thousand soldiers, unfit for any labour, or other trade, must either seek service and employment abroad, which may be dangerous; or else employ themselves here at home, which may be discommodious. Spenser's State of Ireland.

DISCOMMODITY. n. f. [from discommodate.] Inconvenience; disadvantage; hurt; mischief.

We speak now of usury, how the discommodities of it may be best avoided, and the commodities retained: or how, in the balance of commodities and discommodities, the qualities of usury are to be reconciled. Bacon.

It is better that a ship should be preserved with some discommodity to the sailors, than that, the sailors being in health, the ship should perish. Hayward.

TO DISCOMPOSE. v. p. [décomposer, Fr.]

1. To disorder; to unsettle.

The debate upon the self-denying ordinance had raised many jealousies, and discomposed the confidence that had formerly been between many of them. Clarendon.

2. To ruffle; to disorder.

Now Betty from her master's bed had flown, And softly stole to discompose her own. Swift.

3. To disturb the temper; to agitate by perturbation.

No more, dear mother: ill in death it shows, Your peace of mind by rage to discompose. Dryden.

4. To offend; to fret; to vex.

Men, who possess all the advantages of life, are in a state where there are many accidents to disorder and discompose, but few to please them. Swift.

5. To displace; to discard: not in use.

Though he was a dark prince, and infinitely suspicious, he never put down or discomposed a counsellor or near servant. Bacon.

DISCOMPOSURE. n. f. [from discompose.] Disorder; perturbation.

He threw himself upon his bed, lamenting with much passion, and with abundance of tears; and continued in this melancholick discomposure of mind many days. Clarendon.

TO DISCONCERT. v. a. [dis and concert.]

1. To unsettle the mind; to discompose.

You need not provoke their spirits by outrages: a careless gesture, a word, or a look, is enough to disconcert them. Collier.

2. To break a scheme; to defeat a machination.

DISCONFORMITY. n. f. [dis and conformity.] Want of agreement; inconsistency.

Lies arise from error and mistake, or malice, and forgery; they consist in the disagreement and disconformity betwixt the speech and the conception of the mind, or the conceptions of the mind and the things themselves, or the speech and the things. Hakewill on Providence.

DISCONGRUITY. n. f. [dis and congruity.] Disagreement; inconsistency.

There is want of capacity in the thing, to sustain such a duration, from the intrinsecal discongruity of the one to the other. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

DISCONSOLATE. adj. [dis and console.]

Void of comfort; hopeless; sorrowful; melancholy.

See Cassius all disconsolate, With Pindarus his bondman, on this hill. Shak.

If patiently thy bidding they obey, Dismiss them not disconsolate. Milton.

The ladies and the knights, no shelter nigh, Were dropping wet, disconsolate and wan, And through their thin array receiv'd the rain. Dryden.

The moon reflects the sunbeams to us, and so, by illuminating the air, takes away in some measure the disconsolate darkness of our winter nights. Ray.

DISCONSOLATELY. adv. [from disconsolate.] In a disconsolate manner; comfortlessly.

DISCONSOLATENESS. n. f. [from disconsolate.] The state of being disconsolate.

DISCONTENT. n. f. [dis and content.] Want of content; uneasiness at the present state.

I see your brows full of discontent, Your hearts of sorrows, and your eyes of tears. Shakespeare.

Not that their pleasures caus'd her discontent, She sigh'd, not that they stay'd, but that she went. Pope.

DISCONTENT. adj. [dis and content.] Uneasy at the present state; dissatisfied.

They were of their own nature circumspect and slow, discountenanced and discontent; and those the earl singled as fittest for his purpose. Hayward.

TO DISCONTENT. v. a. [from the noun.] To dissatisfy; to make uneasy at the present state.

I know a discontented gentleman, Whose humble means match not his haughty spirit. Shakespeare.

The discontented now are only they Whose crimes before did your just cause betray. Dryden.

DISCONTENTED. participial adj. [from discontent.] Uneasy; cheerless; malevolent.

Let us know

What will tie up your discontented sword. Shakesp. These are, beyond comparison, the two greatest evils in this world; a diseased body, and a discontented mind. Tillotson.

The goddess, with a discontented air, Seems to reject him, though she grants his pray'r. Pope.

DISCONTENTEDNESS. n. f. [from discontented.] Uneasiness; want of ease; dissatisfaction.

A beautiful bust of Alexander the Great casts up his face to heaven with a noble air of grief, or discontentedness, in his looks. Addison's Travels.

DISCONTENTMENT. n. f. [from discontent.] The state of being discontented; uneasiness.

These are the vices that fill them with general discontentment, as though the bosom of that famous church, wherein they live, were more noisome than any dungeon. Hooker.

The politick and artificial nourishing and entertaining of hopes, and carrying men from hopes to hopes, is one of the best antidotes against the poison of discontentments. Bacon.

DISCONTINUANCE. n. f. [from discontinue.]

1. Want of cohesion of parts; want of union of one part with another; disruption.

The stillicides of water, if there be enough to follow, will draw themselves into a small thread, because they will not discontinue; but if there be no remedy, then they cast themselves into round drops, which is the figure that saveth the body most from discontinuance. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Cessation; intermission.

Let us consider whether our approaches to him are sweet and refreshing, and if we are uneasy under any long discontinuance of our conversation with him. Atterbury.

3. [In the common law.] An interruption or breaking off; as discontinuance of possession, or discontinuance of process. The effect of discontinuance of possession is, that a man may not enter upon his own land or tenement alienated, whatsoever his right be unto it, or by his own authority; but must seek to recover possession by law. The effect of discontinuance of plea is, that the instance may not be taken up again, but by a new writ to begin the suit afresh. Cowell.

DISCONTINUATION. n. f. [from discontinue.] Disruption of continuity; breach of union of parts; disruption; separation.

Upon any discontinuation of parts, made either by bubbles, or by shaking the glass, the whole mercury falls. Newton.

TO DISCONTINUE. v. n. [discontinuer, French.]

1. To lose the cohesion of parts; to suffer separation or disruption of substance.

All bodies, ductile and tensile, as metals, that will be drawn into wires; wool and tow, that will be drawn into yarn, or thread; have in them the appetite of not discontinuing strong, which maketh them follow the force that pulleth them out, and yet so as not to discontinue or forsake their own body. Bacon.

2. To lose an established or prescriptive custom or right.

Thyself shalt discontinue from thine heritage that I gave thee, and I will cause thee to serve thine enemies. Jer.

TO DISCONTINUE. v. a.

1. To leave off; to cease any practice or habit.

Twenty puny lyes I'll tell, That men shall swear I've discontinued school Above a twelvemonth. Shakespeare.

Examine thy customs of diet, sleep, exercise, apparel, and the like; and try, in any thou shalt judge hurtful, to discontinue it by little and little; but so, as if thou find any inconvenience by the change, thou come back to it again. Bacon.

2. To break off; to interrupt.

There is that property, in all letters, of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice, without appearing to discontinue it. Holder's Elements of Speech.

DISCONTINUITY. n. f. [dis and continuity.] Difunity of parts; want of cohesion.

That discontinuity of parts is the principal cause of the opacity of bodies, will appear by considering that opaque substances become transparent by filling their pores with any substance of equal, or almost equal, density with their parts. Newton.

DISCONVENIENCE. n. f. [dis and convenience.] Incongruity; disagreement; opposition of nature.

Fear ariseth many times out of natural antipathies of nature; but, in these disconveniences of nature, deliberation hath no place at all. Bramhall's Answer to Hobbes.

DISCORD. n. f. [discordia, Latin.]

1. Disagreement; opposition; mutual anger; reciprocal oppugnancy.

See what a scourge is laid upon your hate, That heav'n finds means to kill your joys with love!

And I, for winking at your discords too, Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

He is a false witness that speaketh lies, and that soweth discord among brethren. Proverbs.

2. Difference or contrariety of qualities, particularly of sounds.

Take but degree away, untune that string, And hark what discord follows; each thing meets In mere oppugnancy. Shakesp. Troil. and Cress.

Discord, like that of music's various parts, Discord that makes the harmony of hearts; Discord,

Discord, that only this dispute shall bring,
Who best shall love the duke and serve the king.
Dryden.

All nature is but art unknown to thee;
All chance, direction which thou canst not see;
All discord, harmony understood;
All partial evil, universal good.
Pope.

3. [In music.] Sounds not of themselves pleasing, but necessary to be mixed with others.

It is sound alone that doth immediately and incorporeally affect most; this is most manifest in music, and concords and discords in music: for all sounds, whether they be sharp or flat, if they be sweet, have a roundness and equality; and if they be harsh, are unequal: for a discord itself is but a harshness of divers sounds meeting. Bacon.

It is the lark that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords and displeasing sharps.
Shakespeare.

How doth music amaze us, when of discords the maketh the sweetest harmony!
Pearbam.

7. DISCORD. v. n. [discordo, Latin.] To disagree; not to suit with.

Sounds do disturb and alter the one the other;
sometimes the one drowning the other, and making it not heard; sometimes the one jarring and discording with the other, and making a confusion.
Bacon.

DISCORDANCE. n. s. [from discord.]

DISCORDANCY. s. Disagreement; opposition; inconsistency.

DISCORDANT. adj. [discordans, Latin.]

1. Inconsistent; at variance with itself.

Myrrha was joy'd the welcome news to hear,
But, clogg'd with guilt, the joy was unsincere;
So various, so discordant is the mind,
That in our will a different will we find. Dryden.

2. Opposite; contrarious.

The discordant attraction of some wandering comets would certainly disorder the revolutions of the planets, if they approached too near them.
Claughton.

3. Incongruous; not conformable.

Hither conscience is to be referred; if by a comparison of things done with the rule there be a consonancy, then follows the sentence of approbation; if discordant from it, the sentence of condemnation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

DISCORDANTLY. adv. [from discordant.]

1. Inconsistently; in disagreement with itself.

2. In disagreement with another.

Two strings of a musical instrument being struck together, making two noises that arrive at the ear at the same time as to sense, yield a sound differing from either of them, and as it were compounded of both; inasmuch, that if they be discordantly tuned, though each of them struck apart would yield a pleasing sound, yet being struck together they make a harsh and troublesome noise. Boyle on Colours.

3. Peculiarly; in a contradictory manner.

7. DISCOVER. v. a. [decouvrir, French;
dis and cover.]

1. To shew; to disclose; to bring to light; to make visible.

2. To expose to view.

The cover of the coach was made with such joints, that as they might, to avoid the weather, pull it up close, so they might put each end down, and remain as discovered and open-lighted as on horseback. Stacy.

Go draw aside the curtains, and discover
The several caskets to this noble prince. Shaksp.
He discovers deep things out of darkness, and bringeth out to light the shadow of death.
Job, xii. 22.

3. To shew; not to shew; to expose.

And now will I discover her lawfulness. Hobbs.
Law can discover sin, but not remove. Milton.

4. To make known; not to disguise; to reveal.

We will pass over unto those men, and we will discover ourselves unto them. Isa. xiv. 8.

Eve, who unseen

Yet all had heard, with audible lament
Discover'd from the place of her retire. Milton.

5. To ken; to espy.

When we had discovered Cyprus, we left it on the left hand. Acts.

6. To find out; to obtain information.

He shall never, by any alteration in me, discover my knowledge of his mistake. Pope's Letters.

7. To detect; to find though concealed

Up he starts,
Discover'd and surpris'd. Milton.

Man with strength and free will arm'd
Complete, to have discover'd and repuls'd
Whatever wiles of foe or seeming friend. Milton.

8. To find things or places not known before.

Some to discover islands far away. Shaksp.
Another part in squadrons bend their march
On bold adventure, to discover wide
That dismal world. Milton.

So of things. The Germans disco- vered printing and gunpowder.

9. To exhibit to the view.

Some high climbing hill,
Which to his eye discovers unaware
The goodly prospect of some foreign land,
First seen, or some renown'd metropolis
With glistering spires and battlements adorn'd.
Milton.

Not light, but rather darkness visible,
Serv'd only to discover lights of woe. Milton.

DISCOVERABLE. adj. [from discover.]

1. That which may be found out.

That mineral matter, which is so intermixed with the common and terrestrial matter, as not to be discoverable by human industry; or, if discover- able, diffused and scattered amongst the crasser matter, can never be separated. Woodward's Natural History.

Revelation may assert two things to be joined,
whose connection or agreement is not discoverable
by reason. Watts.

2. Apparent; exposed to view.

They were deceived by Satan, and that not in an invisible situation, but in an open and discover- able apparition, that is, in the form of a serpent.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

It is concluded by astronomers, that the atmosphere of the moon hath no clouds nor rains, but a perpetual and uniform serenity; because nothing discoverable in the lunar surface is ever covered and absconded by the interposition of any clouds or mists. Bentley.

DISCOVERER. n. s. [from discover.]

1. One that finds any thing not known before; a finder out.

If more be found out, they will not recompense the discoverer's pains, but will be fitter to be cast out. Holder.

Places receive appellations, according to the language of the discoverer, from observations made upon the people. Broom.

The Cape of Good Hope was doubled in those early times; and the Portuguese were not the first discoverers of that navigation. Arbutnot on Coins.

An old maiden gentlewoman is the greatest dis- coverer of judgments; she can tell you what sin it was that set such a man's house on fire. Addison's Spectator.

2. A scout; one who is put to descry the posture or number of an enemy; speculator.

Here stand, my lords, and send discoverers forth,
To know the numbers of our enemies. Shaksp.

DISCOVERY. n. s. [from discover.]

1. The act of finding any thing hidden.

Of all who since have us'd the open sea,
Than the bold English none more fame have won Beyond the year, and out of heaven's highway,
They make discoveries where they see no sun.
Dryden.

2. The act of revealing or disclosing any secret.

What, must I hold a candle to my shame?
They in themselves, good sooth, are too, too light.
Why 'tis an office of discovery, love,
And I should be obscur'd. Shak. Merch. of Venice.
Things that appeared amiable by the light of this world, appear of a different odious hue in the clear discoveries of the next. South.

It would be necessary to say something of the state to which the war hath reduced us; such a discovery ought to be made as late as possible.
Swift.

To DISCOUNSEL. v. a. [dis and counsel.]

To dissuade; to give contrary advice.
Obsolete.

But him that palmer from that vanity
With temperate advice discounsell'd. Spenser.

DISCOUNT. n. s. [dis and count.] The sum refunded in a bargain.

His whole intention was, to buy a certain quantity of copper money from Wood, at a large dis- count, and sell them as well as he could. Swift.

To DISCOUNT. v. a. [from the noun.]

To count back; to pay back again.

My father's, mother's, brother's death I pardon;
My prayers and penance shall discount for these,
And beg of heav'n to charge the bill on me.
Dryden.

The farmers, spitefully combin'd,
Force him to take his tithes in kind;
And Parvisol discounts arrears
By bills for taxes and repairs. Swift.

To DISCOURTENANCE. v. a. [dis and countenance.]

1. To discourage by cold treatment.

Unwilling they were to discourtenance any man who was willing to serve them. Clarendon.
The truly upright judge will always countenance right, and discourtenance wrong. Asterbury.

2. To abash; to put to shame.

Wisdom, in discourse with her,
Loses discourtenanc'd, and like folly shews. Milton.
He came, and with him Eve, more loth, tho' first
To offend; discourtenanc'd both and discompos'd.
Milton.

How would one look from his majestic brow,
Seated as on the top of virtue's hill,
Discount'nance her despis'd! Milton.

DISCOURTENANCE. n. s. [dis and coun- tenance.] Cold treatment; unfavourable aspect; unfriendly regard.

He thought a little discourtenance upon those persons would suppress that spirit. Clarendon.

All accidental misfortunes, how inevitable soever, were still attended with very apparent dis- countenance. Clarendon.

In expectation of the hour of judgment, he patiently bears all the difficulties of duty, and the discourtenance he meets with from a wicked and

The welfare of their souls requires a better judgment than their own, either to guide them in their duty, or to disentangle them from a temptation. South.

3. To disengage; to separate.

Neither can God himself be otherwise understood by us than as a mind free and disentangled from all corporeal mixtures. Stillingsfleet.

To DISENTERRE. v. a. [dis and enterrer, French.] To unbury; to take out of the grave.

Though the blindness of some fanatics have savaged on the bodies of the dead, and have been so injurious unto worms as to disenterre the bodies of the deceased, yet had they therein no design upon the soul. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To DISENTHRAL. v. a. [dis and enthrall.] To set free; to restore to liberty; to rescue from slavery.

But God my soul shall disenthral;
For I upon his name will call. Sandys.
If religion were false, bad men would set the utmost force of their reason on work to discover that falsity, and thereby disenthral themselves. South.

To DISENTHRONE. v. a. [dis and enthron.] To depose from sovereignty; to dethrone.

Either to disenthrone the king of heaven
We war, if war be best; or to regain
Our own right lost. Milton.

To DISENTRANCE. v. a. [dis and entrance.] To awaken from a trance, or deep sleep.

Ralpho, by this time disentranc'd,
Upon his bum himself advanc'd. Hudibras.

To DISESPOUSE. v. a. [dis and espouse.] To separate after faith plighted.

Such was the rage
Of Turnus, for Lavinia disespous'd. Milton.

DISESTEEM. n. f. [dis and esteem.] Slight regard; a disregard more moderate than contempt.

When any one, by miscarriage, falls into disesteem, he will fall under neglect and contempt. Locke.

To DISESTEEM. v. a. [from the noun.] To regard slightly; to consider with a slight degree of contempt.

Should Mars see't,
That horrid hurrier of men, or she that betters him,
Minerva, never so incens'd, they could not disesteem. Chapman.

But if this sacred gift you disesteem,
Then cruel plagues shall fall on Priam's state. Denham.

I would not be thought to disesteem or dissuade
the study of nature. Locke.

VOL. I.

DISESTIMATION. n. f. [dis and estimation, Lat.] Disrespect; disesteem. DiA.

DISFAVOUR. n. f. [dis and favour.]

1. Discountenance; unpropitious regard; unfavourable aspect; unfavourable circumstance.

2. A state of ungraciousness or unacceptableness; a state in which one is not favoured.

While free from sacrilege, he was at peace, as it were, with God and man; but after his sacrilege he was in disfavour with both. Spelman.

3. Want of beauty. DiA.

To DISFAVOUR. v. a. [from the noun.]

To discountenance; to withhold or withdraw kindness.

Might not those of higher rank, and nearer access to her majesty, receive her own commands, and be countenanced or disfavoured according as they obey? Swift.

DISFAVOURER. n. f. [from disfavour.]

Discountencer; not a favourer.

It was verily thought, that had it not been for four great disfavourers of that voyage, the enterprise had succeeded. Bacon.

DISFIGURATION. n. f. [from disfigure.]

1. The act of disfiguring.
2. The state of being disfigured.
3. Deformity.

To DISFIGURE. v. a. [dis and figure.]

To change any thing to a worse form; to deform; to mangle.

You are but as a form in wax
By him imprinted, and within his power
To leave the figure, or disfigure it. Shakespeare.

In this the antique and well-noted face
Of plain old form is much disfigured. Shakespeare.

Abject is their punishment,
Disfiguring not God's likeness, but their own,
Or, if his likeness, by themselves defac'd. Milton.

Uriel, on the Assyrian mount,
Saw him disfigur'd, more than could befall Spirit of happy fort. Milton.

A nose flatter, or a mouth wider, could have confisted, as well as the rest of his figure, with such a soul and such parts as made him, disfigured as he was, capable to be a dignitary in the church. Locke.

Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain
On Africk's sands, disfigur'd with their wounds,
To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia. Addison's Cato.

His long absence, and travels which had disfigured him, made him altogether unknown. Broome on Epic Poetry.

DISFIGUREMENT. n. f. [from disfigure.]

Defacement of beauty; change of a better form to a worse.

The disfigurement that travel or sickness has bestowed upon him, is not thought great by the lady of the isle. Suckling.

And they, so perfect is their misery,
Not once perceive their foul disfigurement. Milton's Comus.

To DISFOREST. v. a. [dis and forest.] To reduce land from the privileges of a forest to the state of common land.

To DISFRANCHISE. v. a. [dis and franchise.] To deprive of privileges or immunities.

DISFRANCHISEMENT. n. f. [from disfranchise.] The act of depriving of privileges. DiA.

To DISFURNISH. v. a. [dis and furnish.]

To deprive; to unfurnish; to strip.

My riches are these poor habilitments,
Of which, if you should here disfurnish me,
You take the sum and substance that I have. Shak.

He durst not disfurnish that country either of so great a commander, or of the wonted garrisons. Knolles's History.

To DISGARNISH. v. a. [dis and garnish.] DiA.

1. To strip of ornaments.
2. To take guns from a fortress.

To DISGLO'RIFY. v. a. [dis and glorify.] To deprive of glory; to treat with indignity.

So Dagon shall be magnified, and God,
Besides whom is no god, compar'd with idols,
Disglorified, blasphem'd, and had in scorn. Milton.

To DISGORGE. v. a. [dégorger, Fr. from gorge, the throat.]

1. To discharge by the mouth; to spew out; to vomit.

So, so, thou common dog, didst thou disgorge
Thy glutton bosom of the royal Richard?
And now thou wouldst eat thy dead vomit up. Shakespeare.

From the distant shore they loudly laugh,
To see his heaving breast disgorge the briny draught. Dryden.

2. To pour out with violence.

All th' embossed sores and headed evils,
That thou with licence of free foot hast caught,
Wouldst thou disgorge into the general world? Shakespeare.

The deep drawing barks do there disgorge
Their warlike fraughtage. Shakespeare.

They move along the banks
Of four infernal rivers, that disgorge
Into the burning lake their baleful streams. Milton.

Countries much annoyed with earthquakes, have volcanoes; and these are constantly all in flames, whenever any earthquake happens; they disgorging that fire which was the cause of the disaster. Derham.

DISGRACE. n. f. [disgrace, Fr.]

1. State of being out of favour.
2. State of ignominy; dishonour; state of shame.

Like a dull actor, now
I have forgot my part, and I am out
Even to a full disgrace. Shakespeare.

Poetry, however censured, is not fallen from the highest stage of honour to the lowest stair of disgrace. Peacocks.

3. Act of unkindness. Obsolete.

To such bondage he was for so many courses tied by her, whose disgraces to him were graced by her excellence. Sidney.

4. Cause of shame.

And is it not a foul disgrace,
To lose the boltsprit of thy face? Baynard.
And he whose affluence disdain'd a place,
Brib'd by a title, makes it a disgrace. Brown.

To DISGRACE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bring a reproach upon; to dishonour, as an agent.

We may not so in any one special kind admire her, that we disgrace her in any other; but let all her ways be according unto their place and degree adored. Hooker.

Men's passions will carry them far in misrepresenting an opinion which they have a mind to disgrace. Burnet.

2. To bring to shame, as a cause: as, his ignorance disgraced him.

3. To put out of favour: as, the minister was disgraced.

DISGRACEFUL. adj. [disgrace and full.] Shameful; ignominious; reproachful; procuring shame.

Masters must correct their servants with gentleness, prudence, and mercy; not with upbraiding and disgraceful language, but with such only as may express and reprove the fault, and amend the person. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

To retire behind their charlote, was as little disgraceful then, as it is now to alight from one's horse in a battle. Pope.

DISGRACEFULLY. adv. [from disgraceful.] In disgrace; with indignity; ignominiously.

The senate have cast you forth
Disgracefully, to be the common tale
Of the whole city. Ben Jonson's Catalina.

DISGRACEFULNESS. n. f. [from disgraceful.] Ignominy.

DISGRACER. n. f. [from disgrace.] One that exposes to shame; one that causes ignominy.

I have given good advice to those infamous disgracers of the sex and calling. Swift.

DISGRACIOUS. adj. [dis and gracious.] Unpleasing.

I do suspect I have done some offence,
That seems disgracious in the city's eye. Shakespeare.

TO DISGUISE. v. a. [deguiser, Fr. dis and guise.]

1. To conceal by an unusual dress.
How might we disguise him?
—Alas! I know not: there is no woman's gown big enough for him.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Disguis'd he came; but those his children dear
Their parent soon discern'd through his disguise. Milton.

2. To hide by a counterfeit appearance; to cloak by a false shew: as, he disguis'd his anger.

3. To disfigure; to change the form.
They saw the faces, which too well they knew,
Though then disguis'd in death, and smear'd all o'er
With filth obscene, and dropping putrid gore.
Dryden's Æneid.

More duteous at her cell,
Than at Circean call the herd disguis'd. Milton.
Ulysses wakes, not knowing the place where he was;
because Minerva made all things appear in a disguis'd view. Pope.

4. To deform by liquor: a low term.
I have just left the right worshipful, and his myrmidons, about a sneaker of five gallons: the whole magistracy was pretty well disguis'd before I gave them the slip. Spectator.

DISGUISE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A dress contrived to conceal the person that wears it.

They generally act in a disguise themselves, and therefore mistake all outward show and appearances for hypocrisy in others. Addison.

Since I in Arcite cannot Arcite find,
The world may search in vain with all their eyes,
But never penetrate through this disguise.
Dryden's Fables.

2. A false appearance; counterfeit show.

Hence guilty joys, distastes, surmises,
False oaths, false tears, deceits, disguises. Pope.

3. Disorder by drink.

You see we've burnt our cheeks; and mine own tongue Splits what it speaks: the wild disguise hath almost Antickt us. Shakespeare. Antony and Cleopatra.

DISGUISEMENT. n. f. [from disguise.]

Dress of concealment.
Under that disguisement I should find opportunity to reveal myself to the owner of my heart. Sidney.

The marquis thought best to dismask his beard,
and told him, that he was going covertly to take a secret view of the forwardness of his majesty's fleet:
this did somewhat handsomely heal the disguisement.
Wotton.

DISGUISER. n. f. [from disguise.]

1. One that puts on a disguise.

I hope he is grown more disengaged from his intentness on his own affairs, which is quite the reverse to you, unless you are a very dexterous disguiser. Swift.

2. One that conceals another by a disguise; one that disfigures.

Death's a great disguiser. Shakespeare.

DISGUST. n. f. [degout, French.]

1. Aversion of the palate from any thing.

2. Ill humour; malevolence; offence conceived.

The manner of doing is of more consequence than the thing done, and upon that depends the satisfaction or disgust wherewith it is received. Locke.

Thence dark disgust and hatred, winding wiles,
Coward deceit, and ruffian violence. Tobson.

TO DISGUST. v. a. [degouter, Fr. degusto, Latin.]

1. To raise aversion in the stomach; to displease.

2. To strike with dislike; to offend. It is variously constructed with at or with.
If a man were disgusted at marriage, he would never recommend it to his friend. Atterbury.

Those unenlarged souls are disgusted with the wonders which the microscope has discovered. Watts.

3. To produce aversion: with from.
What disgusts me from having to do with answer-jobbers, is, that they have no conscience. Swift.

DISGUSTFUL. adj. [disgust and full.] Nauseous; that which causes aversion.

I have finished the most disgustful task that ever
I undertook. Swift.

DISH. n. f. [disc, Sax. dysc, Erse; discus, Latin.]

1. A broad wide vessel, in which food is served up at the table.

Of these he murders one; he boils the flesh,
And lays the mangled morsels in a dish. Dryden.
I saw among the ruins an old heathen altar, with this particularity in it, that it is hollowed like a dish at one end; but it was not this end, on which the sacrifice was laid. Addison.

2. A deep hollow vessel for liquid food.

Who would rob a hermit of his weeds,
His few books, or his beads, or maple-dish;
Or do his grey hairs any violence? Milton.

A ladle for our silver dish
Is what I want, is what I wish. Prior.

3. The meat served in a dish; any particular kind of food.

I have here a dish of doves, that I would bestow upon your worship. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.

Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully;
Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods,
Not hew him as a carcass fit for hounds.
Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

The contract you pretend with that base wretch,
One bred of alms and foster'd with cold dishes,
With scraps o' th' court; it is no contract, none.
Shakespeare.

'Tis not the meat, but 'tis the appetite,
Makes eating a delight;
And if I like one dish

More than another, that a pheasant is. Suckling.

The earth would have been deprived of a most excellent and wholesome fare, and very many delicious dishes that we have the use and benefit of.
Woodward.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the gripping of an hungry belly, to those dishes which are a feast to others. Locke.

4. A kind of measure among the tanners.

They measure block-tin by the dish, which containeth a gallon. Carew.

TO DISH. v. a. [from the noun.] To serve in a dish; to send up to table.

For conspiracy,
I know not how it tastes, though it be dish'd
For me to try. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

DISH-CLOUT. n. f. [dish and clout.] The cloth with which the maids rub their dishes.

A dish-clout of Jaquenetta's he wears next his heart for a favour. Shakespeare. Love's Labour Lost.

Send them up to their masters with a dish-clout pinned at their tails. Swift's Directions to the Cook.

DISH-WASHER. n. f. [dish and washer.]

The name of a bird: mergus.

DISHABILLE. adj. [deshabillé, Fr.] Undressed; loosely or negligently dressed.

Queens are not to be too negligently dressed or dishabille. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

DISHABILLE. n. f. Undress; loose dress.

A woman, who would preserve a lover's respect to her person, will be careful of her appearance before him when in dishabille. Clarissa.

TO DISHABIT. v. a. [This word I have found only in Shakespeare.] To throw out of place; to drive from their habitation.

But for our approach those sleeping stones,
By the compulsion of their ordinance,
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had been dishabited, and wide havock made.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

DISHARMONY. n. f. [dis and harmony.] Contrariety to harmony.

TO DISHEARTEN. v. a. [dis and hearten.] To discourage; to deject; to terrify; to depress.

To dishearten with fearful sentences, as though salvation could hardly be hoped for, is not so consonant with Christian charity. Hooker.

Be not dishearten'd then, nor cloud those looks
That wont to be more cheerful and serene. Milton.

Yet neither thus dishearten'd nor dismay'd,
The time prepar'd I waited. Milton.

It is a consideration that might dishearten those who are engaged against the common adversaries, that they promise themselves as much from the folly of enemies, as from the power of their friends. Stillingfleet.

Men cannot say, that the greatness of an evil and danger is an encouragement to men to run upon it; and that the greatness of any good and happiness ought in reason to dishearten men from the pursuit of it. Tillotson.

A true christian fervour is more than the alliances of our potent friends, or even the fears of our disheartened enemies. Atterbury.

DISHERISON. n. f. [dis and herison.] The act of debarring from inheritance.

TO DISHERIT. v. a. [dis and inherit.] To cut off from hereditary succession; to debar from an inheritance.

He tries to restore to their rightful heritage such good old English words as have been long time out of use, almost disherited. Spenser.

Nor how the Dryads and the woodland train, Disherited, ran howling o'er the plain. Dryden's Fables.

TO DISHEVEL. v. a. [decheveler, French.] To spread the hair disorderly; to throw the hair of a woman negligently about her head. It is not often used but in the passive participle.

A gentle lad, all alone
With garments rent and hair dishevelled, Wringing her hands, and making piteous moan. Spenser.

After followed great numbers of women weeping with dishevelled hair, scratching their faces, and tearing themselves, after the manner of the country. Knollet.

A troop of Trojans mix'd with these appear,
And mourning matrons with dishevel'd hair. Dryden's Æneid.

The flames, involv'd in smoke
Of incense, from the sacred altar broke,
Caught her dishevel'd hair and rich attire. Dryden's Æneid.

You

You this morn beheld his ardent eyes,
Saw his arm lock'd in her disbevel'd hair. Smith.
DISHING. adj. [from disb.] Concave: a cant term among artificers.

For the form of the wheels, some make them more disbing, as they call it, than others; that is, more concave, by setting off the spokes and fellows more outwards. Mortimer.

DISHONEST. adj. [dis and honest.]

1. Void of probity; void of faith; faithless; wicked; fraudulent.

Justice then was neither blind to discern, nor lame to execute. It was not subject to be imposed upon by a deluded fancy, nor yet to be bribed by a glosing appetite, for an utile or jucundum to turn the balance to a false or dishonest sentence.

He lays it down as a principle, that right and wrong, honest and dishonest, are defined only by laws, and not by nature. Locke.

2. Unchaste; lewd.

To-morrow will we be married.—I do desire it with all my heart; and I hope it is no dishonest desire, to desire to be a woman of the world.

Shakespeare's As you like it.

3. Disgraced; dishonoured.

Dishonest with lopp'd arms the youth appears,
Spoil'd of his nose, and shorten'd of his ears.

Dryden.

4. Disgraceful; ignominious. These two senses are scarcely English, being borrowed from the Latin idiom.

She saw her sons with purple death expire,
Her sacred domes involv'd in rolling fire;
A dreadful series of intestine wars,
Inglorious triumphs, and dishonest scars. Pope.

DISHONESTLY. adv. [from dishonest.]

1. Without faith; without probity; faith-lessly; wickedly.

I protest he had the chain of me,
Tho' most dishonestly he doth deny it. Shakespeare.

2. Lewdly; wantonly; unchastely.

A wise daughter shall bring an inheritance to her husband; but she that liveth dishonestly is her father's heaviness. Ecc. xxii. 4.

DISHONESTY. n. f. [from dishonest.]

1. Want of probity; faithlessness; violation of trust.

Their fortune depends upon their credit, and a stain of open public dishonesty must be to their disadvantage. Swift.

2. Unchastity; incontinence; lewdness.

Mrs. Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband! I suspect without cause, mistress, do I?—Heaven be my witness you do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty. Shakespeare.

DISHONOUR. n. f. [dis and honour.]

1. Reproach; disgrace; ignominy.

Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,
But mine own fancies. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
He was pleased to own Lazarus even in the dis- honours of the grave, and vouchsafed him, in that despicable condition, the glorious title of his friend.

Boyle's Scraphick Love.

Take him for your husband and your lord;
'Tis no dishonour to coffer your grace
On one descended from a royal race. Dryd. Fables.

2. Reproach uttered; censure; report of infamy.

So good, that no tongue could ever
Pronounce dishonour of her; by my life
She never knew harm doing. Shakefp. Henry VIII

TO DISHONOUR. v. a. [dis and honour.]

1. To disgrace; to bring shame upon; to blast with infamy.

It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour.

Shakespeare.

This no more dishonours you at all,
Than to take in a town with gentle words,
Which else would put you to your fortune.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

A woman that honoureth her husband, shall be judged wise of all: but she that dishonoureth him in her pride, shall be counted ungodly of all.

Ecc. xvi. 26.

We are not so much to strain ourselves to make those virtues appear in us which really we have not, as to avoid those imperfections which may dishonour us.

Dryden's Dufresney.

2. To violate chastity.

3. To treat with indignity.

One glimpse of glory to my issue give,
Grac'd for the little time he has to live:
Dishonour'd by the king of men he stands;
His rightful prize is ravish'd from his hands.

Dryden's Iliad.

DISHONOURABLE. adj. [from dishonour.]

1. Shameful; reproachful; ignominious.

He did dishonourable find

Those articles which did our state decrease. Dan.

2. Being in a state of neglect or disesteem.

He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in riches? and he that is dishonourable in riches, how much more in poverty? Ecc. x. 31.

DISHONOURER. n. f. [from dishonour.]

1. One that treats another with indignity.

Preaching how meritorious with the gods

It would be, to ensnare an irreligious

Dishonourer of Dagon.

Milton.

2. A violator of chastity.

TO DISHONOUR. v. a. [dis and honour.] To strip of horns.

We'll dishonour the spirit,
And mock him home to Windsor. Shakespeare.

DISHUMOUR. n. f. [dis and humour.]

Peevishness; ill humour; uneasy state of mind.

Speaking impatiently to servants, or any thing that betrays inattention or dishumour, are also criminal. Spectator.

DISIMPROVEMENT. n. f. [dis and improvement.] Reduction from a better to a worse state; the contrary to melioration; the contrary to improvement.

The final issue of the matter would be, an utter neglect and disimprovement of the earth. Norris.

I cannot see how this kingdom is at any height of improvement, while four parts in five of the plantations, for thirty years past, have been real disimprovements. Swift.

TO DISINCARCERATE. v. a. [dis and in-carcerate.] To set at liberty; to free from prison.

The arsenical bodies being now coagulated, and kindled into flaming atoms, require dry and warm air, to open the earth for to disincarcerate the same venene bodies. Harvey.

DISINCLINATION. n. f. [from disincline.]

Want of affection; slight; dislike; ill will not heightened to aversion.

Disappointment gave him a disinclination to the fair sex, for whom he does not express all the respect possible. Arbutnot and Pope.

TO DISINCLINE. v. a. [dis and incline.]

To produce dislike to; to make disaffected; to alienate affection from.

They were careful to keep up the fears and apprehensions in the people of dangers and designs, and to disincline them from any reverence or affection to the queen, whom they begun every day more implacably to hate, and consequently to dis-oblige. Clarendon.

DISINGENUITY. n. f. [from disingenu- ous.] Meanness of artifice; unfairness.

They contract a habit of ill-nature and disinge- nuity necessary to their affairs, and the temper of those upon whom they are to work. Clarendon.

DISINGENUOUS. adj. [dis and ingenuous.]

Unfair; meanly artful; vitiously subtle; sly; cunning; illiberal; unbecoming a gentleman; crafty.

'Tis disingenuous to accuse our age
Of idleness, who all our powers engage
In the same studies, the same courts to hold,
Nor think our reason for new arts too old. Denb.

It was a disingenuous way of proceeding, to oppose a judgment of charity concerning their church, to a judgment of reason concerning the nature of actions. Stillingfleet.

There cannot be any thing so disingenuous and misbecoming any rational creature, as not to yield to plain reason, and the conviction of clear arguments. Locke.

DISINGENUOUSLY. adv. [from disinge- nuous.] In a disingenuous manner.

DISINGENUOUSNESS. n. f. [from disin- genuous.] Mean subtilty; unfairness;
low craft.

I might press them with the unreasonableness, the disingenuousness of embracing a profession to which their own hearts have an inward reluctance.

Government of the Tongue.

DISINHERISON. n. f. [dis and inherit.]

1. The act of cutting off from any hereditary succession; the act of disinheriting.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, inherent in his person, he knew it was a title condemned by parliament, and generally prejudged in the common opinion of the realm, that it tended directly to the disinherison of the line of York. Bacon's Henry VII.

The chief minister of the revenue was obliged to prevent, and even oppose, such disinherison. Clarend.

2. The state of being cut off from an hereditary right.

In respect of the effects and evil consequences, the adultery of the woman is worse, as bringing bastardy into a family, and disinherisons or great injuries to the lawful children. Taylor.

TO DISINHERIT. v. a. [dis and inherit.]

To cut off from an hereditary right; to deprive of an inheritance.

Is it then just with us to disinherit
The unborn nephews for the father's fault? Davies.

Unmuffle, ye faint stars; and thou, fair moon,
Stoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud,
And disinherit chaos that reigns here
In double night of darkness, and of slander. Milt.

Posterity stands curs'd! fair patrimony,
That I must leave ye, sons! O were I able
To waste it all myself, and leave ye none;
So disinherited, how would ye bleis
Me, now your turs! Milton.

Of how fair a portion Adam disinherited his whole posterity by one single prevarication! South.

TO DISINTER. v. a. [from dis and inter.]

To unbury; to take as out of the grave,

The philosopher, the saint, or the hero, the wise, the good, or the great man, very often lie hid and concealed in a plebeian, which a proper education might have disinterred. Addison.

DISINTERESTED. n. f. [dis, and interesse,

French. It is written disinterested by those who derive it immediately from interest, and I think more properly.]
Without regard to private advantage; not biased by particular views; impartial.

Not that tradition's parts are useless here,
When general, old, disinterested, and clear. Dryden.

DISINTERESTMENT. n. f. [dis, and in-teressement, French.] Disregard to private advantage; disinterest; disinterestedness. This word, like charges in the same sentence, is merely Gallick.

He has managed some of the charges of the kingdom.

kingdom with known ability, and laid them down with entire disinterestment. Prior's Postscript.

DISINTEREST. n. f. [dis and interest.]

1. What is contrary to one's wish or prosperity; that which any one is concerned to prevent.

They judge it the great disinterest to Rome.

Glanville.

2. Indifference to profit; superiority to regards of private advantage.

DISINTERESTED. adj. [from disinterest.]

1. Superior to regard of private advantage; not influenced by private profit.

As disinterested as you appear to the world, no man is more in the power of that prevailing favourite passion than yourself. Swift.

2. Without any concern in an affair; without fear or hope.

DISINTERESTEDLY. adv. [from disinterested.] In a disinterested manner.

DISINTERESTEDNESS. n. f. [from disinterested.] Contempt of private interest; neglect of personal profit.

These expressions of selfishness and disinterestedness have been used in a very loose and indeterminate manner. Brown.

To DISINTRICATE. v. a. [dis and intricate.] To disentangle. Dict.

To DISINVIITE. v. a. [dis and invite.] To retract an invitation. Dict.

To DISJOIN. v. a. [dejoindre, Fr. dis and join.] To separate; to part from each other; to disunite; to sunder.

Never shall my harp thy praise

Forget, nor from thy father's praise disjoin. Milton.

Left different degree

Disjoin us, and I then too late renounce

Deity for thee, when fate will not permit. Milton.

Happier for me, that all our hours assign'd

Together we had liv'd; ev'n not in depth disjoin'd. Dryden.

Never let us lay down our arms against France, till we have utterly disjoined her from the Spanish monarchy. Addison.

To DISJOINT. v. a. [dis and joint.]

1. To put out of joint.

Be all their ligaments at once unbound,

And their disjointed bones to powder ground. Sandys.

Yet what could swords or poison, racks or flame,

But mangle and disjoint the brittle frame?

More fatal Henry's words; they murder'd Emma's fame. Prior.

2. To break at junctures; to separate at the part where there is a cement.

Mould'ring arches, and disjointed columns. Irene.

3. To break in pieces; to dilaniate.

Rotation must disperse in air

All things which on the rapid orb appear;

And if no power that motion should controul,

It must disjoint and dissipate the whole. Blackmore.

Should a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a palace or a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, he would be able to form but a very lame and dark idea of either of those excellent and useful inventions. Watts.

4. To carve a fowl.

5. To make incoherent; to break the relation between the parts.

The constancy of your wit was not wont to bring forth such disjointed speeches. Sidney.

But now her grief has wrought her into frenzy;

The images her troubled fancy forms

Are incoherent, wild; her words disjointed. Smith.

To DISJOINT. v. n. To fall in pieces.

Let both worlds disjoint, and all things suffer,

Ere we will eat our meal in fear. Shak. Macbeth.

DISJOINT. participle. [from the verb.]

Separated; divided. We now write disjointed.

Young Fortinbras,

Holding a weak supposal of our worth,

Thinks by our late dear brother's death

Our state to be disjoint and out of frame.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

DISJUDICATION. n. f. [dijudicatio, Lat.]

Judgment; determination: perhaps only mistaken for dijudication.

The disposition of the organ is of great importance in the disjudications we make of colours.

Boyle on Colours.

DISJUNCT. adj. [disjunctus, Lat.] Disjoined; separate.

DISJUNCTION. n. f. [from disjunctio, Lat.] Disunion; separation; parting.

You may

Enjoy your mistress now, from whom you see

There's no disjunction to be made, but by

Your ruin. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

There is a great analogy between the body natural and politic, in which the ecclesiastical or spiritual part justly supplies the part of the soul; and the violent separation of this from the other, does as certainly infer death and dissolution, as the disjunction of the body and the soul in the natural.

South.

DISJUNCTIVE. adj. [disjunctivus, Lat.]

1. Incapable of union.

Such principles, whose atoms are of that disjunctive nature, as not to be united in a sufficient number to make a visible mass. Grew.

2. That which marks separation or opposition: as, I love him, or fear him.

There are such words as disjunctive conjunctions.

Watts.

3. [In logick.] A disjunctive proposition is when the parts are opposed to one another by disjunctive particles: as, It is either day or night; The weather is either shiny or rainy; Quantity is either length, breadth, or depth.

The truth of disjunctives depends on the necessary and immediate opposition of the parts, therefore only the last of these examples is true: but the two first are not strictly true; because twilight is a medium between day and night; and dry cloudy weather is a medium between shining and raining. Watts's Logick.

A disjunctive syllogism is when the major proposition is disjunctive: as, the earth moves in a circle, or an ellipsis; but it does not move in a circle, therefore it moves in an ellipsis. Watts's Logick.

DISJUNCTIVELY. adv. [from disjunctive.] Distinctly; separately.

What he observes of the numbers disjunctively and apart, reason suggests to be applicable to the whole body united. Causes of the Decay of Piety.

DISK. n. f. [discus, Lat.]

1. The face of the sun, or any planet, as it appears to the eye.

The disk of Phœbus, when he climbs on high,

Appears at first but as a bloodshot eye. Dryden.

It is to be considered, that the rays, which are equally refrangible, do fall upon a circle answering to the sun's disk. Newton.

Mercury's disk

Can scarce be caught by philosophic eye,

Lost in the near effulgence. Thomson.

2. A broad piece of iron thrown in the ancient sports; a quoit.

The crystal of the eye, which in a fish is a ball, in any land animal is a disk or bowl; being hereby fitted for the clearer sight of the object. Grew.

In areas varied with mosaic art,

Some whirl the disk, and some the jav'lin dart. Pope.

DISKINDNESS. n. f. [dis and kindness.]

1. Want of kindness; want of affection; want of benevolence.

2. Ill turn; injury; act of malignity; detriment.

This discourse is so far from doing any diskindness to the cause, that it does it a real service.

Woodward.

DISLIKE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Disinclination; absence of affection; the contrary to fondness.

He then them took, and tempering goodly well

Their contrary dislikes with loved means,

Did place them all in order, and compel

To keep themselves within their sundry reigns,

Together link'd with adamant chains. Spenser.

Your dislikes, to whom I would be pleasing,

Do cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow.

Shakespeare.

God's grace, that principle of his new birth, gives him continual dislike to sin.

Hammond's Pract. Catechism.

Our likings or dislikes are founded rather upon humour and fancy, than upon reason. L'Estrange.

Sorrow would have been as silent as thought, as severe as philosophy. It would have rested in inward senses, tacit dislikes. South.

The jealous man is not angry if you dislike another; but if you find those faults which are in his own character, you discover not only your dislike of another, but of himself. Addison.

2. Discord; dissension; disagreement.

This sense is not now in use.

This said Aletes, and a murmur rose

That shew'd dislike among the christian peers.

Fairfax.

To DISLIKE. v. a. [dis and like.] To disapprove; to regard without affection; to regard with ill will or disgust.

What most he should dislike, seems pleasant to him;

What like, offensive. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Ye dislike, and so undo

The players, and disgrace the poet too. Denham.

Whosoever dislikes the digressions, or grows weary of them, may throw them away. Temple.

DISLIKEFUL. adj. [dislike and full.] Disaffected; malign: not in use.

I think it best, by an union of manners, and conformity of minds, to bring them to be one people, and to put away the dislikeful conceit of the one and the other. Spenser's Ireland.

To DISLIKEN. v. a. [dis and liken.] To make unlike. Unusual.

Muffle your face,

Dissemble you; and, as you can, disliken

The truth of your own seeming. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

DISLIKENESS. n. f. [dis and likeness.] Dissimilitude; not resemblance; unlikeness.

That which is not designed to represent any thing but itself, can never be capable of a wrong representation, nor mislead us from the true apprehension of any thing by its dislikeness to it; and such, excepting those of substances, are all our own complex ideas. Locke.

DISLIKER. n. f. [from dislike.] A disapprover; one that is not pleased.

There is a point, which whoever can touch, will never fail of pleasing a majority, so great that the dislikers will be forced to fall in with the herd.

Swift.

To DISLIMB. v. a. [dis and limb.] To dilaniate; to tear limb from limb. Dict.

To DISLIMN. v. a. [dis and limn.] To unpaint; to strike out of a picture.

That which is now a horse, even with a thought

The rack dislimns, and makes it indistinct

As water is in water. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

Te Dislo-

TO DISLOCATE. v. a. [dis, and locus, Lat.]

1. To put out of the proper place.

After some time the strata on all sides of the globe were dislocated, and their situation varied, being elevated in some places, and depressed in others. Woodward.

2. To put out of joint; to disjoint.

Were't my fitness

To let these hands obey my boiling blood,
They're apt enough to dislocate and tear
Thy flesh and bones. Shakespeare's King Lear.

DISLOCATION. n. f. [from dislocate.]

1. The act of shifting the places of things.

2. The state of being displaced.

The posture of rocks, often leaning or prostrate, shews that they had some dislocation from their natural site. Burnet.

3. A luxation; a violent pressure of a bone out of the socket, or correspondent part; a joint put out.

It might go awry either within or without the upper, as often as it is forcibly pulled to it, and so cause a dislocation, or a strain. Grew's Museum.

TO DISLODGE. v. a. [dis and lodge.]

1. To remove from a place.

The shell-fish which are resident in the depths live and die there, and are never dislodged or removed by storms, nor cast upon the shores; which the littorales usually are. Woodward.

2. To remove from an habitation.

These senses lost, behold a new defeat,
The soul dislodging from another seat. Dryden's Juvenal.

3. To drive an enemy from a station.

My sword can perfect what it has begun,
And from your walls dislodge that haughty son. Dryden.

4. To remove an army to other quarters.

The ladies have prevail'd;
The Volscians are dislodg'd, and Marcus gone. Shakespeare.

TO DISLODGE. v. n. To go away to another place.

Soon as midnight brought on the dusky hour,
Friendliest to sleep, and silence, he resolv'd
With all his legions to dislodge. Milton.

DISLOYAL. adj. [desloyal, French; dis and loyal.]

1. Not true to allegiance; faithless; false to a sovereign; disobedient.

Foul distrust, and breach Disloyal; on the part of man, revolt
And disobedience. Milton.

2. Dishonest; perfidious. Obsolete.

Such things, in a false disloyal knave,
Are tricks of custom; but, in a man that's just,
They're cold delations working from the heart,
That passion cannot rule. Shakespeare's Othello.

3. Not true to the marriage bed.

The lady is disloyal.
—Disloyal! The word is too good to paint out her wickedness. Shakespeare.

Disloyal town!
Speak, didst not thou
Forsoke thy faith, and break the nuptial vow? Dryden.

4. False in love; not constant. The three latter senses are now obsolete.

DISLOYALLY. adv. [from disloyal.] Not faithfully; treacherously; disobediently.

DISLOYALTY. n. f. [from disloyal.]

1. Want of fidelity to the sovereign.

Let the truth of that religion I profess be represented to judgment, not in the disguises of levity, schism, heresy, novelty, and disloyalty. K. Charles.

2. Want of fidelity in love. A sense now obsolete.

There shall appear such seeming truths of Hero's disloyalty, that jealousy shall be called assurance. Shakespeare.

DISMAL. adj. [dies malus, Latin, an evil day.] Sorrowful; dire; horrid; melancholy; uncomfortable; unhappy; dark.

The thane of Cawder gan a dismal conflict. Shak.
He hears

On all sides from innumerable tongues
A dismal universal hiss. Milton.

Nor yet in horrid shade or dismal den,
Nor nocent yet; but on the grassy herb Fearless, unfeared, he slept. Milton.

The dismal situation waste and wild,
A dungeon horrible! Milton.

Such a variety of dismal accidents must have broken the spirits of any man. Clarendon.

On the one hand set the most glittering temptations to discord, and on the other view the dismal effects of it. D. ay of Piety.

Dreadful gleams, Dismal screams. Pope.

DISMALLY. adv. [from dismal.] Horribly; sorrowfully; uncomfortably.

DISMALNESS. n. f. [from dismal.] Horror; sorrow.

TO DISMANTLE. v. a. [dis and mantle.]

1. To deprive of a dress; to strip; to denude.

He that makes his prince despised and undervalued, and beats him out of his subjects hearts, may easily strip him of his other garbisons, having already dispossessed him of his strongest, by dismantling him of his honour, and seizing his reputation. South.

2. To loose; to throw off a dress; to throw open.

This is most strange!

That she, who ev'n but now was your best object,
Dearest and best, should in this trice of time
Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
So many folds of favour. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. To strip a town of its outworks.

It is not sufficient to possess our own fort, without the dismantling and demolishing of our enemies. Hakewill.

4. To break down any thing external.

His eyeballs, rooted out, are thrown to ground;
His nose dismantled in his mouth is found;
His jaws, cheeks, front, one undistinguish'd wound. Dryden.

TO DISMASK. v. a. [dis and mask.] To divest of a mask; to uncover from concealment.

Fair ladies mask'd are roses in the bud,
Or angels veil'd in clouds; are roses blown,
Dismask'd, their damask sweet-commixture shewn. Shakespeare.

The marquis thought best to dismask his beard;
and told him that he was going covertly. Wotton.

TO DISMAY. v. a. [desmayar, Spanish.]

To terrify; to discourage; to affright; to depress; to deject.

Their mighty strokes their habergeons dismay'd. Spenser.

Enemies would not be so troublesome to the western coasts, nor that country itself would be so often dismayed with alarms as they have of late years been. Raleigh's Essays.

He will not fail thee; fear not, neither be dismayed. Deut.

Nothing can make him remiss in the practice of his duty; no prospect of interest can allure him, no fear of danger dismay him. Atterbury.

DISMAY. n. f. [desmayo, Spanish.] Fall of courage; terror felt; desertion of mind; fear impressed.

All fate mute,

Pondering the danger with deep thoughts; and each
In other's countenance read his own dismay. Milt.

This then, not minded in dismay, yet now
Assures me that the bitterness of death Is past. Milton.

DISMAYEDNESS. n. f. [from dismay.]

Dejection of courage; dispiritedness.

The valiantest feels inward dismayedness, and yet the fearfulest is ashamed fully to shew it. Sidney.

DISME. n. f. [French.] A tenth; the tenth part; tythe.

Since the first sword was drawn about this question,
Ev'ry tithe soul 'mongst many thousand dismes, Hath been as dear as Helen.

Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.

The pope began to exercise his new rapines by a compliance with king Edward, in granting him two years disme from the clergy. Ayliffe's Parergon.

TO DISMEMBER. v. a. [dis and member.]

To divide member from member; to dilacerate; to cut in pieces.

I am with both, each army hath a hand;
And in their rage, I having hold of both,
They whirl asunder, and dismember me. Shakespeare.
O, that we then could come by Caesar's spirit,
And not dismember Caesar! but, alas!

Caesar must bleed for it. Shakespeare.

A state can never arrive to its period in a more deplorable crisis, than when some prince lies hovering, like a vulture, to devour or dismember its dying carcass. Swift.

Fowls obscene dismember'd his remains,
And dogs had torn him on the naked plains. Pope's Odyssey.

Those who contemplate only the fragments or pieces of science dispersed in short unconnected discourses, can never survey an entire body of truth, but must always view it as deformed and dismembered. Watts.

TO DISMISS. v. a. [dimissus, Latin.]

1. To send away.

We commit thee thither,

Until his army be dismiss'd from him. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

He dismissed the assembly. Acts, xix. 41.

If our young Iulus be no more,
Dismiss our navy from your friendly shore. Dryden's Virgil.

3. To discard; to divest of an office.

DISMISSION. n. f. [from dimissio, Lat.]

1. Dispatch; act of sending away.

So pois'd, so gently she descends from high,
It seems a soft dismissal from the sky. Dryden.

2. An honourable discharge from any office or place.

Not only thou degrad'st them, or remit'st
To life obscure, which were a fair dismissal;
But throw'st them lower than thou didst exalt them high. Milton's Agonistes.

3. Deprivation; obligation to leave any post or place.

You must not stay here longer; your dismissal
Is come from Caesar. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleop.

TO DISMORTGAGE. v. a. [dis and mortgage.] To redeem from mortgage.

He dismortgaged the crown demesnes, and left behind a mass of gold. Howell's Vocal Forest.

TO DISMOUNT. v. a. [demonter, French.]

1. To throw off an horse.

From this flying steed unrein'd, as once
Bellerophon, though from a lower clime,
Dismounted, on th' Aleian field I fall. Milton.

2. To throw from any elevation or place of honour.

3. To throw a cannon from its carriage.

The Turks artillery, planted against that tower, was by the Christian cannoners dismounted with shot from the tower, and many of the gunners slain. Kneller.

TO DISMOUNT. v. n.

1. To alight from an horse.

When he came within sight of that prodigious army at Agincourt, he ordered all his cavalry dismount, and implore upon their knees a blessing. Addison's Freeholder

To DISNATURALIZE. v. a. [dis and naturalize.] To alienate; to make alien; to deprive of the privileges of birth.

DISNATURED. adj. [dis and nature.] Unnatural; wanting natural tenderness; devoid of natural affection. Unusual.

If she must teem,
Create her child of spleen, that it may live,
And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

DISOBEDIENCE. n. f. [dis and obedience.]

1. Violation of lawful command or prohibition; breach of duty due to superiors.

Th' offence is holy that she hath committed;
And this deceit loses the name of craft,
Of disobedience, or undutious title. Shakespeare.
Of man's first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree, sing heav'nly muse.

Milton.

Murder, adultery, or disobedience to parents, have a general notion antecedently to laws.

Stillingfleet.

This is not disobedience, but rebellion; 'tis disclaiming the sovereignty of Christ, and renouncing all allegiance to his authority. Rogers.

2. Incompliance.

If planetary orbs the sun obey,
Why should the moon disown his sovereign sway;
Why in a whirling eddy of her own
Around the globe terrestrial should she run?
This disobedience of the moon will prove
The sun's bright orb does not the planets move.

Blackmore.

DISOBEDIENT. adj. [dis and obedient.] Not observant of lawful authority; guilty of the breach of lawful commands, or prohibition.

The man of God was disobedient unto the word of the Lord. 1 Kings, xiii. 26.

To DISOBEY. v. a. [dis and obey.] To break commands, or transgress prohibitions.

She absolutely badg him, and he durst not know how to disobey. Sidney.

He's loth to disobey the god's command,
Nor willing to forsake this pleasant land. Denham.

DISOBLIGATION. n. f. [dis and obligation.] Offence; cause of disgust.

If he receded from what he had promised, it would be such a disobligation to the prince that he would never forget it. Clarendon.

There can be no malice, and consequently no crime or disobligation. L'Estrange.

To DISOBLIGE. v. a. [dis and oblige.] To offend; to disgust; to give offence to. A term by which offence is tenderly expressed.

Ashley had been removed from that charge, and was thereby so much disobliged, that he quitted the king's party. Clarendon.

Those, though in highest place, who slight and disoblige their friends, shall infallibly come to know the value of them, by having none when they shall most need them. South.

It is in the power of more particular persons in this kingdom, than in any other, to distress the government, when they are disobliged.

Addison's Freeholder.

My plan has given offence to some gentlemen, whom it would not be very safe to disoblige.

Addison's Guardian.

We love and esteem our clergy, and are apt to lay some weight upon their opinion, and would not willingly disoblige them.

Swift concerning the Sacramental Test.

If a woman suffers her lover to see she is loth to disoblige him, let her beware of an encroacher.

Clarissa.

DISOBLIGING. participial adj. [from disoblige.] Disgusting; unpleasing; offensive.

Peremptoriness can best no form of understanding: it renders wise men disobliging and troublesome, and fools ridiculous and contemptible.

Government of the Tongue.

DISOBLIGINGLY. adv. [from disobliging.] In a disgusting or offensive manner; without attention to please.

DISOBLIGINGNESS. n. f. [from disobliging.] Offensiveness; readiness to disgust.

DISORDER. n. f. [dis and order; desordre,
French.]

1. Want of regular disposition; irregularity; confusion; immethodical distribution.

When I read an author of genius without method, I fancy myself in a wood that abounds with many noble objects, rising among one another in the greatest confusion and disorder. Spectator.

2. Tumult; disturbance; bustle.

A greater favour this disorder brought Unto her servants, than their awful thought Durst entertain, when thus compell'd they prest
The yielding marble of her snowy breast. Waller.

3. Neglect of rule; irregularity.

From vulgar bounds with brave disorder part,
And snatch a grace beyond the reach of art. Pope.

4. Breach of laws; violation of standing institution.

There reigned in all men blood, manslaughter, disquieting of good men, forgetfulness of good turns, and disorder in marriages. Wisd. xiv. 26.

5. Breach of that regularity in the animal economy which causes health; sickness; distemper. It is used commonly for a slight disease.

Pleasure and pain are only different constitutions of the mind, sometimes occasioned by dis- order in the body, or sometimes by thoughts in the mind. Locke.

6. Discomposure of mind; turbulence of passions.

To DISORDER. v. a. [dis and order.]

1. To throw into confusion; to confound; to put out of method; to disturb; to ruffle; to confuse.

as, my dinner disorders me.

3. To discompose; to disturb the mind.

4. To turn out of holy orders; to depose;
to strip of ecclesiastical vestments.

Let him be stript, and disordered; I would fain see him walk in quere, that the world may bo-hold the inside of a friar. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

DISORDERED. adj. [from disorder.] Disorderly; irregular; vitious; loose; unrestrained in behaviour; debauched.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires,
Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn. Shakespeare's King Lear.

x

DISORDEREDNESS. n. f. [from disorder- ed.] Irregularity; want of order; confusion.

By that disorderedness of the soldiers, a great advantage was offered unto the enemy. Kneller.

DISORDERLY. adj. [from disorder.]

1. Confused; immethodical; without proper distribution.

Those obsolete laws of Henry I. were but dis- orderly, confused, and general things; rather cases and shells of administration than institutions.

Hale.

2. Irregular; tumultuous.

They thought it the extremest of evils to put themselves at the mercy of those hungry and dis- orderly people. Bacon.

His thoughts, which are the pictures and results of passions, are generally such as naturally arise from those disorderly motions of our spirits.

Dryden.

A disorderly multitude contending with the body of the legislature, is like a man in a fit under the conduct of one in the fulness of his health and strength. Addison.

3. Lawless; contrary to law; inordinate;
contrary to the rules of life; vitious.

He reproved them for their disorderly assemblies against the peaceable people of the realms.

Hayward.

DISORDERLY. adv. [from disorder.]

Thou durst not thus disparage glorious arms,
Which greatest heroes have in battle worn,
Their ornament and safety. Milton's Agonistes.

They will defy
That which they love most tenderly;
Quarrel with mine's eyes, and disparage
Their best and dearest friend, plum-porridge, Hadibras.

5. To bring reproach upon; to be the cause of disgrace.

How shall frail pen, with fear disparaged,
Conceive such sovereign glory and great bountied?
Spenser.

His religion sat easily, naturally, and gracefully upon him, without any of those forbidding appearances which sometimes disparage the actions of men sincerely pious. Atterbury.

DISPARAGEMENT. n. s. [from disparage.]

1. Injurious union or comparison with something of inferior excellence.

They take it for a disparagement to fort themselves with any other than the enemies of the publick peace. L'Estrange.

2. [In law.] Matching an heir in marriage under his or her degree, or against decency.

You wrongfully do require Mopsa to so great a disparagement, as to wed her father's servant.
Sidney.

She was much affectionate to her own kindred, which did stir great envy in the lords of the king's side, who counted her blood a disparagement to be mingled with the king's. Bacon.

3. Reproach; disgrace; indignity.

Gentle knight,
That doth against the dead his hand uprear,
His honour stains with rancour and despight,
And great disparagement makes to his former might. Spenser.

In a commonwealth, much disparagement is occasioned, when able spirits, attracted by a familiarity, are inflamed with faction. Wolton.

'Tis no disparagement to philosophy, that it connot cease us. Glanville.

Reason is a weak, diminutive light, compared to revelation; but it ought to be no disparagement to a star that it is not a sun. South.

Rely upon your beauty: 'twere a disparagement
of that to talk of conditions, when you are certain of making your own terms.
Southern's Innocent Adultery.

4. It has to before the person or thing disparaged.

Then to our age, when not to pleasure bent,
This seems an honour, not disparagement. Denham.

The play was never intended for the stage; nor, without disparagement to the author, could have succeeded. Dryden.

DISPARAGER. n. s. [from disparage.]

One that disgraces; one that treats with indignity; one that contrives an unequal match.

DISPARATES. n. s. [disparata, Latin.]

Things so unlike that they cannot be compared with each other.

DISPARITY. n. s. [from dispar, Latin.]

1. Inequality; difference in degree either of rank or excellence.

Between Elihu and the rest of Job's familiars,
the greatest disparity was but in years. Hooker.

Among unequals, what society
Can fort, what harmony or true delight?
Which must be mutual, in proportion due
Giv'n and receiv'd; but in disparity,
The one intense, the other still remiss,
Cannot well suit with either, but soon prove Tedious alike. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There was as great a disparity between the practical dictates of the understanding, then and now, as there is between empire and advice, counsel and command. South.

Men ought not to associate and join themselves together in the same office, under a disparity of condition. Ayliffe's Paragon.

Some members must preside, and others obey;
and a disparity in the outward condition is necessary to keep several orders in mutual dependence on each other. Rogers.

2. Dissimilitude; unlikeness.

TO DISPA'RK. v. a. [dis and park.]

1. To throw open a park.

partir, French; dispartior, Latin.] To divide in two; to separate; to break;

to burst; to rive.

The gate nor wood, nor of enduring brass,
But of more worthy substance framed was;
Doubly disparted, it did lock and close,
That when it locked none might through it pass.
Spenser.

On either side
Disparted chaos overbuilt exclaim'd;
And with rebounding forge the bars assail'd,
That scorn'd his indignation. Milton.

The rest to several places,
Disparted, and between spun out the air. Milton.
Disparted Britain mourn'd their doubtful sway,
And dreaded both, when neither would obey. Prior.

The pilgrim oft
At dead of night, mid his orison, hears,
Aghast, the voice of time disparting towers. Dier.

DISPASSION. n. s. [dis and passion.] Freedom from mental perturbation; exemption from passion.

What is called by the Stoicks apathy, or dis- passion, is called by the Scepticks indisturbance, by the Molinists quietism, by common men peace of conscience. Temple.

DISPASSIONATE. adj. [from dis and pas- sionate.] Cool; calm; impartial; moderate; temperate: it was sometimes written dispassionated.

You have, as all dispassionated men may judge, fulfilled the poet's definition of madness. Dr. Maine.

Wife and dispassionate men thought he had been proceeded with very justly. Clarendon.

TO DISPE'L. v. a. [dispellere, Latin.] To drive by scattering; to dissipate.

If the night
Have gather'd aught of evil, or conceal'd,
Disperse it, as now light dispels the dark. Milton.

When the spirit brings light into our minds, it dispels darkness: we see it, as we do that the sun at noon, and need not the twilight of reason to shew it. Locke.

DISPENCE. n. s. [dispenso, French.] Expence; cost; charge; profusion.

It was a vault ybuilt for great dispenso,
With many ranges rear'd along the wall,
And one great chimney, whose long funnel thence

The smoke forth threw. Fairy Queen.

TO DISPEND. v. a. [dispendo, Latin.]

To spend; to consume; to expend.

Of their commodities they were now scarce able to dispend the third part. Spenser's State of Ireland.

DISPENSARY. n. s. [from dispenso.] The place where medicines are dispensed.

To thee the lov'd dispensary I resign. Garth.

DISPENSATION. n. s. [from dispensatio,
Latin.]

1. Distribution; the act of dealing out any thing.

This perpetual circulation is constantly promoted by a dispensation of water promiscuously and indifferently to all parts of the earth.
Woodward's Natural History.

2. The dealing of God with his creatures; method of providence; distribution of good and evil.

God delights in the ministries of his own choice, and the methods of grace, in the economy of heaven, and the dispensations of eternal happiness.
Taylor's Worshy Communicant.

Neither are God's methods or intentions different in his dispensations to each private man. Rogers.

Do thou, my soul, the destin'd period wait,
When God shall solve the dark decrees of fate;
His now unequal dispensations clear,
And make all wise and beautiful appear. Tickell.

3. An exemption from some law; a permission to do something forbidden; an allowance to omit something commanded.

A dispensation was obtained to enable Dr. Barrow to marry. Ward.

DISPENSATOR. n. s. [Latin.] One employed in dealing out any thing; a distributer.

As her majesty hath made them dispensators of her favour towards her people, so it becometh them to shew themselves equal distributors of the same.
Bacon.

DISPENSATORY. n. s. [from dispenso.] A book in which the composition of medicines is described and directed; in the Greek, a Pharmacopeia.

The description of the ointment is found in the chymical dispensatory. Bacon's Natural History.

A whole dispensatory was little enough to meet with, and suffice to all their wants. Hammond.

Our materia medica is large enough; and, to look into our dispensatories, one would think no disease incurable. Baker.

TO DISPENSE. v. a. [dispensare, Fr.]

1. To deal out; to distribute.

Those now, that were dispens'd
The burden of many ages, on me light
At once, by my foreknowledge. Milton.

pening of his gospel. Decay of Piety.
At length the inuses stand restor'd again,
While you dispenso the laws, and guide the state.
Dryden.

To them but earth-born life they did dispenso;
To us, for mutual aid, celestial sense. Tate's Juu.

2. To make up a medicine.

TO DISPENSE with. To excuse; to grant dispensation for; to allow: before things.

To save a brother's life,
Nature dispenses with the deed. Shakespeare.

How few kingdoms are there, wherein, by dis- pening with oaths, absolving subjects from allegiance, and cursing, or threatening to curse, as long as their curses were regarded, the popes have not wrought innumerable mischiefs. Raleigh.

Rules of words may be dispensed with. Watts.

4. TO DISPENSE with: before persons.
To set free from an obligation. This construction seems ungrammatical.

I could not dispenso with myself from making a voyage to Caprea. Addison on Italy.

5. TO DISPENSE with. To obtain a dispensation from; to come to agreement with. This structure is irregular, unless it be here supposed to mean, as it may, to discount; to pay an equivalent.

Hast thou not sworn allegiance unto me?
Canst thou dispense with heav'n for such an oath?
Shakespeare.

DISPENSE. n. f. [from the verb.] Dispensation; exemption: not in use.

Then reliques, beads,
Indulgences, dispenses, pardons, bulls,
The sport of winds. Milton.

that dispenses; one that deals out any thing; a distributor.

The ministers of that household are the dispensers
of that faith. Spratt.

Those who stand before earthly princes, who are the dispensers of their favours, and conveyors of their will to others, challenge high honours. Archer.

DISPEOPLE. v. a. [dis and people.]

To depopulate; to empty of people.
The Irish, banished into the mountains, where they lived only upon white meats, seeing their lands so dispeopled and weakened, came down into the plains. Speiser.

Conflagrations, and great droughts, do not merely dispeople, but destroy. Bacon.

His heart exalts him in the harm
Already done, to have dispeopled heav'n. Milton.

Kings, furious and severe,
Who claim'd the skies, dispeopled air and floods,
The lonely lords of empty wilds and woods. Pope.

DISPEOPLER. n. f. [from dispeople.] A depopulator; a waster.

Nor drain I ponder the golden carp to take;
Nor trowle for pikes, dispeoplers of the lake. Gay.

they were dispersed through the countries.
Ezek. xxxvi. 19.

2. To dissipate.
Soldiers, disperse yourselves. Shakespeare.
If the night

Have gather'd aught of evil, or conceal'd,
Disperse it, as now light dispels the dark. Milton.

3. To deal about; to distribute.
Being a king that loved wealth, he could not endure to have trade sick, nor any obstruction to continue in the gate vein which disperst that blood. Bacon.

DISPERSEDLY. adv. [from dispersed.] In a dispersed manner; separately.

The exquisite with of some few, peradventure, are able, dispersedly here and there, to find now a word; and then a sentence, which may be more probably suspected, than easily cleared, of error.
Hooker.

Those minerals are either found in grains, dispersedly intermixed with the corpuscles of earth, or sand, or else amassed into balls or nodules. Woodw.

DISPERSEDNESS. n. f. [from dispersed.]

The state of being dispersed; dispersion.

DISPERSENESS. n. f. [from disperse.]

Thinness; scatteredness.

The torrid parts of Africk are by Piso resembled to a libbard's skin, the distance of whose spots represent the disperseness of habitations or towns in Africk. Brerewood on Languages.

DISPERSER. n. f. [from disperse.] A scat-terer; a spreader.

Those who are pleased with defamatory libels, so far as to approve the authors and dispersers of them, are as guilty as if they had composed them.
Spektor.

DISPERSION. n. f. [from dispersio, Lat.]

1. The act of scattering or spreading.

2. The state of being scattered.
Noah began from thence his dispersion. Raleigh.

two or three of us may yet be gathered together.
Pope.

DISPIRIT. v. a. [dis and spirit.]

1. To discourage; to deject; to depress; to damp; to terrify; to intimidate; to fright; to strike with fear.

Certain it is, that the poor man appeared so, dispirited, that he spoke but few words after he came upon the scaffold. Claydon.

The providence of God strikes not in with them, but dashes, and even dispirits, all their endeavours, and makes their designs heartless and ineffectual. South.

Steady to my principles, and not dispirited with my afflictions, I have overcome all difficulties.

Amidst all the honours that are paid him, he feels nothing in himself but a poor, weak, dispirit mortal, yielding to the laws of corruption.
Rogers.

2. To exhaust the spirits; to oppress the constitution of the body.

He has dispirited himself by a debauch, and drank away his good humour. Collier.

DISPIRITEDNESS. n. f. [from dispirit.]
Want of vigour; want of vivacity. Di.

DISPLACE. v. a. [dis and place.]

1. To put out of place; to place in another situation: as, the chessmen are displaced.

2. To put out of any state, condition, office, trust, or dignity.

To displace any who are in, upon displeasure, is by all means to be avoided, unless there be a manifest cause for it. Bacon.

Abdal, who commands
The city, is the prince's friend, and therefore Must be displac'd, and thou shalt straight succeed him.
Denham.

A religion, established by God himself, should not be displaced by any thing, under a demonstration of that divine power that first introduced it.
Soub.

One then may be displac'd, and one may reign;
And want of merit render birthright vain.
Dryden.

3. To disorder.
You have displac'd the mirth, broke the good meeting
With most admir'd disorder. Shakespeare.

DISPLACENCY. n. f. [displacencia, Lat.]

1. Incivility; disobedience.

2. Disgust; any thing unpleasing.
The displacencies that he receives, by the consequences of his excess, far outweigh all that is grateful in it. Decay of Piety.

DISPLANT. v. a. [dis and plant.]

1. To remove a plant.

2. To drive a people from the place in which they have fixed their residence.

All those countries, which, lying near unto any mountains, or Irish deserts, had been planted with English, were shortly displanted and lost. Spenser.

I may justly account new plantations to be the children of former kingdoms: I like a plantation in a pure soil; that is, where people are not dis-planted. Bacon.

DISPLANTATION. n. f. [from dis and plantatio.]

1. The removal of a plant.

2. The ejection of a people.
The Edemites were garrisoned to resist the Assyrians, whose displantation Senacharib vaunted of.
Raleigh.

DISPLA'Y. v. a. [desployer, Fr.]

1. To spread wide.

The northern wind his wings did broad display
At his command, and reared him up light.
Fairy Queen.

There he him found all carelessly display'd,
In secret shadow from the sunny ray,
On a sweet bed of lilies softly laid. Fairy Queen.

2. To exhibit to the sight or mind.

You speak not like yourself, who ever yet
Have stood to charity, and display'd th' effects
Of disposition gentle. Shakespeare.

Thou heav'n's alternate beauty canst display,
The blush of morning, and the milky way. Dryd.

The works of nature, and the words of revelation, display truth to mankind in characters so visible, that those, who are not quite blind, may read.
Locke.

The storm the dark Lycian groves display'd,
And first to light expos'd the sacred shade.
Pope's Statius.

Say how this instrument of love began;
And in immortal strains display the tale. Gay.

3. To carve; to cut up.

He carved, displays, and cuts up to a wonder.
Spektor.

The very fellow which of late Display'd so saucily against your highness. Shak.

5. To let ostentatiously to view.

They are all couched in a pit, with obscured lights; which, at the very instant of our meeting, they will at once display to the night. Shakespeare.

DISPLA'Y. n. f. [from the verb.] An exhibition of any thing to view.

Our ennobled understandings take the wings of the morning to visit the world above us, and have a glorious display of the highest form of created excellencies. Glanvill.

We can with the greatest coldness behold the stupendous displays of omnipotence, and be intrans-ports at the puny essays of human skill. Spektor.

DISPLEASANCE. n. f. [from displeas.]
Anger; discontent. Obsolete.

Cordell said, she lov'd him as behov'd;
Whose simple answer, wanting colours fair
To paint it forth, him to displeasance mov'd.
Fairy Queen.

DISPLEASANT. adj. [from displeas.] Unpleasing; offensive; unpleasant.

What to one is a most grateful odour, to another is noxious and displeasing; and it were a misery to come to lie stretched on a bed of roses. Glan. Scap.

DISPLEASE. v. a. [dis and please.] To offend; to make angry.

God was displeased with this thing. 1 Chron. xxi. 7.

DISPLEASE. v. n. To disgust; to raise aversion.

Foul sights do rather displease, in that they excite the memory of foul things, than in the immediate objects; and therefore, in pictures, those foul sights do not much offend. Bac. Nat. Hist.

Your extreme fondness was perhaps as displeasing to God before, as now your extreme affliction.
Temple.

Sweet and stinking commonly serve our turn for these ideas, which, in effect, is little more than to call them pleasing or displeasing; though the smell of a rose and violet, both sweet, are certainly very distinct ideas. Locke.

DISPLEASINGNESS. n. f. [from displeasing.] Offensiveness; quality of offending.

It is a mistake to think that men cannot change
the displeasingness or indifference, that is in actions, into pleasure and desire, if they will do but what is in their power. Locke.

DISPLEASURE. n. f. [from displeas.]

1. Uneasiness; pain received.

When good is proposed, its absence carries displeasure or pain with it. Locke.

2. Offence; pain given.

Now shall I be more blameless than the Philistines, though I do them a displeasure. Judges.

3. Anger; indignation.

True repentance may be wrought in the hearts of such as fear God, and yet incur his displeasure, the deserved effect whereof is eternal death. Hooker.

He should beware that he did not provoke Solyman's heavy displeasure against him. Kneller.
Undoubtedly

Undoubtedly he will relent, and turn
From his displeasure. Milton.

Though the reciprocalness of the injury ought to allay the displeasure at it, yet men so much more consider what they suffer than what they do.

On me alone thy just displeasure lay;
But take thy judgments from this mourning land.

You've shewn how much you my content design;
Yet, ah! would heav'n's displeasure pass like mine!

Nothing is in itself so pernicious to communities of learned men, as the displeasure of their prince.

4. State of disgrace; state of being dis-countenanced; disfavour.

He went into Poland, being in displeasure with the pope for overmuch familiarity. Peach. on Music.

TO DISPLEASURE. v. a. [from the noun.]
To displease; not to gain favour; not to win affection. A word not elegant, nor now in use.

When the way of pleasuring or displeasuring lieth by the favourite, it is impossible any other should be over great.

The act of disploding; a sudden burst or dispersion with noise and violence.

DISPORT. n. s. [dis and sport.] Play;
sport; pastime; diversion; amusement;
merriment.

She list not hear, but her disports pursued;
And ever bade him stay, till time the tide renew'd.

His disports were ingenuous and manlike, whereby he always learned somewhat. Hayw. on Ed. VI.

She busied, heard the sound
Of rustling leaves; but minded not, as us'd
To such disports before her through the field. Milt.

TO DISPORT. v. a. [from the noun.] To divert.

He often, but attended with weak guard,
Comes hunting this way to disport himself. Shak.

TO DISPORT. v. n. To play; to toy; to wanton.

Fresh gales and gentle air
Whisper'd it to the woods, and from their wings
Flung rose, flung odours, from the spicy shrub Disporting!

Loose to the winds their airy garments flew;
The glitt'ring tresses of the filmy dew
Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,
Where light disports in ever mingling dyes. Pope.

DISPOSAL. n. s. [from disposse.]

1. The act of disposing or regulating any thing; regulation; dispensation; distribution.

Tax not divine disposal; wisest men
Have err'd, and by bad women been deluded. Milt.

2. The power of distribution; the right of bestowing.

Are not the blessings both of this world and the next in his disposal?

3. Government; management; conduct.

We shall get more true and clear knowledge by one rule, than by taking up principles, and thereby putting our minds into the disposals of others. Locke.

4. Establishment in a new state; dismission into new hands.

I am called off from public dissertations by a domestick affair of great importance, which is no less than the disposal of my sister Jenny for life.

Tatler, N^o 75.

TO DISPOSE, v. a. [disposer, Fr. dispono,
Lat.]

1. To employ to various purposes; to diffuse.

Thus, whilst she did her various pow'r dispose,
The world was free from tyrants, wars, and woes.

2. To give; to place; to bestow.

Yet see, when noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly
Than ever they were fair.

Of what you gathered, as most your own, you have disposed much in works of public piety. Spratt.

3. To turn to any particular end or consequence.

Endure, and conquer; Jove will soon dispose
To future good our past and present woes. Dryd.

4. To adapt; to form for any purpose.

These when the knights beheld, they gan dispose Themselves to court, and each a damsel chose.

But if thee list unto the court to throng,
And there to haunt after the hoped prey,
Then must thou thee dispose another way.

5. To frame the mind; to give a propension; to incline: with to.

Suspicious dispose kings to tyranny, husbands to jealousy, and wise men to irresolution and melancholy.

The memory of what they had suffered, by being without it, easily disposed them to do this. Clarend.

He knew the seat of Paradise;
And, as he was dispos'd, could prove it
Below the moon, or else above it. Hudibras.

This disposes men to believe what it teaches, to follow what it advises.

A man might do this now if he were maliciously disposed, and had a mind to bring matters to extremity.

Although the frequency of prayer and fasting may be of no efficacy to dispose God to be more gracious, yet it is of great use to dispose us to be more objects of his grace.

If mere moralists find themselves disposed to pride, lust, intemperance, or avarice, they do not think their morality concerned to check them. Swift.

6. To make fit: with for.

This may dispose me, perhaps, for the reception of truth; but helps me not to it.

7. To regulate; to adjust.

Wak'd by the cries, th' Athenian chief arose
The knightly forms of combat to dispose.

8. TO DISPOSE OF. To apply to any purpose; to transfer to any other person or use.

All men are naturally in a state of perfect freedom to order their actions, and dispose of their possessions and persons, as they think fit, within the bounds of the law of nature.

Dispose of the meat with the butler, or any other crony.

9. TO DISPOSE OF. To put into the hands of another.

As she is mine, I may dispose of her;
Which shall be either to this gentleman,
Or to her death.

I have disposed of her to a man of business, who will let her see, that to be well dressed, in good humour, and cheerful in her family, are the arts and sciences of female life.

10. TO DISPOSE OF. To give away by authority.

A rural judge dispos'd of beauty's prize. Waller.

11. TO DISPOSE OF. To direct.

The lot is cast into the lap; but the whole dis- posing thereof is of the Lord.

12. TO DISPOSE OF. To conduct; to behave.

They must receive instructions how to dispose of

Let us govern our charitable distributions by this pattern of nature, and maintain a mutual circulation of benefits and returns. Atterbury.

3. [In logick.] As an integral whole is distinguished into its several parts by division; so the word distribution is most properly used, when we distinguish a universal whole into its several kinds of species. Watts.

DISTRI'BUTIVE. adj. [from distribute.]

1. That which is employed in assigning to others their portions; as, distributive justice, that which allots to each his sentence or claim.

If justice will take all, and nothing give,
Justice methinks is not distributive. Dryden.

Observe the distributive justice of the authors, which is constantly applied to the punishment of virtue, and the reward of vice, directly opposite to the rules of their best critics. Swift.

2. That which assigns the various species of a general term.

DISTRI'BUTIVELY. adv. [from distributive.]

1. By distribution.

2. Singly; particularly.

Although we cannot be free from all sin collectively, in such sort that no part thereof shall be found inherent in us; yet, distributively at the least, all great and grievous actual offences, as they offer themselves one by one, both may and ought to be by all means avoided. Hooker.

3. In a manner that expresses singly all the particulars included in a general term; not collectively.

An universal term is sometimes taken collectively for all its particular ideas united together; and sometimes distributively, meaning each of them single and alone. Watts's Logick.

cause a greater part of it is diverted from his landlord.

Locke.

They diverted raillery from improper objects, and gave a new turn to ridicule.

Addison's Freeholder.

Nothing more is requisite for producing all the variety of colours, and degrees of refrangibility, than that the rays of light be bodies of different sizes; the least of which may make violet, the weakest and darkest of the colours, and be more easily diverted by refracting surfaces from the right course; and the rest, as they are bigger and bigger, make the stronger and more lucid colours, blue, green, yellow, and red, and be more and more difficultly diverted.

Newton.

2. To draw forces to a different part.

The kings of England would have had an absolute conquest of Ireland, if their whole power had been employed; but still there arose sundry occasions, which divided and diverted their power some other way.

Davies on Ireland.

3. To withdraw the mind.

Alas, how simple, to these eates compar'd,
Was that crude apple that diverted Eve!

With thousand thousand stars!

Milton.

DIVINATION. n. f. [divinatio, Latin.]

1. Divination is a prediction or foretelling of future things, which are of a secret and hidden nature, and cannot be known by any human means.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

Certain tokens they noted in birds, or in the entrails of beasts, or by other the like frivolous divinations.

Hooker.

Surely there is no enchantment against Jacob, neither is there any divination against Israel.

Numb.

His countenance did imprint an awe,
And naturally all souls to his did bow;
As wands of divination downward draw,
And point to beds where sov'reign gold doth grow.

Dryden.

The excellency of the soul is seen by its power of divining in dreams: that several such divinations have been made, none can question who believes the holy writings.

Addison.

2. Conjectural presage or prediction.

Tell thou thy earl his divination lies,
And I will take it as a sweet disgrace.

so.
Shakespeare.

The prophets thereof divine for money.

Mic. iii. 11.

2. To feel presages.

If secret powers
Suggest but truth to my divining thoughts,
This pretty lad will prove our country's bliss.
Shakespeare.

3. To conjecture; to guess.

The best of commentators can but guess at his meaning; none can be certain he has divined rightly.
Dryd. Juvenal, Dedication.

He took it with a bow, and soon divin'd
The seeming toy was not for nought design'd.
Dryden.

In change of torment would be ease:
Could you divine what lovers bear,
Even you, Prometheus, would confess
There is no vulture like despair.
Granville.

DIVINELY. adv. [from divine.]

1. By the agency or influence of God.

Faith, as we use the word, called commonly divine faith, has to do with no propositions but those which are supposed to be divinely inspired.
Locke.

This topick was very fitly and divinely made use of by our apostle, in his conference with philosophers, and the inquisitive people of Athens.
Bentley.

An earthly paragon: behold divineness
No elder than a boy.
Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

DIVINER. n. f. [from To divine.]

1. One that professes divination, or the art of revealing occult things by super-natural means.

This drudge of the devil, this diviner, laid claim to me, called me Dronio, and swore I was assured to her; told me what privy marks I had about me.
Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

Expelled his oracles, and common temples of divination, the devil runs into corners, exercising meaner trumperies, and acting his deceptions in witches, magicians, diviners, and such inferior seducers.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Conjecturer; guesser.

If he himself be conscious of nothing he then thought on, he must be a notable diviner of thoughts, that can assure him that he was thinking.
Locke.

DIVINERESS. n. f. [from diviner.] A prophetess; a woman professing divination.

The mad divineress had plainly writ,
A time should come, but many ages yet,

In which finister destinies ordain,
A dame should drown with all her feather'd train.
Dryden.

DIVINITY. n. f. [divinité, French; from divinitas, Latin.]

1. Participation of the nature and excellence of God; deity; godhead.

As with new wine intoxicated both,
They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel Divinity within them breeding wings,
Wherewith to scorn the earth.
Milton.

When he attributes divinity to other things than God, it is only a divinity by way of participation.
Stillingfleet.

2. God; the Deity; the Supreme Being;
the Cause of causes.

'Tis the Divinity that stirs within us,
'Tis Heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man.
Addison.

3. False god.

Vain idols, deities that ne'er before
In Israel's lands had fix'd their dire abodes, Beastly divinities, and droves of gods.
Prior.

4. Celestial being.

God doubtless can govern this machine he could create, by more direct and easy methods than employing these subservient divinities.
Cheyne.

5. The science of divine things; theology.

Hear him but reason in divinity,
And, all admiring, with an inward wish
You would desire the king were made a prelate.
Shakespeare.

Trust not my age,
My reverence, calling, nor divinity,
If this sweet lady lie not guiltless here
Under some biting error.
Shakespeare.

Among hard words I number those which are peculiar to divinity, as it is a science.
Swift.

6. Something supernatural.

They say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death. Shakespeare.

DIVISIBLE. adj. [divisibilis, Latin.]

Capable of being divided into parts;
discerptible; separable.

When we frame in our minds any notion of matter, we conceive nothing else but extension and bulk, which is impenetrable, or divisible and passive.
Bentley's Sermons.

DIVISIBILITY. n. f. [divisibilité, Fr.]

The quality of admitting division or separation of parts.

The most palpable absurdities will press the asserters of infinite divisibility. Glanville's Sceptis.

This will easily appear to any one, who will let his thoughts loose in the vast expansion of space, or divisibility of matter.
Locke.

DIVISIBLNESS. n. f. [from divisible.]

divided into.

DIVORCE. n. f. [divorce, French; from divortium, Latin.]

1. The legal separation of husband and wife.

Divorce is a lawful separation of husband and wife, made before a competent judge, on due cognizance had of the cause, and sufficient proof made thereof.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

To restore the king,
He counsels a divorce, a loss of her,
That like a jewel has hung twenty years
About his neck, yet never lost her lustre.
Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

He had in his eye the divorce which had passed betwixt the emperor and Scribonia.
Dryden's Dedication to the Æneid.

2. Separation; disunion.

Such motions may occasion a farther alienation of mind, and divorce of affections, in her, from my religion.
K. Charles.

These things, to be a bastard, and to be born out of lawful wedlock, are convertible the one with the other; and 'tis hard to make divorce between those things that are so near in nature to each other, as being convertible terms.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. The sentence by which a marriage is dissolved.

4. The cause of any penal separation.

Go with me, like good angels, to my end;
And, as the long divorce of steel falls on me,
Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,
And lift my soul to heav'n. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

To DIVORCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To separate a husband or wife from the other.

2. To force asunder; to separate by violence.

Were it consonant unto reason to divorce these two sentences, the former of which doth shew how the latter is restrained, and; not marking the former, to conclude by the latter of them? Hooker.

The continent and the island were continued together, within men's remembrance, by a drawbridge; but are now divorced by the downfallen cliffs.
Garew's Survey of Cornwall.

So seem'd her youthful soul not eas'ly forc'd,
O' from so fast, so sweet a feat divorc'd. Waller.

3. To separate from another.

If thou wert not glad,
I would divorce me from thy mother's tomb, Sepulch'ring on adultress. Shaksp. King Lear.
If so be it were possible, that all other ornaments of mind might be had in their full perfection, nevertheless the mind that should possess them, divorced from piety, could be but a spectacle of commiseration. Hooker.

4. To take away; to put away.

I dare not make myself so guilty,
To give up willingly that noble title
Your master wed me to: nothing but death
Shall e'er divorce my dignities. Shak. Henry VIII.
Aerial pasture the lungs with gentle force
Constant embrace by turns, by turns divorce. Blackmore.

DIVORCEMENT. n. f. [from divorce.]

Divorce; separation of marriage.

her hand, and send her out of his house. Deut. xxiv. 1.

DIVORCER. n. f. [from divorce.] The person or cause which produces divorce or separation.

Death is the violent estranger of acquaintance, the eternal divorcer of marriage. Drummond's Cypr. Grove.

DIURETICK. adj. [diureticus.] Having the power to provoke urine.

Diuretics are decoctions, emulsions, and oils of emollient vegetables, that relax the urinary passages: such as relax ought to be tried before such as force and stimulate. Those emollients ought to be taken in open air, to hinder them from perspiring, and on empty stomachs. Arbutnot.

Graceful as John, she moderates the reins,
And whistles sweet her diuretick strains. Young.

DIURNAL. adj. [diurnus, Latin.]

1. Relating to the day.

We observe in a day, which is a short year, the greatest heat about two in the afternoon, when the sun is past the meridian, which is the diurnal solstice, and the same is evident from the thermometer. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Think, ere this diurnal star

Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams Reflected, may with matter fere foment. Milton.

2. Constituting the day.

Why does he order the diurnal hours
To leave earth's other part, and rise in ours? Prior.

3. Performed in a day; daily; quotidian.

The prime orb,
Incredible how swift, had thither rowl'd Diurnal. Milton.

The diurnal and annual revolution of the sun have been, from the beginning of nature, constant, regular, and universally observable by all mankind. Locke.

DIURNAL. n. f. [diurnal, Fr.] A journal; a day-book.

DIURNALLY. adv. [from diurnal.] Daily; every day.

As we make the enquiries, we shall diurnally communicate them to the publick. Tatler.

DIUTURNITY. n. f. [diuturnitas, Lat.]
Length of duration.

Such a coming, as it might be said that that generation should not pass till it was fulfilled, they needed not suppose of such diuturnity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO DIVULGE. v. a. [divulgo, Lat.]

1. To publish; to make publick; to re- veal to the world.

Men are better contented to have their commendations suppressed, than the contrary much divulged. Hooker.

I will pluck the veil of modesty from the so seeming mistress Page, and divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Asteon.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

These answers, in the silent night receiv'd,
The king himself divulg'd, the land believ'd. Dryden's Æneid.

You are deprived of the right over your own sentiments, of the privilege of every human creature, to divulge or conceal them. Pope.

The cabinets of the sick, and the closets of the dead, have been ransacked to publish private letters, and divulge to all mankind the most secret sentiments of friendship. Pope.

2. To proclaim; to declare by a publick act.

This is true glory and renown, when God,
Looking on th' earth, with approbation marks
The just man, and divulges him through heav'n
To all his angels, who with true applause Recount his praises. Milton's Paradise Lost.

DIVULGER. n. f. [from divulge.] A publisher; one that exposes to publick view.

I think not any thing in my letters could tend so much to my reproach, as the odious divulging of them did to the infamy of the divulgers. King Charles.

DIVULSION. n. f. [divulsio, Lat.] The act of plucking away.

Aristotle, in his Ethics, takes up the conceit of the beaver, and the divulsion of his testicles. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO DIZEN. v. a. [This word seems corrupted from dight.] To dress; to deck; to rig out. A low word.

Your ladyship lifts up the sash to be seen;
For sure I had dizen'd you out like a queen. Swift.

DIZZARD. n. f. [from dizzy.] A block-head; a fool. Di.

DIZZINESS. n. f. [from dizzy.] Giddi-ness; whirl in the head.

Fixed seriousness heats the brain in some to distraction, and causeth an aching and dizziness in fonder heads. Glawville.

DIZZY. adj. [birz, birz, Saxon.]

1. Giddy; vertiginous; having in the head the sensation of turning round.

All on a sudden miserable pain
Surpris'd thee, dim thine eyes, and dizzy swam
In darkness. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Causing giddiness.

How fearful
And dizzy 'tis to cast one's eyes so low!
Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. Giddy; thoughtless.

What followers, what retinue canst thou gain?
Or at thy heels the dizzy multitude,
Longer than thou canst feed them on thy cost? Milton.

TO DIZZY. v. a. [from the adjective.]
To whirl round; to make giddy.

Not the dreadful spout,
Which shipmen do the hurricano call,
Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his descent, than shall my prompted sword Falling on Diomedes. Shak. Triclus and Cressida.
To divide him inventorially, would dizzy the arithmetick of memory. Shakespeare.

TO DO. v. a. Thou dost, he doth or does;
preter. did; part. pass. done. [don, Sax.
doen, Dutch.]

1. To practise or act any thing good or bad.

Thou hast done evil above all that were before thee. 1 Kings.
Flee evil, and do good. Psalms.

2. To perform; to achieve.

They help, who hurt so small;
And he hath nothing done, that doth not all. Daniel.

Learn to live well, that thou mayst die so too;
To live and die is all we have to do. Dromam.

What is the reason a man's arm won't smile and frown, and do all the intellectual postures of the countenance? Collier.

3. To execute; to discharge.

May one, that is a herald and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kingly ears?
Shakespeare's Triclus and Cressida.
Pindarus is come
To do you salutation from his master. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

The jury prayed of the senate a guard, that they might do their consciences. Bacon.

4. To cause. This structure is obsolete.

A fatal plague which many did to dye. Spenser.
Nought can quench mine inly flaming side,
Nor sea of liquor cold, nor lake of mire,
Nothing but death can do me to respire. Fairy Q.

5. To transact.

The thing was not done in a corner. Acts, xxvi. 26.

6. To produce any effect to another.

If he did not care whether he had their love or no, he waded indifferently 'twixt doing them neither good nor harm. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature shame. Shakespeare.

If there be any good thing to be done,
That may to thee do ease, and grace to me,
Speak to me. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

'Tis true, I did so; nor was it in vain:
She did me right, and satisfied my vengeance. Rowe.

You do her too much honour: she hath neither sense nor taste, if she dares to refuse you. Swift.

7. To have recourse to; to practise as the last effort: commonly in the form of a passionate interrogation.

What will ye do in the end thereof? Jer. v. 31.

8. To perform for the benefit or hurt of another.

I know what God will do for me. Sam. xxii. 3.
Acts of mercy done to the poor, shall be accepted and rewarded as done to our Saviour himself. Autenbury.

9. To exert; to put forth.

Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me. 2 Tim. iv. 9.

10. To manage by way of intercourse or dealing; to have business; to deal.

I have been deterred by an indisposition from having much to do with streams of so dangerous a nature. Boyle.

What had I to do with kings and courts?
My humble lot had cast me far beneath them. Rowe.

11. To gain; to effect by influence.

It is much that a jest with a sad brow will do with a fellow that never had the ache in his shoulders. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

His queen, notwithstanding she had presented him with divers children, and with a crown also, though he would not acknowledge it, could do nothing with him. Bacon.

12. To make any thing what it is not.

Off with the crown, and with the crown his head;
And whilst we breathe take him to do him dead. Shakespeare.

13. To finish; to end.

As for this mercy,
Which he intends for Lear and for Cordelia,
The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never see his pardon. Shakespeare.

Go to the reading of some part of the New Testament, not carelessly, or in haste, as if you had a mind to have done; but attentively, as to be able to give some account of what you have read. Duppa.

Gigantick hinds, as soon as work was done,
To their huge pots of boiling pottage would run. Dryden.

14. To

14. To conclude ; to settle.

They did their work and din'd. Prior.
When all is done, there is no man can serve his own interest better than by serving God. Tillotson.

15. To put.

Why, Warwick, who should do the duke to death? Shakespeare.

The lord Aubrey Vere

Was done to death. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

16. The phrase, what to do with, signifies how to bestow ; what use to make of ;
what course to take ; how to employ ;
which way to get rid of.

Men are many times brought to that extremity, that if it were not for God, they would not know what to do with themselves, or how to enjoy themselves for one hour. Tillotson.

To Do. *v. n.*1. To act or behave in any manner well or ill.

Unto this day they do after the former manners :
they fear not the Lord, neither do they after the law and commandment which the Lord commanded the children of Jacob. 2 Kings.

As every prince should govern as he would desire to be governed, so every subject ought to obey as he would desire to be obeyed, according to the maxim of doing as we would be done by. Temple.

2. To make an end ; to conclude. This is only in the compound preterite.

You may ramble a whole day, and every moment discover something new ; but when you have done, you will have but a confused notion of the piece. Spectator.

3. To cease to be concerned with ; to cease to care about ; to desist from notice or practice : only in the compound preterite.

No men would make use of disunited parties to destroy one body, unless they were sure to master them when they had done with them. Stillingfleet.

I have done with Chaucer, when I have answered some objections. Dryden.

We have not yet done with assenting to propositions at first hearing, and understanding their terms. Locke.

Having done with such amusements, we give up what we cannot disown. Pope.

4. To fare ; to be with regard to sickness or health.

Good woman, how dost thou ?

— The better that it pleases your good worship to ask. Shakespeare.

5. To succeed ; to fulfil a purpose.

Come, 'tis no matter ; we shall do without him.

Aldison.

You would do well to prefer a bill against all kings and parliaments since the conquest ; and if that won't do, challenge the crown. Collier on Dashing.

6. To deal with.

No man, who hath to do with the king, will think himself safe, unless you be his good angel, and guide him. Bacon.

7. To Do is used for any verb, to save the repetition of the word : as, I shall come, but if I do not, go away ; that is, if I come not.

Thus painters Cupids paint, thus poets do
A naked god, blind, young, with arrows too. Sudley.

If any thing in the world deserve our serious study and consideration, those principles of religion
do. Tillotson.

Take all things which relax the veins ; for what does so, prevents too vigorous a motion through the arteries. Arbutnot.

8. Do is a word of vehement command ; or earnest request : as, help me, do ; make haste, do.

VOL. I.

If thou hast lost thy land, do not also lose thy constancy ; and if thou must die a little sooner, yet do not die impatiently.

Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.

— Loose me. — I will free thee.

— Do, and I'll be thy slave. Dryden's King Arth.

9. To Do is put before verbs sometimes expletively : as, I do love, or I love ;
I did love, or I loved.

The Turks do acknowledge God the Father, creator of heaven and earth, being the first Person in the Trinity, though they deny the rest.

Bacon's Holy War.

This just reproach their virtue does excite.

Dryden's Æneid.

Expletives their feeble aid do join. Pope.

10. Sometimes emphatically ; as, I do bate him, but will not wrong him.

Perdition catch my soul

But I do love thee ; and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again. Shakespeare's Othello.

11. Sometimes by way of opposition : as,
I did love him, but scorn him now.

To Doar. v. n. See To Dore.

DO'CIBLE, adj. [docilis, Lat.] Tractable ; docile ; easy to be taught.

The asinine feast of sow-thistles and brambles is commonly set before them, as all the food and entertainment of their tenderest and most docible
age. Milton.

DO'CIBLENESS. n. s. [from docible.] Teachableness ; docility ; readiness to learn.

I might enlarge in commendation of the noble hound, as also of the docibleness of dogs in general.
Walton's Angler.

DO'CILE. adj. [docilis, Latin.]1. Teachable ; easily instructed ; tractable.

Dogs soon grow accustomed to whatever they are taught, and, being docile and tractable, are very useful. Ellis's Voyage.

2. With to before the thing taught.

Soon docile to the secret acts of ill,
With smiles I could betray, with temper kill. Prior.

DOCILITY. n. s. [docilité, Fr. from docil-itas, Lat.] Aptness to be taught ; readiness to learn.

All the perfection they allowed his understanding was aptness and docility, and all that they attributed to his will was a possibility to be virtuous.
South.

What is more admirable than the fitness of every creature for use ? the docility of an elephant, and the insatiety of a camel for travelling in deserts ?
Grew.

Dock. n. s. [bocca, Saxon.] A plant ; a weed.

The species are seventeen, ten of which grow wild, several of them being used in medicine ; and the sort called the oriental burdock, is said to be the true rhubarb. Miller.

Nothing seems

But hateful docks, rough thistles, keckles, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility. Shak. Henry V.

My love for gentle Dermot faster grows
Than yon tall dock that rises to thy nose :
Cut down the dock, 'twill sprout again ; but know,
Love rooted out again will never grow. Swift.

DOCK. *n. s.*1. The stump of the tail, which remains after docking.

2. The solid part of the tail.

The tail of a great rhinoceros is not well described by Bontius. The dock is about half an inch thick, and two inches broad, like an apothecary's spatula. Grew's Museum.

DOCK. n. s. [as some imagine, of doxion.]
A place where water is let in or out at pleasure, where ships are built or laid up.

The boatswain and mariner may bring religion to what dock they please. Howell.

There are docks for their galleys and men of war, as well as work-houses for all land and naval preparations. Addison.

To Dock. v. a. [from dock, a tail.]

1. To cut off a tail.

2. To cut any thing short.

One or two stood constant centry, who docked all favours handed down ; and spread a huge invisible net between the prince and subject, through which nothing of value could pass. Swift's Examiner.

3. To cut off a reckoning ; to cut off an entail.

4. To lay the ship in a dock.

DOCKET. n. s. A direction tied upon

DOCTOR. n. s. [doctor, Latin.]

1. One that has taken the highest degree in the faculties of divinity, law, or physick. In some universities they have doctors of musick. In its original import, it means a man so well versed in his faculty, as to be qualified to teach it.

No woman had it, but a civil doctor,
Who did refuse three thousand ducats of me,
And begg'd the ring. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
Then stood there up one in the council, a Pharisee, named Gamaliel, a doctor of laws. Acts, v. 34.

2. A man skilled in any profession.

Then subtle doctors scriptures made their pride,
Casuists, like cocks, struck out each other's eyes. Denham.

Each proselyte would vote his doctor best,
With absolute exclusion to the rest. Dryden.

3. A physician ; one who undertakes the cure of diseases.

By med'cine life may be prolong'd, yet death
Will seize the doctor too. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
How does your patient, doctor ?
— Not so sick, my lord,

As she is troubled with thick coming fancies.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Children will not take those medicines from the doctor's hand, which they will from a nurse or mother. Government of the Tongue.

To 'pothecaries let the learn'd prescribe,
That men may die without a double bribe ;
Let them, but under their superiors, kill,
When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill. Dryden.

He that can cure by recreation, and make pleasure the vehicle of health, is a doctor at it in good earnest. Collier.

In truth, nine parts in ten of those who recovered, owed their lives to the strength of nature and a good constitution, while such a one happened to be the doctor. Swift.

4. Any able or learned man.

The simplest person, that can but apprehend and speak sense, is as much judge of it as the greatest doctor in the school. Digby of Bodies.

rank of a doctor.

From a scholar he became a fellow, and then the president of the college, after he had received all the grades and degrees, the professorship and the doctorship. Clarendon.

DOCTRINAL. adj. [doctrina, Latin.]

1. Containing doctrine, or something formally taught.

The verse naturally affords us the doctrinal proposition, which shall be our subject. South.

2. Pertaining to the act or means of teaching.

To this end the word of God no otherwise serveth, than only in the nature of a doctrinal instrument. Hooker.

What special property or quality is that, which, being no where found but in sermons, maketh them effectual to save souls, and leaveth all other doctrinal means besides destitute of vital efficacy? Hooker.

DOCTRINAL. n. f. Something that is part of doctrine.

Not such as assent to every word in scripture, can be said in doctrinals to deny Christ. South.

DOCTRINALLY. adv. [from doctrina.] In the form of doctrine; positively; as necessary to be held.

Scripture accommodates itself to common opinions, and employs the usual forms of speech, without delivering any thing doctrinally concerning these points. Ray.

DOCTRINE. n. f. [doctrina, Latin.]

1. The principles or positions of any sect or master; that which is taught.

To make new articles of faith and doctrine, no man thinketh it lawful: new laws of government, what church or commonwealth is there which maketh not, either at one time or other? Hooker.

Ye are the sons of clergy, who bring all their doctrines fairly to the light, and invite men with freedom to examine them. Attorney.

That great principle in natural philosophy is the doctrine of gravitation, or mutual tendency of all bodies toward each other. Watts's Imp. of the Mind.

2. The act of teaching.

He said unto them in his doctrine. Mark, iv. 2.

DOCUMENT. n. f. [documentum, Latin.]

1. Precept; instruction; direction.

It is a most necessary instruction and document for them, that as her majesty made them dispensators of her favour, so it behoveth them to shew themselves equal distributors. Bacon.

Learners should not be too much crowded with a heap or multitude of documents or ideas at one time. Watts.

2. Precept, in an ill sense; a precept insolently authoritative, magisterially dogmatical, solemnly trifling.

Gentle insinuations pierce, as oil is the most penetrating of all liquors; but in magisterial documents men think themselves attacked, and stand upon their guard. Government of the Tongue.

It is not unnecessary to digest the documents of cracking authors into several classes.

Harvey on Consumptions.

DODDER. n. f. [touteren, to shoot up, Dutch. Skinner.]

Dodder is a singular plant: when it first shoots from the seed it has little roots, which pierce the earth near the roots of other plants; but the capillaments of which it is formed soon after clinging about these plants, the roots wither away. From this time it propagates itself along the stalks of the plant, entangling itself about them. It has no leaves, but consists of capillaments or stalks, brownish with a cast of red, which run to great lengths. They have tubercles, which fix them fast down to the plant, and by means of which they absorb the juices destined for its nourishment. Hill.

DODDERED. adj. [from dodder.] Overgrown with dodder; covered with supererect plants.

Near the hearth a laurel grew,
Dodder'd with age, whose boughs encompass round
The household gods, and shade the holy ground.
Dryden's Æneid.

The peasants were enjoin'd
Sere-wood, and firs, and dodder'd oaks to find.
Dryden's Fables.

A figure of twelve sides.

DODECATEMERION. n. f. [dodika and temerion.]

The twelfth part.

'Tis dodecaterion thus describ'd:
Thrice ten degrees, which every sign contains,
Let twelve exhaust, that not one part remains;
It follows freight, that every twelfth confines
Two whole and one half portion of the sign.
Creech.

TO DODGE. v. n. [probably corrupted from dog; to shift, and play fly tricks, like a dog.]

1. To use craft; to deal with tergiversation; to play mean tricks; to use low shifts.

If in good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly, it argues an earthly and ignoble mind, where we have apparently wronged, to higgie and dodge in the amends.

Male's Contemplation.

The consideration should make men grow weary of dodging and shewing tricks with God. South.

2. To shift place as another approaches.

For he had, any time this ten years full,
Dodg'd with him betwixt Cambridge and the Bull.
Milton.

3. To play fast and loose; to raise expectations and disappoint them.

You know my passion for Martha, and what a dance she has led me; she dodged with me above thirty years.

Addison.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t'other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a-jar; by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

4. The word in all its senses is low and vulgar.

DODKIN. n. f. [doytken, Dutch.] A doit-kin or little doit; a contemptuous name for a low coin.

While, like a doe, I go to find my fawn,
And give it food. Shakespeare's As you like it.

Bucks have horns, does none. Bac. Nat. Hist.

The fearful doe

And flying flag amidst the greyhounds go.
Dryden's Virgil.

DOE. n. f. [from To do.] A feat; what one has to do; what one can perform.

No sooner he does peep into

The world, but he has done his doe. Hudibras.

DOER. n. f. [from To do.]

1. One that does any thing good or bad.

So foul a thing, O! thou injustice art,
That tort'rest both the doer and distressed. Daniel.

It may be indeed a public crime, or a national mischief; yet it is but a private act, and the doer of it may chance to pay his head for his presumption. South.

2. Actor; agent.

Sith thus far we open the things that have been done, let not the principal doers themselves be forgotten. Hooker.

3. Performer.

One judgeth the prize to the best doer, of which they are no less glad than great princes are of triumphs. Sidney.

4. An active, or busy, or valiant person.

Fear not, my lord, we will not stand to prate;
Talkers are no good doers: be assur'd,
We go to use our hands, and not our tongues.

Shakespeare.

They are great speakers but small doers; greater in shew than in deed. Knolly's History.

5. One that habitually performs or practises.

Be doers of the word, and not hearers only.

Common Prayer.

In this we shew ourselves weak, and unapt to be doers of his will, in that we take upon us to be controllers of his wisdom. Hooker.

DOES. The third person from do, for doth.

Though lending to foreigners, upon use, doth not at all alter the balance of trade between those countries, yet it does alter the exchange between those countries. Locke.

TO DOFF. v. a. [from do off.]

1. To put off dress.

You have deceiv'd our trust,
And made us doff our easy robes of peace,
To crush our old limbs in ungentle steel.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Doff those links.

Milton's Agonistes.

Nature, is awe to him,

Had doff'd her gaudy trim,

With her great master so to sympathize. Milton.

That judge is hot, and doffs his gown.

Dryden's Juvenal.

Alcides doffs the lion's tawny hide.

Rowe.

2. To strip; to divest of any thing.

Why art thou troubled, Herod? What vain fear
Thy blood-revolving breast doth move?

Heav'n's king, who doffs himself our flesh to wear,

Comes not to rule in wrath, but serve in love.

Craspaw.

3. To put away; to get rid of.

Your eye in Scotland

Would create soldiers, and make women fight,
To doff their dire distresses. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

4. To shift off; to delay; to refer to another time; to put off.

Every day thou doff'st me with some device,
Iago; and rather keep it from me all conveniency,
than suppliest me with the least advantage of hope.

Shakespeare's Othello.

Away, I will not have to do with you.—

—Canst thou so doff me? Shakespeare's Much Ado.

5. This word is in all its senses obsolete, and scarcely used except by rusticks; yet it is a pure and commodious word.

DOG. n. f. [dogge, Dutch; canis, Lat.]

1. A domestic animal remarkably various in his species; comprising the mastiff, the spaniel, the bulldog, the greyhound, the hound, the terrier, the cur, with many others. The larger sort are used as a guard; the less for sports.

Such smiling rogues as these looth every passion:
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With ev'ry gale and vary of their masters,
As knowing nought, like dogs, but following.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Why should we not think a watch and pistol as distinct species one from another, as a horse and a dog? Locke.

The clamour roars of men, and boys, and dogs.

Thomson.

2. A constellation called Sirius, or Canicula, rising and setting with the sun during the canicular days, or dog days.

Among the southern constellations, two there are who bear the name of the dog; the one in sixteen degrees latitude, containing on the left thigh a star of the first magnitude, usually called Procyon, or Anticanus. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

It parts the twins and crab, the dog divides,
And Argo's keel that broke the frothy tides. Creech.

3. A

3. A reproachful name for a man.

So strange, outrageous, and so variable,
As the dog Jew did utter in the streets. Shakespeare.
Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers. Phil. iii. 2.
4. To give or send to the Dogs; to throw away. To go to the Dogs; to be ruined, destroyed, or devoured.
Had whole Colepeper's wealth been hogs, and hogs,
Could he himself have sent it to the dogs? Pope.
5. It is used as the term for the male of several species: as, the dog fox, the dog otter.
If ever I thank any man, I'll thank you; but that they call compliments is like the encounter of two dog apes. Shakespeare.
The same ill taste of sense will serve to join Dog foxes in the yoke, and fitter the swine. Dryden.
6. Dog is a particle added to any thing, to mark meanness, or degeneracy, or worthlessness: as, dog rose.
To Dog. v. a. [from the noun.] To hunt, as a dog, insidiously and indefatigably.
I have dogg'd him like his murderer. Shakespeare.
I, his despicable Juno, sent him forth
From courtly friends, with camping foes to live,
Where death and danger dog the heels of worth. Shakespeare.
Sorrow dogging sin,
Afflictions sorted. Herbert.
I fear the dread events that dog them both,
Left some ill-greeting touch attempt the person
Of our renowned sister. Milton.
These spiritual joys are dogged by no sad sequels. Glanville.
I have been pursued, dogged, and way-laid through several nations, and even now scarce think myself secure. Pope.

ness. Skinner.] A small ship with one mast.
- DO'GEREL. adj. [from dog.] Loosed from the measures or rules of regular poetry; vile; despicable; mean: used of verses.
Then hasten Og and Doeg to rehearse,
Two fools that crutch their feeble sense on verse;
Who by my muse to all succeeding times
Shall live, in spite of their own dogg'el rhymes. Dryden.
Your wit burlesque may one step higher climb,
And in his sphere may judge all dogg'el rhyme. Dryden.
It is a dispute among the critics, whether burlesque poetry runs best in heroic verse, like that of the Dispensary; or in dogg'el, like that of Hu-dibras. Addison's Spectator.
- DO'GGEREL. n. f. Mean, despicable, worthless verses.
The hand and head were never lost of those Who dealt in dogg'el, or who pin'd in prose. Dryden's Juvenal.
The vilest dogg'el Grubstreet sends
Will pass for yours with foes and friends. Swift.
- DO'GCISH. adj. [from dog.] Churlish; brutal.
- DO'GHEARTED. adj. [dog and heart.] Cruel; pitiless; malicious.
His unkindness,
That stript her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
To his doghearted daughters. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

- DO'GHOLE. n. f. [dog and hole.] A vile hole; a mean habitation.
France is a doghole, and it no more merits the tread of a man's foot: to the wars. Shakespeare.
But, could you be content to bid adieu
To the dear playhouse, and the players too, Sweet country seats are purchas'd ev'ry where,
With lands and gardens, at less price than here
You hire a darksome doghole by the year. Dryden's Juvenal.
Reverse your ornaments, and hang them all
On some patch'd doghole ek'd with ends of wall. Pope.
- DO'GKENNEL. n. f. [dog and kennel.] A little hut or house for dogs.
A certain nobleman, beginning with a dogkennel, never lived to finish the palace he had contrived. Dryden.
I am desir'd to recommend a dogkennel to any that shall want a pack. Tatler.
- DO'GLOUSE. n. f. [dog and louse.] An insect that harbours on dogs.
- DO'GMA. n. f. [Latin.]
1. Established principle; doctrinal notion.
Our poet was a stoick philosopher, and all his moral sentences are drawn from the dogmas of that sect. Dryden.
2. [In canon law.] Dogma is that determination which consists in, and has a relation to, some casuistical point of doctrine, or some doctrinal part of the christian faith. Ayliffe's Parergon.
- DOGMA'TICAL. } adj. [from dogma.] Au-DOGMA'TICK. } thoritative; magisterial; positive; in the manner of a philosopher laying down the first principles of a sect.
The dim and bounded intellect of man seldom prosperously adventures to be dogmatical about things that approach to infinite, whether in vastness or littleness. Boyle.
I laid by my natural diffidence and scepticism for a while, to take up that dogmatical way, which is so much his character. Dryden.
Learning gives us a discovery of our ignorance, and keeps us from being peremptory and dogmati-cal in our determinations. Collier on Pride.
Criticks write in a positive dogmatick way, without either language, genius, or imagination. Spectator.
One of these authors is indeed so grave, sententious, dogmatical a rogue, that there is no enduring him.
- DOGMA'TICALLY. adv. [from dogmati-cal.] Magisterially; positively.
I shall not presume to interpose dogmatically in a controversy, which I look never to see decided. South.
- DOGMA'TICALNESS. n. f. [from dogmatical.] The quality of being dogmati-cal; magisterialness; mock authority.
- DO'GMATIST. n. f. [dogmatiste, Fr.] A magisterial teacher; a positive asserter;
a bold advancer of principles.
I could describe the vanity of bold opinion, which the dogmatists themselves demonstrate in all the controversies they are engaged in. Glanville's Sceptic.
A dogmatist in religion is not a great way off from a bigot, and is in high danger of growing up to be a bloody persecutor. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
- To DO'GMATIZE. v. n. [from dogma.] To assert positively; to advance without distrust; to teach magisterially.
These, with the pride of dogmatizing schools,
Impos'd on nature arbitrary rules;
Forc'd her their vain inventions to obey,
And move as learned frenzy trac'd the way. Blackmore.

DOGMATIZER. n. f. [from dogmatize.] An asserter; a magisterial teacher; a bold advancer of opinions.

Such opinions, being not entered into the confessions of our church, are not properly chargeable either on Papists or Protestants, but on particular dogmatizers of both parties. Hammond.

DO'GROSE. n. f. [dog and rose.] The flower of the hip.

Of the rough or hairy excrescence, those on the briar, or dogrose, are a good instance. Derham's Physico-Theology.

DO'GSLEEP. n. f. [dog and sleep.] Pretended sleep.

Juvenal indeed mentions a drowsy husband, who raised an estate by snoring; but then he is represented to have slept what the common people call dogsleep. Addison.

DO'GSMEAT. n. f. [dog and meat.] Refuse; vile stuff; offal like the flesh sold to feed dogs.

His reverence bought of me the flower of all the market; these are but dogsmeat to 'em. Dryden.

DO'GSTAR. n. f. [dog and star; canicula, Lat.] The star which gives the name to the dogdays.

Oh, master, master, I have watch'd so long, That I'm dogweary. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.

DO'GWOOD. n. f. A species of cornelian cherry.

DO'ILY. n. f. A species of woollen stuff; so called, I suppose, from the name of the first maker.

We should be as weary of one set of acquaintance, though never so good, as we are of one suit, though never so fine: a fool, and a doily stuff, would now and then find days of grace, and be worn for variety. Congreve's Way of the World.

DO'INGS. n. f. [from To do. This word has hardly any singular.]

1. Things done; events; transactions.

I have but kill'd a fly.—
—But how if that fly had a father and mother?
How would he hang his slender gilded wings,
And bus lamented doings in the air! Shakespeare.

2. Feats; actions: good or bad.

The next degree was to mark all Zelmane's doings, speeches, and fashions, and to take them unto herself, as a pattern of worthy proceeding. Sidney.

If I'm traduc'd by tongues which neither know
My faculties nor person, yet will be
The chronicles of my doing, let me say
'Tis but the face of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. Shak. Hen. VIII.

At length a reverend fire among them came,
And of their doings great dislike declar'd,
And testified against their ways. Milton.

3. Behaviour; conduct.

Never the earth on his round shoulders bare
A maid train'd up from high or low degree,
That in her doings better could compare
Mirth with respect, few words with courtesy. Sidney.

4. Conduct; dispensation.

Dangerous it were for the feeble brains of man to wade far into the doings of the Most High. Hooker.

5. Stir; bustle; tumult.

Shall there be then, in the mean while, no doings? Hooker.

After such miraculous doings, we are not yet in a condition of bringing France to our terms. Swift.

DOIT. n. f. [duyt, Dutch; doight, Erse.] A small piece of money.

When they will not give a doit to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian. Shakespeare's Tempest.

In Anna's wars a soldier, poor and old,
Had dearly earn'd a little purse of gold;
Tir'd with a tedious march, one luckless night
He slept, poor dog! and lost it to a doit. Pope.

DOLE. n. f. [from deal; dælan, Saxon.]

1. The act of distribution or dealing.

It was your presumise,
That in the dole of blows your son might drop. Shakespeare.

The personal fruition in any man cannot reach to feel great riches: there is a custody of them, or a power of dole and donative of them, or a fame of them, but no solid use to the owner. Bacon.

At her general dole,
Each receives his ancient soul. Cleaveland.

2. Any thing dealt out or distributed.

Now, my masters, happy man be his dole, say I; every man to his business. Shakespeare.

Let us, that are unhurt and whole,
Fall on, and happy man be's dole. Hudibras.

3. Provisions or money distributed in charity.

They had such firm dependence on the day,
That need grew pamp'rd, and forgot to pray;
So sure the dole, so ready at their call,
They stood prepar'd to see the manna fall. Dryd.

Clients of old were feasted; now a poor
Divided dole is dealt at th' outward door,
Which by the hungry rout is soon dispatch'd. Dryden's Juvenal.

4. Blows dealt out.

What if his eye-sight, for to Israel's God
Nothing is hard, by miracle restor'd,
He now be dealing dole among his foes,
And over heaps of slaughter'd walk his way? Milton.

5. [from dolor.] Grief; sorrow; misery. Obsolete.

Yonder they lie; the poor old man, their father, making such pitiful dole over them, that all beholders take his part with weeping. Shakespeare's As you like it.

Our sometime sister, now our queen,
Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,
With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,
In equal scale weighing delight and dole,
Taken to wife. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

They might hope to change
Torment with ease, and soonest recompense Dole with delight. Milton's Paradise Lost.

For none but you, or who of you it learns,
Can rightfully aread so doleful lay. Spenser.
With scrowed face, and doleful whine, they only ply with senseless harangues of conscience against carnal ordinances. South.

Just then the hero cast a doleful cry,
And in those ardent flames began to fry:
The blind contagion rag'd within his veins. Dryd.

2. Melancholy; afflicted; feeling grief; sorrowful.

How oft my doleful fire cry'd to me, tarry, son,
When first he spy'd my love. Sidney.

3. Dismal; impressing sorrow; dolorifick.

It watereth the heart to the end it may fruitfully; maketh the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents, which befall men in this present life. Hooker.

No light, but rather darkness visible,
Serv'd only to discover fights of woe,
Regions of sorrow, doleful shades, where peace
And rest can never dwell! Milton's Par. Lost.

Happy the mortal man, who now at last
Has through this doleful vale of mis'ry past;
Who to his destin'd stage has carried on
The tedious load, and laid his burden down. Prior.

Ten thousand dollars for our gen'ral use. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

DOLORIFICK. adj. [dolorificus, Latin.] That which causes grief or pain.

The pain returned, dissipating that vapour which obstructed the nerves, and giving the dolorifick motion free passage again. Ray.

This, by the softness and rarity of the fluid, is insensible, and not dolorifick. Arbutnot on Air.

DO'LOROUS. adj. [from dolor, Latin.]

1. Sorrowful; doleful; dismal; gloomy; impressing sorrow.

We are taught, by his example, that the presence of dolorous and dreadful objects, even in minds most perfect, may, as clouds, overcast all seasonable joy. Hooker.

You take me in too dolorous a sense:

I spake t' you for your comfort. Shakespeare.

Through many a dark and dreary vale
They pass'd, and many a region dolorous,
O'er many a frozen, many a fiery alp,
Rocks, caves, lakes, fens, bogs, dens, and shades
Of death. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Talk not of ruling in this dol'rous gloom,
Nor think vain words, he cried, can ease my doom. Pope.

DOLT. n. f. [dol, Teutonic.] A heavy stupid fellow; a blockhead; a thick-skull; a loggerhead.

Let dols in haste some altar fair erect

To those high pow'rs, which idly sit above. Sid.

Thou hast not half that power to do me harm,

As I have to be hurt: oh gull, oh dolt,

As ignorant as dirt! Shakespeare's Othello.

Like men condemn'd to thunder-bolts,

Who, ere the blow, become mere dols;

They neither have the hearts to stay,

Nor wit enough to run away. Hudibras.

Wood's adulterate copper,

Which, as he scatter'd, we, like dols,

Mistook at first for thunder-bolts. Swift.

DOLTISH. adj. [from dolt.] Stupid; mean; dull; blockish.

And a large portion of the king's domains. Dryden's Æneid.

3. The land about a mansion house occupied by the lord.

HOME. n. f. [dome, French, from domus, Latin.]

1. A building; a house; a fabrick.

Best be he call'd among good men,

Who to his God this column rais'd:

Though lightning strike the dome again,

The man who built it shall be prais'd. Prior.

Stranger! whoe'er thou art, securely rest

Affianc'd in my faith, a friendly guest;

Approach the dome, the social banquet share. Pope's Odyssey.

2. A hemispherical arch; a cupola.

HOME'STICAL. } adj. [domesticus, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the house; not relating to things publick.

The necessities of man had at the first no other helps and supplies than domestic; such as that which the prophet implieth, saying, Can a mother forget her child? Hooker.

The practical knowledge of the domestic duties is the principal glory of a woman. Clarissa.

2. Private; done at home; not open.

In this their domestic celebration of the Pass-over, they divided supper into two courses. Hooker.

Beholding thus, O happy as a queen!

We cry; but shift the gaudy, flatt'ring scene,

View her at home in her domestic light,

For thither she must come, at least at night. Granville.

3. Inhabiting the house; not wild.

The faithful prudent husband is an honest, tractable, and domestic animal. Addison's Spect.

4. Not foreign; intestine.

Domestic evils, for that we think we can master them at all times, are often permitted to run on forward, till it be too late to recall them. Hooker, Dedication.

Equality of two domestic pow'rs

Breeds scrupulous faction. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

Combine together 'gainst the enemy;

For these domestic and particular broils

Are not the question here. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Such they were, who might presume to have done

Much for the king and honour of the state;

Having the chiefest actions undergone.

Both foreign and domestic, of late. Daniel.

Next to the sin of those who began that rebellion, their most needs be, who hindered the speedy suppressing of it, by domestic dissensions. K. Charles.

TO DOMESTICATE. v. a. [from domestic.]

To make domestic; to withdraw from the publick. Clarissa.

DOMESTICK. n. f. One kept in the same house.

A servant dwells remote from all knowledge of his lord's purposes: he lives as a kind of foreigner under the same roof; a domestic, and yet a stranger

too. South.

TO DOMIFY. v. a. [domifico, Latin.] To tame. Di.

DOMINANT. adj. [dominant, French; dominans, Latin.] Predominant; presiding; ascendant.

1. Power; dominion.

Thou and thine usurp

The domination, royalties, and rights

Of this oppressed boy. Shakespeare's King John.

2. Tyranny; insolent authority.

Maximian traded with the Goths in the product of his own estate in Thracia, the place of his nativity; whither he retired, to withdraw from the unjust domination of Opilius Macrinus. Arbutnot on Coins.

3. One highly exalted in power: used of angelick beings.

He heav'n of heav'ns, and all the powers therein,

By thee created; and by thee threw down

Th' aspiring dominations. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Hear, all ye angels, progeny of light,

Thrones, dominations, principedoms, virtues, pow'rs! Milton.

DOMINATIVE. adj. [from dominate.] Imperious; insolent. Di.

DOMINATOR. n. f. [Latin.] The presiding or predominant power or influence.

Jupiter and Mars are dominators for this northwest part of the world, which maketh the people

Impatient of servitude, lovers of liberty, martial, and courageous. Camden's Remains.

TO DOMINEER. v. n. [dominor, Latin.]

To rule with insolence; to swell; to bluster; to act without controul.

Go to the feast, revel, and domineer,

Carouse full measure. Shakespeare's Tam. of the Shrew.

The voice of conscience now is low and weak,

chastising the passions, as old Eli did his lustful domineering sons. South.

Both would their little ends secure;

He fights for freedom, she for pow'r;

His wishes tend abroad to roam,

And hers to domineer at home. Prior.

DOMINICAL. adj. [dominicalis, Latin.]

That which notes the Lord's day, or Sunday.

The cycle of the moon serves to shew the epacts, and that of the sun the dominical letter, throughout all their variations. Holder on Time.

DOMINION. n. f. [dominium, Latin.]

1. Sovereign authority; unlimited power.

They on the earth

Dominion exercise, and in the air,

Chiefly on man. Milton.

He gave us only over beast, fish, fowl,

Dominion absolute; that right we hold

By his donation: but man over man

He made not lord. Milton.

Blest use of pow'r, O virtuous pride in kings!

And like his bounty whence dominion springs. Tickell.

2. Power; right of possession or use, without being accountable.

He could not have private dominion over that,

which was under the private dominion of another. Locke.

3. Territory; region; district: considered as subject.

The donations of bishopricks the kings of England did ever retain in all their dominions, when the pope's usurped authority was at the highest. Davies on Ireland.

4. Predominance; ascendant.

Objects placed foremost ought to be more finished than those cast behind, and to have dominion over things confused and transient. Dryden's Dufresney.

5. An order of angels.

By him were all things created, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones or dominions, or principalities or powers. Col. i. 16.

DON. n. f. [dominus, Latin.] The Spanish

title for a gentleman; as, Don Quixote.

It is with us used ludicrously.

To the great dons of wit,

Phœbus gives them full privilege alone

To damn all others, and cry up their own. Dryd.

DONSHIP. n. f. [from don.] Quality or rank of a gentleman or knight.

I'm none of those,

Your bosom-friends, as you suppose;

But Ralph himself, your trusty squire,

Wh' has dagg'd your donship out o' th' mire. Hudibras.

TO DON. v. a. [To do on.] To put on; to invest with; the contrary to doff. Obsolete.

The purple morning left her crimson bed,

And donn'd her robes of pure vermilion hue. Fairfax.

Her helm the virgin donn'd. Fairfax.

What! should I don this robe, and trouble you! Shakespeare.

DONARY. n. f. [donarium, Latin.] A thing given to sacred uses.

DONATION. n. f. [donatio, Latin.]

1. The act of giving any thing; the act of bestowing.

He gave us only over beast, fish, fowl,

Dominion absolute; that right we hold

By his donation. Milton's Paradise Lost.

After donation there is an absolute change and alienation made of the property of the thing given:

which being so alienated, a man has no more to do with it than with a thing bought with another's money. South.

2. The grant by which any thing is given or conferred.

Howsoever the letter of that donation may be unregarded by men, yet the sense thereof is so imprinted in their hearts, as if every one laid claim for himself unto that which was conferred upon all. Raleigh's Essays.

The kingdoms of the world to thee were giv'n,

Permitted rather, and by thee usurp'd;

Other donation none thou canst produce. Milton.

DONATIVE. n. f. [donatif, Fr. from do- natus, Latin.]

1. A gift; a largess; a present; a dole of money distributed.

The Roman emperor's custom was, at certain solemn times, to bestow on his soldiers a donative; which donatives they received wearing garlands upon their heads. Hooker.

They were entertained with publick shows and donatives, to make them more easily digest their lost liberty. Dryden.

2. [In law.] A benefice merely given and collated by the patron to a man, without either presentation to the ordinary, or institution by the ordinary, or induction by his orders. Cowell.

Never did sleight carry double truer;
His is the donative, and mine the cure. Cleveland.

- DONE. part. pass. of the verb To do.

Another like fair tree eke grew thereby,
Whereof who so did eat, estoons did know
Both good and evil: O mournful memory!
That tree, through one man's fault, hath done us all to dye. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

- DONE. a kind of interjection. The word by which a wager is concluded: when a wager is offered, he that accepts it says done.

Done: the wager? Shakespeare's Tempest.

One thing, sweet-heart, I will ask;
Take me for a new-fashion'd mask,
—Dones but my bargain shall be this,
I'll throw my mask off when I kiss. Cleveland.
Twas done and done, and the fox, by consent, was to be the judge. L'Estrange.

- DO'NION. n. s. [now corrupted to dungeon, from dominionum, low Latin, according to Menage.] The highest and strongest tower of the castle, in which prisoners were kept; as in Chaucer. It is now used of subterraneous prisons.

The grete toure, that was so thicke and strong,
Which of the castle was the chief dungeon,
Wherein the knights were in prison,
Was evn joyuant to the garden-wall,
Ther as this Emely had her playeing. Chaucer.

- DO'NOA. n. s. [from dono, Latin.] A giver; a bestower; one who gives any thing.

Litters thick besiege the donor's gate,
And begging lords and teeming ladies wait
The promis'd dole. Dryden's Juvenal.

It is a mighty check to beneficent tempers to consider how often good designs are frustrated and perverted to purposes, which, could the donors themselves have foreseen, they would have been very loth to promote. Atterbury.

- DOO'DLE. n. s. [a cant word, perhaps corrupted from do little: faineant.] A trifler; an idler.

- TO DOOM. v. a. [beman, Saxon.]

1. To judge.

Him through malice fall'n,
Father of mercy and grace! thou didst not doom
So strictly, but much more to pity incline. Milton.

2. To condemn to any punishment; to sentence.

He may be doom'd to chains, to shame, to death,
While proud Hippolitus shall mount his throne. Smith.

Justly th' impartial fates conspire,
Dooming that son to be the fire
Of such another son. Granville.

3. To pronounce condemnation upon any.

Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears,
And lives and crimes, with his assessor, hears;
Round in his urn the blended balls he rolls,
Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls. Dryden's Æneid.

4. To command judicially or authoritatively.

Have I a tongue to doom my brother's death,
And shall that tongue give pardon to a slave? Shakespeare.

5. To destine; to command by uncontrollable authority.

Fate and the gods, by their supreme command,
Have doom'd our ships to seek the Latian land. Dryden's Æneid.

I have no will but what your eyes ordain;
Destin'd to love, as they are doom'd to reign. Granville.

- DOOM. n. s. [bon, Saxon; doem, Latin.]

1. Judicial sentence; judgment.

He's fled, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield;
And humbly thus, with halts on their necks,
Expect your highness' doom of life or death. Shakespeare.

To Satan, first in sin, his doom applied,
Though in mysterious terms, judg'd as then best. Milton.

And now, without redemption, all mankind
Must have been lost, adjudg'd to death and hell
By doom severe. Milton.

In the great day, wherein the secrets of all hearts shall be laid open, no one shall be made to answer for what he knows nothing of; but shall receive his doom, his conscience accusing or excusing him. Locke.

2. The great and final judgment.

Search Windsor Castle, elves, within and out:
Strew good luck, o'phes, on every sacred room,
That it may stand till the perpetual doom. Shak.

3. Condemnation; judicial sentence.

Revoke thy doom,
Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou dost evil. Shakespeare's King Lear.

4. Determination declared.

If friend or foe, let him be gently us'd.
—Revoke that doom of mercy, for 'tis Clifford. Shakespeare.

5. The state to which one is destined.

By day the web and loom,
And homely household task, shall be her doom. Dryden's Iliad.

6. Ruin; destruction.

From the same foes, at last, both felt their doom;
And the same age saw learning fall, and Rome. Pope.

- DOOMSDAY. n. s. [doom and day.]

1. The day of final and universal judgment; the last, the great day.

Men, wives, and children stare, cry out, and run,
As it were doomsday. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

They may serve for any theme, and never be out of date until doomsday. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Our souls, not yet prepar'd for upper light,
Till doomsday wander in the shades of night;
This only holiday of all the year,
We privileg'd in sunshine may appear. Dryden.

2. The day of sentence or condemnation.

All-souls day is my body's doomsday. Shakespeare's Richard III.

- DOOMSDAY-BOOK. n. s. [doomsday and book.] A book made by order of William the Conqueror, in which the estates of the kingdom were registered.

1. Loss of understanding; imbecility of mind; deliriousness.

The soul in all hath one intelligence;
Though too much moisture in an infant's brain,
And too much driness in an old man's sense,
Cannot the prints of outward things retain:
Then doth the soul want work, and idle sit;
And this we childishness and dotage call. Davies.

I hold, that perfect joy makes all our parts
As joyful as our hearts: Suckling.

Our senses tell us, if we please not them,
Our love is but a dotage, or a dream. Dryden.

2. Excessive fondness.

If on your head my fury does not turn,
Thank that fond dotage which so much you scorn. Dryden.

DoTAL. adj. [dotalis, Latin.] Relating to the portion of a woman; constituting her portion; comprised in her portion.

Shall I, of one poor dotal town possess,
My people thin, my wretched country waste,
An exil'd prince, and on a shaking throne,
Or risk my patron's subjects, or my own; Garrb's Ovid.

DoTARD. n. f. [from dote.] A man whose age has impaired his intellects; a man in his second childhood, called in some provinces a twichild.

Dotard, said he, let be thy deep advise,
Seems that through many years thy wits thee fail,
And that weak old hath left thee nothing wise,
Else never should thy judgment be so frail. Fairy Queen.

The sickly dotard wants a wife,
To draw off his last dregs of life. Prior.

A sword is upon her mighty men, and they shall be dismayed. Jer. l. 36.

Time has made you dote, and vainly tell
Of arms imagin'd in your lonely cell:
Go, be the temple and the gods your care;
Permit to men the thought of peace and war. Dryden's Æneid.

When an old woman begins to dote, and grow chargeable to a parish, she is turned into a witch, and fills the country with extravagant fancies. Addison's Spectator.

2. To be in love to extremity.

He was stricken with great affection towards me, which since is grown to such a doting love, that I was fain to get this place sometimes to retire in freely. Sidney.

I have long loved her, and bestowed much on her, followed her with a doting observance. Shakespeare.

To DOTE upon. To regard with excessive fondness; to love to excess.

All their prayers and love
Were set on Hertford, whom they doted on,
And blest'd, and grac'd. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Forgive me, that I do not dream on thee,
Because thou seest me dote upon my love. Shakespeare.

All the beauties of the court besides
Are mad in love, and dote upon your person. Denham.

Mark those who dote on arbitrary power,
And you shall find 'em either hot-brain'd youth,
Or needy bankrupts. Dryden.

Would you so dote upon your first desire,
As not to entertain a nobler fire? Dryden's Indian Emperor.

We dote upon this present world, and the enjoyments of it; and 'tis not without pain and fear, and reluctance, that we are torn from them, as if our hopes lay all within the compass of this life. Burnet.

O death all eloquent! you only prove
What dust we dote on, when 'tis man we love. Prior.

DoTUN. adj. [from the verb.] Stupid.

2. A man fondly, weakly, and excessively in love.

If in black my lady's brow be deckt,
It mourns that painting and usurping hair
Should ravish deters with a false aspect;
And therefore is she born to make black fair.

Shakespeare.

Our deters upon red and white are incessantly perplexed by the uncertainty both of the continuance of their mistress's kindness, and of the lasting of her beauty.

Boyle.

DO'TINOLY. adv. [from doting.] Fondly; by excessive fondness.

That he, to wedlock dotingly betray'd,
Should hope in this lewd town to find a maid!

Dryden's Juvenal.

DO'TTARD. n. f. This word seems to signify a tree kept low by cutting.

For great trees, we see almost all overgrown trees in church-yards, or near ancient buildings, and the like, are pollards and dottards, and not trees at their full height.

Bacon.

DO'TTEREL. n. f. [from dote.] The name of a bird that mimicks gestures.

We see how ready apes and monkeys are to imitate all motions of man; and in catching of dotters, we see how the foolish bird playeth the ape in gestures.

Bacon.

DO'UBLE. adj. [double, French; duplex, Latin; duple, Erse.]

1 Chron. xii. 33.

DOUBLE-PLEA. n. f. [duplex placitum, Latin.] Is that in which the defendant alleges for himself two several matters, in bar of the action, whereof either is sufficient to effect his desire in debarring the plaintiff.

Cowell.

DOUBLE-QUARREL, is a complaint made by any clerk or other to the archbishop of the province, against an inferior ordinary, for delaying justice in some cause ecclesiastical. The effect is, that the archbishop directs his letters, under the authentical seal, to all clerks of his province, commanding them to admonish the said ordinary within nine days to do the justice required, or otherwise to cite him to appear before him or his official; and lastly to intimate to the said ordinary, that if he neither performs the thing enjoined, nor appears at the day assigned, he himself will proceed to perform the justice required. And this seems to be termed a double-quarrel, because it is most commonly made against both the judge, and him at whose petition justice is delayed.

Cowell.

DOUBLE. adj. Twice over.

I am not so old in proportion to them as I formerly was, which I can prove by arithmetick; for then I was double their age, which now I am not.

But that I doubt. Milton.

You that will be less fearful than discreet,
That love the fundamental part of state,
More than you doubt the change of it, prefer
A noble life before a long. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

4. To distrust; to hold suspected.

To teach vain wits a science little known,
T' admire superior sense, and doubt their own.
Pope.

DOUBT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Uncertainty of mind; suspense; undetermined state of opinion.

Could any difficulty have been proposed, the resolution would have been as early as the proposal; it could not have had time to settle into doubt.
Soub.

Those who have examined it, are thereby got past doubt in all the doctrines they profess. Locke.

2. Question; point unsettled.

Hippocrates commends the flesh of the wild sow above the tame; and no doubt but the animal is more or less healthy, according to the air it lives in.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

'Tis past a doubt,

All Bedlam or Parnassus is let out. Pope.

3. Scruple; perplexity; irresolution.

Our doubts are traitors,
And make us lose, by fearing to attempt,
The good we oft might win. Shakespeare.

4. Uncertainty of condition.

And thy life shall hang in doubt before thee;
And thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have no assurance of thy life.
Deut.

I'm bound in

To saucy doubts and fear. Shakespeare.

5. Suspicion; apprehension of ill.

I desire to be present with you now, and to change my voice; for I stand in doubt of you.
Gal. iv. 20.

6. Difficulty objected.

To every doubt your answer is the same,
It so fell out, and so by chance it came. Blackmore.

DOUBTER. n. f. [from doubt.] One who entertains scruples; one who hangs in uncertainty.

DOUBTFUL. adj. [doubt and full]

Milton.

2. Ambiguous; not clear in its meaning: as, a doubtful expression.

3. That about which there is doubt, that which is not yet determined or decided; obscure; questionable; uncertain.

In handling the right of a war, I am not willing to intermix matter doubtful with that which is out of doubt; for as in capital causes, wherein but one man's life is in question, the evidence ought to be clear; so much more in a judgment upon a war, which is capital to thousands. Bacon.

In doubtful cases, reason still determines for the safer side; especially if the case be not only doubtful, but also highly concerning, and the venture be a soul, and an eternity. Soub.

Themetes first, 'tis doubtful whether hir'd,
Or so the Trojan destiny requir'd,
Mov'd that the ramparts might be broken down.
Dryden.

4. Hazardous; of uncertain event.

We have sustain'd one day in doubtful fight,
What heav'n's high Lord had pow'r to rule. Milton.
New counsels to debate

What doubtful may ensue. Milton.

Our manner is always to cast a doubtful and a more suspicious eye towards that, over which we know we have least power. Hooker, Dedication.

6. Not confident; not without fear.

With doubtful feet, and wavering resolution,
I come, still dreading thy displeasure, Samson. Milt.
This was at first resolved

If we were wise, against so great a foe
Contending, and so doubtful what might fall. Milt.

7. Partaking different qualities.

Looks

Downcast and damp, yet such wherein appear'd
Some glimpse of joy, which on his count'enance cast
Like a doubtful hue. Milton.

DOUBTFULLY, adv. [from doubtful.]

1. Dubiously; irresolutely.
2. Ambiguously; with uncertainty of meaning.

Knowing how doubtfully all allegories may be construed, and this book of mine being a continual allegory, I have thought good to discover the general intention. Spenser.

Nor did the goddess doubtfully declare
Her alter'd mind, and alienated care. Dryden.

DOUBTFULNESS, n. f. [from doubtful.]

1. Dubiousness; suspense; instability of opinion.

Though doubtfulness or uncertainty seems to be a medium between certain truth and certain falsehood in our minds, yet there is no such medium in things themselves. Watts.

2. Ambiguity; uncertainty of meaning.

In arguing, the opponent uses as comprehensive and equivocal terms as he can, to involve his adversary in the doubtfulness of his expressions; and therefore the answerer, on his side, makes it his play to distinguish as much as he can. Locke.

Most of his philosophy is in broken sentences, delivered with much doubtfulness. Baker on Lear.

3. Hazard; uncertainty of event or condition.

DOUBTINGLY, adv. [from doubt.] In a doubting manner; dubiously; without confidence.

Whatever a man imagineth doubtingly, or with fear, must needs do hurt, if imagination have any power at all; for a man representeth that oftener that he feareth, than the contrary. Bacon's N. Hist.

DOUBTLESS, adj. [from doubt.] Free from fear; void of apprehension of danger.

Pretty child, sleep doubtless and secure,
That Hubert, for the wealth of all the world,
Will not offend thee. Shakespeare's King John.

I am doubtless, I can purge Myself of many I am charg'd withal. Shak. H. IV.

DOUBTLESS, adv. Without doubt; without question; unquestionably.

Doubtless he would have made a noble knight. Sb.

All their desires, desires, or expectations the Conqueror had no other means to satisfy, but by the estates of such as had appeared open enemies to him, and doubtless many innocent persons suffered in this kind. Hale's Common Law.

Doubtless many men are finally lost, who yet have no men's sins to answer for but their own. South.

Mountains have been doubtless much higher than they are at present: the rains have washed away the soil, that has left the veins of stones shooting out of them. Woodward.

Doubtless, oh guest! great laud and praise were mine,

If, after social rites and gifts bestow'd,
I stain'd my hospitable hearth with blood. Pope's Od.

- So shews a snowy dove trooping with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows.
Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Say, will the falcon, stooping from above,
Smit with her varying plumage, spare the dove? Pope.

Not half so swift the trembling doves can fly,
When the fierce eagle cleaves the liquid sky;
Not half so swiftly the fierce eagle moves,
When through the skies he drives the trembling doves. Pope.

2. A pigeon.

I have here a dish of doves, that I will bestow upon your worship. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

DOVECOT, n. f. [dove and cot.] A small building in which pigeons are bred and kept.

Like an eagle in a dovecot, I Flutter'd your Volscians in Corioli; Alone I did it. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

DOVEHOUSE, n. f. [dove and house.] A house for pigeons.

The hawk sets up for protector, and makes havoc in the dovehouse. L'Estrange.

But still the dovehouse obstinately stood. Dryden.

DOVETAIL, n. f. [dove and tail.] A form of joining two bodies together, where that which is inserted has the form of a wedge reversed, and therefore cannot fall out.

DOUGH, n. f. [bah, Sax. deegh, Dutch.]

1. The paste of bread, or pies, yet unbaked.

When the gods moulded up the paste of man,
Some of their dough was left upon their hands,
For want of souls, and so they made Egyptians. Dry.

You that from pliant paste would fabrics raise,
Expecting thence to gain immortal praise,
Your knuckles try, and let your sinews know
Their power to kneed, and give the form to dough. King.

2. My cake is DOUGH. My affair has miscarried; my undertaking has never come to maturity.

My cake is dough, but I'll in among the rest;
Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast. Shak.

DOUGHBAKEN, adj. [dough and baked.] Unfinished; not hardened to perfection; soft.

For when, through tasteless flat humility,
In doughbak'd men some harmlessness we see,
'Tis but his phlegm that's virtuous, and not he. Donne.

DOUGHTY, adj. [bohrix, Saxon; daught, virtue, Dutch.]

1. Brave; noble; illustrious; eminent. Used of men and things.

Such restless passion did all night torment
The flatt'ning courage of that fairy knight,
Devising how that doughty tournament
With greatest honour he achieve might. F. Qu.

2. It is now seldom used but ironically, or in burlesque.

If this doughty historian hath any honour or conscience left, he ought to beg pardon. Stillingfleet.

She smil'd to see the doughty hero slain;
But, at her smile, the beau reviv'd again. Pope.

DOUGHY, adj. [from dough.] Unsound; soft; unhardened.

Your son was misl'd with a snipt taffata fellow there, whose villanous saffron would have made all the unbaked and doughy youth of a nation in his colour. Shakespeare.

TO DOUSE, v. a. [duois; but probably it is a cant word formed from the sound.]

To put over head suddenly in the water.

TO DOUSE, v. n. To fall suddenly into the water.

To swing i' th' air, or douse in water. Hudibras.

DOWAGER, n. f. [douairiere, French.]

1. A widow with a jointure.

She lingers my desires,

Like to a stepdame or a dowager,
Long wintering on a young man's revenue. Shak.

Widows have a greater interest in property than either maids or wives; so that it is as unnatural for a dowager as a freeholder to be an enemy to our constitution. Addison.

2. The title given to ladies who survive their husbands.

Catharine no more

Shall be call'd queen; but princess dowager,
And widow to prince Arthur. Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.

DOWDY, n. f. An awkward, ill-dressed, inelegant woman.

Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench;
Dido, a dowdy; Cleopatra, a gipsy; Helen and Hero, slidings and harlots. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.

The bedlam train of lovers use
To enhance the value, and the faults excuse;
And therefore 'tis no wonder if we see
They doat on dowdies and deformity. Dryden.

DOWDY, adj. Awkward.

No housewifery the dowdy creature knew;
To sum up all, her tongue confess'd the shrew. Gay.

DOWER, n. f. [douaire, French.]

DOWERY, n. f. [douaire, French.]

1. That which the wife bringeth to her husband in marriage.

His wife brought in dow'r Cilicia's crown,
And in herself a greater dow'r alone. Dryden.

His only daughter in a stranger's pow'r;
For very want, he could not pay a dow'r. Pope.

Rich, though depriv'd of all her little store,
For who can seize fair virtue's better dow'r? Melmoth.

2. That which the widow possesses.

His patrimonial territories of Flanders were in dow'r to his mother-in-law. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. The gifts of a husband for a wife.

Ask me: never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as you shall say unto me; but give me the damsel to wife. Gen. xxxiv. 12.

4. Endowment; gift.

What spreading virtue, what a sparkling fire,
How great, how plentiful, how rich a dow'r,
Dost thou within this dying flesh inspire! Davies.

DOWERED, adj. [from dower.] Portioned; supplied with a portion.

Will you with those infirmities she owes,
Unfriended, new adapted to our hate,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,

Take her, or leave her? Shakespeare's King Lear.

DOWERLESS, adj. [from dower.] Wanting a fortune; unportioned.

Thy dow'rless daughter, king, thrown to my chance,

Is queen of us, and ours, and our fair France. Shakespeare.

Dowlas, filthy dowlas; I have given them away to bakers wives, and they have made boulders of them. Shakespeare.

DOWN, n. f. [duun, Danish.]

1. Soft feathers.

Virtue is the roughest way;
But proves at night a bed of down. Wotton.

Leave, leave, fair bride! your solitary bed,
No more shall you return to it alone;

It nurseth sadness: and your body's print,
Like to a grave, the yielding down doth dint. Donne.

We tumble on our down, and court the blessing
Of a short minute's slumber. Denham's Sappho.

A tender weakly constitution is very much owing to the use of down beds. Locke.

2. Any thing that soothes or mollifies.

Then bottom softness! down of all my cares!
I could recline my thoughts upon this breast
To a forgetfulness of all my griefs,

And yet be happy. Southern's Orosmane.

3. Soft

3. Soft wool, or tender hair.

I love my husband still;
But love him as he was when youthful grace,
And the first down, be to shade his face. Dryd.
On thy chin the springing beard began
To spread a doubtful down, and promise man. Prior.

4. The soft fibres of plants which wing the seeds.

Any light thing that moveth, when we find no wind, sheweth a wind at hand; as when feathers, or down of thistles, fly to and fro in the air.

Like scatter'd down, by howling Eurus blown
By rapid whirlwinds from his mansion thrown. Sandys.

DOWN. n. f. [bun, Saxon; dnne, Erse, a hill.] A large open plain; properly a flat on the top of an hill.

On the downs we see, near Wilton fair,
A hasten'd hare from greedy greyhound go. Sidney.
Lord of much riches which the use renouns;
Seven thousand broad-tail'd sheep graz'd on his downs. Sandys.

Not all the fleecy wealth
That doth enrich those downs is worth a thought,
To this my errand, and the care it brought. Milt.
Hills afford pleasant prospects; as they must needs acknowledge who have been on the downs of Sussex. Ray.

How Will-a-wisp misleads night-faring clowns
O'er hills, and sinking bogs, and pathless downs. Gay.

To compass this, his building is a town,
His pond an ocean, his parterre a down. Pope.

DOWN. prep. [abuna, Saxon.]

1. Along a descent; from a higher place to a lower.

Let go thy hold when a great wheel runs down hill, lest it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes upward, let him draw after. Shakespeare's King Lear.

A man falling down a precipice, though in motion, is not at liberty, because he cannot stop that motion if he would. Locke.

2. Towards the mouth of a river.

Mahomet put his chief substance into certain boats, to be conveyed down the river, as purposing to fly. Knolles.

DOWN. adv. Not up.

1. On the ground; from the height at which any thing was to a lower situation.

Whom they hit, none on their feet might stand,
Though standing else as rock; but down they fell
By thousands. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Down links the giant with a thund'ring sound,
His pond'rous limbs oppresses the trembling ground. Dryden.

2. Tending towards the ground.

—The moon is down; I have not heard the clock,
And she goes down at twelve. Shakep. Macbeth.

5. To a total subjection: used of men and things.

What remains of the subject, after the decoction, is continued to be boiled down, with the addition of fresh water, to a sp'd at. Arbuth. on Ailm.

6. Into disgrace; into declining reputation.

He shar'd our dividend o' th' crown,
We had so painfully preach'd down;
And forc'd us, though against the grain,
To have calls to preach it up again. Hudibras.
It has been still preached up, but acted down;
and dealt with as the eagle in the fable did with the oyster, carrying it up on high, that, by letting it fall, he might dash it in pieces. South.
There is not a more melancholy object in the learned world, than a man who had written himself down. Addison.

7. [answering to up.] Here and there.

Let them wander up and down for meat, and grudge if they be not satisfied. Psalms lix. 15.

DOWN. interj.

1. An exhortation to destruction or demolition.

Go, some pull down the Savoy; others to the inns of court: down with them all. Shakespeare.

Wanton languishing borrowed of her eyes the downcast look of modesty. Sidney.

My wily nurse by long experience found,
And first discover'd to my soul its wound;
'Tis love, said she; and then my downcast eyes,
And guilty dumbness, witness'd my surprize. Dryden.

Thy downcast looks, and thy disorder'd thoughts,
Tell me thy fate: I ask not the success
My cause has found. Addison's Cato.

DO'WNFALL. n. f. [from down and fall.]

1. Ruin; calamity; fall from rank or state.

Why dost thou say king Richard is depos'd?
Darest thou, thou little better thing than earth,
Divine his downfall? Shakespeare's Richard II.
We have seen some, by the ways by which they had designed to rise uncontrollably, to have directly procured their utter downfall. South.

2. A sudden fall, or body of things falling.

Each downfall of a flood the mountains pour
From their rich bowels, rolls a silver stream. Dryd.

3. Destruction of fabricks.

Not more aghast the matrons of renown,
When tyrant Nero burn'd th' imperial town,
Shrick'd for the downfall in a doleful cry,
For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die. Dryden.

or going to rest.

Thou knowest my downsitting and mine uprising; thou understandest my thoughts afar off. Psalms cxxxix. 2.

DO'WNWARD. } adv. [downward, Sax.]

1. Towards the centre.

As you lift up the glasses, the drop will ascend slower and slower, and at length rest, being carried downward by its weight as much as upwards by the attraction. Newton.

2. From a higher situation to a lower.

Look downward on that globe, whose hither side,
With light from hence, shines. Milton.

Hills are ornamental to the earth, affording pleasant prospects to them that look downward from them upon the subjacent countries. Ray on the Creation.

What would this man? Now upward will he soar,

And, little less than angel, would be more:
Now, looking downward, just as griev'd appears
To want the strength of bulls, the fur of bears. Pope.

3. In a course of successive or lineal descent.

A ring the count does wear,
That downward hath succeeded in his house,
From son to son, some four or five descents. Shak.

DO'WNWARD. adj.

1. Moving on a declivity; tending towards the centre; tending to the ground.

- With downward force,
That drove the sand along, he took his way,
And roll'd his yellow billows to the sea. Dryden.

When Aurora leaves our northern sphere,
She lights the downward heaven, and rises there. Dryden.
3. Depressed; dejected.
At the lowest of my downward thoughts, I pulled up my heart to remember, that nothing is achieved before it be thoroughly attempted, and that lying still doth never go forward. Sidney.
- DO'WNY. adj. [from down.]
1. Covered with down or nap.
By his gates of breath
There lies a downy feather, which stirs not:
Did he suspire, that light and weightless down
Perforce must move. Shakespeare.
There be plants that have prickles, yet have downy or velvet rind upon their leaves, as stock-gillyflowers and coltsfoot; which down or nap consisteth of a subtle spirit, in a soft substance.
Bacon's Natural History.
In her hand she held
A bough of fairest fruit, that downy smil'd,
New gather'd, and ambrosial smell diffus'd. Milt.
2. Made of down or soft feathers.
A side breeze from westward waits their sails to fill,
And rests in those high beds his downy wings. Dryden.
Belinda still her downy pillow prest,
Her guardian sylph prolong'd the balmy rest. Pope.
3. Soft; tender; soothing.
Banquo! Donalbain! Malcolm! awake!
Shake off this downy sleep, death's counterfeit,
And look on death itself. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The night's companion kindly cheating them
Of all their cares, tam'd the rebellious eye
Of sorrow with a soft and downy hand,
Sealing all breasts in a lethean band. Crashaw.

- DRAFF. n. f. [dror, dirty, Saxon; dras, Dutch, the sediment of ale.]
1. Refuse; lees; dregs: properly something fluid.
You would think I had a hundred and fifty tatter'd prodigals lately come from swinekeeping, from eating drass and husks. Shakesp. Henry IV.
'Twere simple fury, still thyself to waste
On such as have no taste;
To offer them a surfeit of pure bread
Whose appetite is dead!
No, give them grains their fill;
Husks, drass, to drink and swill. Ben Jonson.
I call'd and drew them thither,
My heel-hounds to lick up the drass and filth,
Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed
On what was pure. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,
Till vermin, or the drass of servile food, Consume me. Milton's Agonistes.

net, and caught nothing, had a draught towards the evening, which put them in hope of a sturgeon at last.

L'Estrange.

One of our late great poets is sunk in his reputation, because he could never forgive any conceit which came in his way, but swept, like a dragnet, great and small.

Dryden.

Whatsoever old Time, with his huge dragnet, has conveyed down to us along the stream of ages,
whether it be shells or shellfish, jewels or pebbles, sticks or straws, seaweeds or mud, these are the ancients, these are the fathers.

Watts.

DREAM. n. f. [droom, Dutch. This word is derived by Merle Casaubon, with
Vol. I.

more ingenuity than truth, from δῆμα τοῦ βίου, the comedy of life; dreams being, as plays are, a representation of something which does not really happen.
This conceit Junius has enlarged by quoting an epigram:

Συνοῖς μάς ὁ β. & αἰώνιος ἡ μάς πᾶσιζειν,
Τὴν σπουδὴν μεταδίδει, ἢ φέρει τὰς ὁδούς.
Antbol.]

1. A phantasm of sleep; the thoughts of a sleeping man.

We eat our meat in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of those terrible dreams
That shake us nightly. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
In dreams they fearful precipices tread;
Or, shipwreck'd, labour to some distant shore.
Dryden.

Glorious dreams stand ready to restore
The pleasing shapes of all you saw before. Dryden.

2. An idle fancy; a wild conceit; a groundless suspicion.

Let him keep
A hundred knights; yes, that on ev'ry dream,

Ev'n to the dregs and squeezings of the brain.

Pope.

2. Any thing by which purity is corrupted.

The king by this journey purged a little the dregs and leaven of the northern people, that were before in no good affections towards him.

Bacon.

3. Dross; sweepings; refuse.

Heav'n's favourite thou, for better fates design'd
Than we, the dregs and rubbish of mankind.

Dryd.

What diffidence we must be under whether God will regard our sacrifice, when we have nothing to offer him but the dregs and refuse of life, the days of leathing and satiety, and the years in which we have no pleasure.

Rogers.

To DRAIN. v. n. [See DRAIN.] To empty.
The same with drain: spelt differ-ently perhaps by chance.

She is the sluice of her lady's secrets: 'tis but setting her mill a going, and I can drain her of

If any of your cattle are infected, speedily let both sick and well blood, and drench them.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

DRENCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A draught; a swill: by way of abhor-rence or contempt.

Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench

Of that forgetful lake benumb not still,

That in our proper motion we ascend.

Milton.

2. Physick for a brute.

A drench is a potion or drink prepared for a sick horse, and composed of several drugs in a liquid form.

Farrier's Dict.

Harry, says she, how many hast thou kill'd today? Give my roan horse a drench, says he; and answers, fourteen, an hour after.

Shak. Hen. IV.

A drench of wine has with success been us'd,
And through a horn the gen'rous juice infus'd.

Dryden.

3. Physick that must be given by violence.

Their counsels are more like a drench that must be poured down, than a draught which must be leisurely drank if I liked it.

King Charles.

4. A channel of water.

DRENCHER. n. s. [from drench.]

1. One that dips or steepens any thing.

2. One that gives physick by force.

DRENT. participle. Probably corrupted from drenched, to make a proverbial rhyme to brent, or burnt.

In danger rather to be drent than brent?

Fairy Q.

To DRESS. v. a. [dresser, French.]

1. To clothe; to invest with clothes.

The first request

He made, was, like his brothers to be dress'd;
And, as his birth requir'd, above the rest.

Dryd.

2. To clothe pompously or elegantly. It is used with up and out to enforce it.

Look upon pleasures not upon that side that is next the sun, or where they look beautifully;
that is, as they come towards you to be enjoyed;
for then they paint and smile, and dress themselves up in tinsel, and glass gems, and counterfeit imagery.

Taylor.

Few admir'd the native red and white,
Till poets dress'd them up to charm the sight.

Dryden.

Lollia Paulina wore, in jewels, when dress'd out,
the value of three hundred twenty-two thousand nine hundred and sixteen pounds thirteen shillings and four-pence.

Arbutnot.

3. To adorn; to deck; to embellish; to furnish.

Where was a fine room in the middle of the house, handsomely dress'd up, for the commissioners to sit in.

Clarendon.

Skill is used in dressing up power with all the splendour absoluteness can add to it.

Locke.

The mind loses its natural relish of real truth, and is reconciled insensibly to any thing that can be dress'd up into any faint appearance of it.

Locke.

4. To cover a wound with medicaments.

In time of my sickness another chirurgeon dress'd her.

Wise man.

5. To curry; to rub; a term of the stable.

Our infirmities are so many, that we are forced to dress and tend horses and asses, that they may help our needs.

Three hundred horses, in high stables fed,
Stood ready, shining all, and smoothly dress'd.

Dryden's Aeneid.

6. To break or teach a horse: a term of horsemanship.

A steed

Well mouth'd well manag'd, which himself did dress;

His aid in war, his ornament in peace.

Dryden.

7. To rectify; to adjust.

Adam! well may we labour still to dress

This garden; still to tend plant, herb, and flow'r.

Milton.

Well must the ground be digg'd, and better
dress'd,

New soil to make, and meliorate the rest.

Dryd.

8. To prepare for any purpose.

In Orkney they dress their leather with roots of tormentil, instead of bark.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

9. To trim; to fit any thing for ready use.

When he dresses the lamps he shall burn incense.

Exod. xxx.

When you dress your young hops, cut away roots or sprigs.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

10. To prepare victuals for the table.

Thus the voluptuous youth, bred up to dress
For his fat grandfire some delicious mess,
In feeding high his tutor will surpass,
An heir apparent of the gourmand race.

Dryden.

DRESS. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Clothes; garment; habit.

Dresser laughed at in our forefathers wardrobes or pictures, when, by the circulation of time and vanity they are brought about, we think becoming.

Government of the Tongue.

A robe obscene was o'er his shoulders thrown,
A dress by fates and furies worn alone.

Pope's Statius.

2. Splendid clothes; habit of ceremony.

Full dress creates dignity, augments consciousness, and keeps at distance an encroacher.

Clarissa.

3. The skill of adjusting dress.

The men of pleasure, dress, and gallantry.

Pope.

DRESSER. n. s. [from dress.]

1. One employed in putting on the clothes and adorning the person of another.

She hurries all her hand-maids to the task;
Her head alone will twenty dressers ask.

Dryden's Juvenal.

2. One employed in regulating, trimming, or adjusting any thing.

Said he unto the dresser of his vineyard, Behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig-tree, and find none.

Luke.

3. The bench in a kitchen on which meat is dress'd or prepared for the table.

'Tis burnt, and so is all the meat:
What dogs are these! Where is the rascal cook?
How durst you, villains! bring it from the dresser,
And serve it thus to me that love it not?

Shak.

A maple dresser in her hall she had,
On which full many a slender meal she made.

Dryden.

When you take down dishes, tip a dozen upon the dresser.

Swift's Directions to the Cook.

DRESSING. n. s. [from dress.] The application made to a fore.

The second day after we took off the dressings, and found an eschar made by the catheterick.

Wise man on Tumours.

The room in which clothes are put on.

Latin books might be found every day in his dressing-room, if it were carefully searched.

Swift.

DREST. part. [from dress.]

In flow'ry wreaths the royal virgin drest
His bending horns, and kindly clapt his breast.

Addison.

To DRIB. v. a. [contracted from dribble.]

To crop; to cut off; to defalcate. A cant word.

Merchants gains come short of half the mart;
For he who drives their bargains dribs a part.

Dryden.

To DRIBBLE. v. n. [This word seems to have come from drop by successive alterations, such as are usual in living languages: drop, drip, dripple, dribble, from thence drivel and driveller. Drip may indeed be the original word, from the Danish drypp.]

1. To fall in drops.

Semilunar processes on the surface owe their form to the dribbling of water that passed over it.

Woodward on Fossils.

A dribbling, difficulty, and a momentary suppression of urine, may be caused by the stone's shutting up the orifice of the bladder.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

and dribble it all the way up stairs.

Swift's Rules to Servants.

DRIBLET.

DRIBLET. n. f. [from dribble.] A small sum; odd money in a sum.

Twelve long years of exile borne,
Twice twelve we number'd since his blest return;
So strictly wert thou just to pay,
Even to the dribble of a day. Dryden.

DRYEA. n. f. [from dry.] That which has the quality of absorbing moisture; a desiccative.

There is a tale, that boiling of daisy roots in milk, which it is certain are great driers, will make dogs little. Bacon.

DRIFT. n. f. [from drive.]

1. Force impellent; impulse; overbearing influence.

A man being under the drift of any passion, will still follow the impulse of it till something interpose, and, by a stronger impulse, turn him another way. South.

2. Violence; course.

The mighty trunk, half rent with rugged rift,
Doth roll adown the rocks, and fall with fearful drift. Fairy Queen.

3. Any thing driven at random.

Some log, perhaps, upon the waters swam,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,
And criss some riv'let passage did begin. Dryden.

4. Any thing driven or born along in a body.

The ready racers stand;
Swift as on wings of wind upborne they fly,
And drifts of rising dust involve the sky. Pope's Odyssey.

5. A storm; a shower.

Our thunder from the south
Shall rain their drift of bullets on this town. Shakespeare.

6. A heap or stratum of any matter thrown together by the wind: as, a snowdrift, a deep body of snow.

7. Tendency or aim of action.

The particular drift of every act, proceeding eternally from God, we are not able to discern; and therefore cannot always give the proper and certain reason of his works. Hooker.

Their drift comes known, and they discover'd are;

For some, of many, will be false of course. Daniel.

8. Scope of a discourse.

The main drift of his book being to prove, that what is true is impossible to be false, he opposes nobody. Tilletson.

The drift of the pamphlet is to stir up our compassion towards the rebels. Addison.

This, by the stile, the manner, and the drift, 'Twas thought could be the work of none but Swift. Swift.

TO DRIFT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drive; to urge along.

Snow, no larger than so many grains of sand, drifted with the wind in clouds from every plain. Ellis's Voyage.

2. To throw together on heaps. Not authorized.

From hill to dale, still more and more astray,
Impatient bounding through the drifted heaps. Thomson.

TO DRILL. v. a. [drillen, Dutch; drilian, Sax. from drugh, through.]

1. To pierce any thing with a drill.

The drill-plate is only a piece of flat iron, fixed upon a flat board, which iron hath an hole punched a little way into it, to set the blunt end of the shank of the drill in, when you drill a hole. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

2. To perforate; to bore; to pierce.

My body through and through he drill'd,
And Whacum by my side lay kill'd. Mudibras.

Tell, what could drill and perforate the poles,
And to th' attractive rays adapt their holes. Blackmore.

3. To make a hole.

When a hole is drilled in a piece of metal, they hold the drill-bow in their right hand; but, when they turn small work, they hold the drill-bow in their left hand. Moxon.

4. To delay; to put off: in low phrase; corrupted, I believe, from drawled.

She has bubbled him out of his youth: she drilled him on to five-and-fifty, and she will drop him in his old age. Addison.

5. To draw from step to step. A low phrase.

When by such insinuations they have once got within him, and are able to drill him on from one lewdness to another, by the same arts they corrupt and squeeze him. South.

6. To drain; to draw slowly. This sense wants better authority.

Drill'd through the sandy stratum every way,
The waters with the sandy stratum rise. Thomson.

7. To form to arms; to teach the military exercise. An old cant word.

The foe appear'd drawn up and drill'd,
Ready to charge them in the field. Mudibras.

DRILL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An instrument with which holes are bored. It is a point pressed hard against the thing bored, and turned round with a bow and string.

The way of tempering steel to make gravers, drills, and mechanical instruments, we have taught artificers. Boyle.

Drills are used for the making such holes as punches will not serve for; as a piece of work that hath already its shape, and must have an hole made in it. Moxon.

2. An ape; a baboon.

Shall the difference of hair be a mark of a different internal specifick constitution between a changeling and a drill, when they agree in shape and want of reason? Locke.

3. A small dribbling brook. This I have found no where else, and suspect it should be rill.

Springs through the pleasant meadows pour their drills,
Which snake-like glide between the bordering hills. Sandys.

And forc'd himself to drive, but lov'd to draw. Dryden.

15. To impel by influence of passion.

I draw my suitor from his mad humour of love to a living humour of madness. Shak. As you like it.
Discontents draw men into slidings. K. Charles,
Lord Cottington, being master of temper, and of the most profound dissimulation, knew too well how to lead him into a mistake, and then drive him into choler. Clarendon.

It is better to marry than to burn, says St. Paul;
where we may see what drives men into a conjugal life: a little burning pushes us more powerfully than greater pleasures in prospect. Locke.

16. To urge; to press to a conclusion.

The experiment of wood that shineth in the dark, we have diligently driven and pursued; the rather for that, of all things that give light here below, it is the most durable, and hath least apparent motion. Bacon's Natural History.

We have thus the proper notions of the four elements, and both them and their qualities driven up and resolved into their most simple principles. Digby on Bodies.

they forthwith drove out their governour, and received the Turks into the town. Knolles's History.

To DRIVE. v. n.

1. To go as impelled by any external agent.

The needle endeavours to conform unto the meridian; but, being distracted, drives that way where the greater and powerfuller part of the earth is placed. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Love, fixt to one, still safe at anchor rides,
And dares the fury of the winds and tides;
But losing once that hold, to the wide ocean born,
It drives away at will, to every wave a scorn. Dryd.
Nor with the rising storm would vainly strive;
But left the helm, and let the vessel drive. Dryden's Aeneid.

2. To rush with violence.

Fierce Boreas drove against his flying sails,
And rent the sheets. Dryden's Aeneid.

Near as he draws, thick harbingers of smoke
With gloomy pillars cover all the place;

Timbosa, their hives in clusters. Dryd. Don Sebast.
While thus he stood,
Perithous' dart drove on, and nail'd him to the wood. Dryden.

As a ship, which winds and waves assail,
Now with the current drives, now with the gale;
She feels a double force, by turns obeys
Th' imperious tempest, and th' impetuous seas. Dryden.

The wolves scampered away, however, as hard as they could drive. L'Estrange.

Thick as autumnal leaves, or driving sand,
The moving squadrons blacken all the strand. Pope's Iliad.

3. To pass in a carriage!

There is a litter ready; lay him in 't;
And drive tow'rd Dover. Shakesp. King Lear.
Thy flaming chariot-wheels, that shook Heav'n's everlasting frame, while o'er the necks
Thou drow'st of warring angels disarray'd. Milton.

4. To tend to; to consider as the scope and ultimate design.

Authors drive at these, as the highest elegancies, which are but the frigidities of wit. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

We cannot widely mistake his discourse, when we have found out the point he drives at. Locke.
They look no further before them than the next line; whence it will inevitably follow, that they can drive to no certain point, but ramble from one subject to another. Dryden.

We have done our work, and are come within view of the end that we have been driving at. Addison on the War.

5. To aim; to strike at with fury.

To DRIV'EL. v. n. [from drip, driple, dribble, drivel.]

1. To flaver; to let the spittle fall in drops, like a child, an idiot, or a doltard.

I met with this Chremes, a driveling old fellow, lean, shaking both of head and hands, already half earth, and yet then most greedy of earth. Sidney.

No man could spit from him, but would be forced to drivel like some paralytic or a fool.

Grew.

2. To be weak or foolish; to dote.

This driveling love is like a great natural, that runs lolling up and down to hide his bauble.

Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

I hate to see a brave bold fellow sorted,
Made sour and senseless, turn'd to whey, by love;
A driveling hero, fit for a romance. Dryden.

DRIV'EL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Slaver; moisture shed from the mouth.

Besides th' eternal drivel, that supplies
The dropping beard, from nostrils, mouth, and eyes.

Dryden.

2. A fool; an idiot; a driveller. This sense is now out of use.

What fool am I, to mingle that drivel's speeches among my noble thoughts! Sidney.

Millions of years this old drivel Cupid lives, While still more wretch, more wicked, he doth prove. Sidney.

DRIV'ELLER. n. f. [from drivel.] A fool;
an idiot; a flaverer.

I have heard the arrantest drivellers commended for their shrewdness, even by men of tolerable judgment. Swift.

DRIV'EN. Participle of drive.

They were driven forth from among men.

Job, xxx. 5.

DRIV'ER. n. f. [from drive.]

1. The person or instrument who gives any motion by violence.

2. One who drives beasts.

He from the many-peopled city flies;
Contemns their labours, and the driver's cries.

Sandys.

The driver runs up to him immediately, and beats him almost to death. L'Estrange.

The multitude or common rout, like a drove of sheep, or an herd of oxen, may be managed by any noise or cry which their driver shall accustom them to. South.

3. One who drives a carriage.

Not the fierce driver with more fury lends
The sounding lash, and, ere the stroke descends,
Low to the wheels his pliant body bends. Dryden's Virg.

To DRIZZLE. v. a. [drifeln, German, to shed dew.] To shed in small flow drops, as winter rains.

When the sun sets, the air doth drizzle dew. Sb.

Though now this face of mine be hid
In sap-consuming winter's drizzled snow,
And all the conduits of my blood froze up,
Yet hath my night of life some memory. Shaksp.

To DRIZZLE. v. n. To fall in short flow drops.

And drizzling drops, that often do redound,
The firmest flint doth in continuance wear. Spenser.

Her heart did melt in great compassion,
And drizzling tears did shed for pure affection.

Fairy Queen.

This day will pour down,
If I conjecture aught, no drizzling show'r,
But rattling storm of arrows barb'd with fire. Milt.

The neighbouring mountains, by reason of their height, are more exposed to the dews and drizzling rains than any of the adjacent parts. Addis. on Italy.

DRIZZLY. adj. [from drizzle.] Shedding small rain.

This during winter's drizzly reign be done,
Till the new ram receives th' exalted sun.

Dryden's Virgil.

DROIL. n. f. [by Junius understood a contraction of drivel.] A drone; a slug-gard.

To DROIL. v. n. To work sluggishly and slowly; to plod.

Let such vile vassals, born to base vocation,
Drudge in the world, and for their living droil,
Which have no wit to live withouten toyle. Spenser.

Desuetude does contract and narrow our faculties, so that we can apprehend only those things in which we are conversant: the droiling peasant scarce thinks there is any world beyond the neighbouring markets. Government of the Tongue.

DROLL. n. f. [droler, French.]

1. One whose business is to raise mirth by petty tricks; a jester; a buffoon; a jackpudding.

As he was running home in all haste, a droll takes him up by the way. L'Estrange.

Why, how now, Andrew? cries his brother droll;
To-day's conceit, methinks, is something dull.

Prior.

Democritus, dear droll! revisit earth,
And with our follies glut thy heighten'd mirth. Prior.

2. A farce; something exhibited to raise mirth.

Some as justly fame extols,
For lofty lines in Smithfield drolls. Swift.

To DROLL. v. n. [drôle, Fr.] To jest;
to play the buffoon.

Such august designs as inspire your inquiries, used to be decided by drolling fantasticks, that have only wit enough to make others and themselves ridiculous. Glanville.

Men that will not be reasoned into their senses,
may yet be laughed or drolled into them.

L'Estrange.

Let virtuosos insult and despise on, yet they never shall be able to droll away nature. South.

DROLLERY. n. f. [from droll.] Idle jokes; buffoonery.

They hang between heaven and hell, borrow the christians faith, and the atheists drollery upon it.

Government of the Tongue.

DROMEDARY. n. f. [dromedare, Ital.]

A sort of camel so called from its swiftness, because it is said to travel a hundred miles a-day.
Dromedaries are smaller than common camels,
fenderer, and more nimble; and are of two kinds:
one larger, with two small bunches, covered with hair, on its back; the other lesser, with one hairy eminence, and more frequently called camel:
both are capable of great fatigue. Their hair is soft and thorn: they have no fangs and foreteeth, nor horn upon their feet, which are only covered with a fleshy skin; and they are about seven feet and a half high, from the ground to the top of their heads. See CAMEL. Culmet.

Straw for the horses and dromedaries brought they unto the place. 1 Kings.

Mules, after these camels and dromedaries,
And waggons fraught with utensils of war. Milton

DRONE. n. f. [broen, Saxon.]

1. The bee which makes no honey, and is therefore driven out by the rest.

The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale

The lazy yawning drone. Shaksp. Henry V.

Luxurious kings are to their people lost;
They live, like drones, upon the publick cost.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.

All, with united force, combine to drive
The lazy drones from the laborious hive.

Dryden's Virgil.

2. A sluggard; an idler.

He sleeps by day

More than the wild cat: drones hive not with me,
Therefore I part with him. Shakespeare.

Sit idle on the household hearth,
A burd'nous drone, to visitants a gaze. Milton.

It is my misfortune to be married to a drone, who lives upon what I get, without bringing any thing into the common stock. Addis.

3. The hum, or instrument of humming.

Here while his canting drone-pipe scan'd
The mystic figures of her hand,

He tipples palmistry, and dines.

On all her fortune-telling lines. Cleaveland.

To DRONE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To live in idleness; to dream.

What have I lost by my forefathers fault!
Why was not I the twentieth by descent
From a long restive race of droning kings? Dryd.

2. To give a heavy dull tone.

Melfoil and honeysuckles pound,
With these alluring favours strew the ground,

And mix with tinkling brass the cymbal's droning sound. Dryden.

DRONISH. adj. [from drone.] Idle; sluggish; dreaming; lazy; indolent; un-active.

The dronish monks, the scorn and shame of manhood,

Rouse and prepare once more to take possession,
To nestle in their ancient hives again. Rowe.

To DROOP. v. n. [droef, sorrow, Dutch.]

1. To languish with sorrow.

Conceiving the dishonour of his mother,
He straight declin'd, droop'd, took it deeply;
Fasten'd and fix'd the shai on't in himself. Shak.

I droop, with struggling spent;
My thoughts are on my sorrows bent. Sandys.

2. To faint; to grow weak; to be dispirited.

I find my zenith doth depend upon
A most auspicious star; whose influence

If now I court not, but omit, my fortunes
Will ever after droop. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Good things of day begin to droop and drowse,
While night's black agents to their prey do rouse,

Shakespeare.

When by impulse from heav'n Tyrtæus sung,
In drooping soldiers a new courage sprung. Roscom.

Can flow'rs but droop in absence of the sun,
Which wak'd their sweets? and mine, alas! is gone. Dryden.

Time seems not now beneath his years to stoop,
Nor do his wings with sickly feathers droop. Dryd.

When factious rage to cruel exile drove
The queen of beauty and the court of love,

The muses droop'd with their forsaken arts. Dryd.

I'll animate the soldiers drooping courage
With love of freedom and contempt of life.

Addison's Cato.

I saw him ten days before he died, and observed
he began very much to droop and languish. Swift.

3. To sink; to lean downwards: commonly by weakness or grief.

I never from thy side henceforth must stray,
Where'er our day's work lies; though now enjoin'd

Laborious, till day droop. Milton's Paradise Lost.

His head, though gay,
Carnation, purple, azure, or speck'd with gold,

Hung drooping, unsustain'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

On her heav'd bosom hung her drooping head,
Which with a sigh she rais'd, and this she said.

Pope.

DROP. n. f. [broppa, Saxon.]

1. A globule of moisture; as much liquor as falls at once when there is not a continual stream.

Meet we the medicine of our country's weal,
And with him pour we, in our country's purge,

Each drop of us. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Whereas Aristotle tells us, that if a drop of wine be put into ten thousand measures of water, the wine,

wine, being overpowered by so vast a quantity of water, will be turned into it; he speaks very improbably. Boyle.

Admiring in the gloomy shade,
Those little drops of light. Waller.

Had I but known that Sancho was his father,
I would have pour'd a deluge of my blood
To save one drop of his. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

2. Diamond hanging in the ear.
The drops to thee, Brillante, we consign;
And, Momentilla, let the watch be thine. Pope.

DROP SERENE. n. f. [gutta serena, Lat.]
A disease of the eye, proceeding from an inspissation of the humour.

So thick a drop serene hath quench'd their orbs,
Or dim suffusion veil'd! Milton's Paradise Lost.

To DROP. v. a. [bnoppa, Saxon.]

1. To pour in drops or single globules.
His heavens shall drop down dew. Deut. xxxiii. 28.

2. To let fall from a higher place.
Others o'er chimney tops and turrets row,
And drop their anchors on the meads below. Dryd.

One only hag remain'd:
Propp'd on her trusty staff, not half upright,
And dropp'd an aukward court'ry to the knight. Dryden.

St. John himself will scarce forbear
To bite his pen and drop a tear. Swift.

3. To let go; to dismiss from the hand, or the possession.

Though I could
With barefac'd power sweep him from my sight,
And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not,
For certain friends that are both his and mine,
Whose loves I may not drop. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Those who have assumed visible shapes for a season, can hardly be reckoned among this order of compounded beings; because they drop their bodies, and divest themselves of those visible shapes. Watts's Logick.

4. To utter slightly or casually.
Drop not thy word against the house of Isaac. Amos.

5. To infer indirectly, or by way of digression.

St. Paul's epistles contain nothing but points of Christian instruction, amongst which he seldom fails to drop in the great and distinguishing doctrines of our holy religion. Locke.

6. To intermit; to cease.

Where the act is unmanly or immoral, we ought to drop our hopes, or rather never entertain them. Collier on Despair.

After having given this judgment in its favour, they suddenly drop the pursuit. Shaksp. Surgery.

7. To quit a master.

I have beat the hoof till I have worn out these shoes in your service, and not one penny left me to buy more; so that you must even excuse me if I drop you here. L'Estrange.

8. To let go a dependant, or companion, without farther association.

She drilled him on to five-and-fifty, and will drop him in his old age, if she can find her account in another. Addison.

They have no sooner fetched themselves up to the fashion of the polite world, but the town has dropped them. Addison.

Mention either of the kings of Spain or Poland, and he talks notably; but if you go out of the Gazette, you drop him. Addison.

9. To suffer to vanish, or come to nothing.

Thus was the same of our Saviour perpetuated by such records as would preserve the traditionary account of him to after-ages; and rectify it, if, by passing through several generations, it might drop any part that was material. Addison.

Opinions, like fashions, always descend from those of quality to the middle sort, and thence to the vulgar, where they are dropped and vanish. Swift.

10. To bedrop; to speckle; to variegate with spots, Variis stellatus corpora guttis.

Or sporting, with quick glance,
Shew to the sun their wav'd coats, dropp'd with gold. Milton.

To DROP. v. n.

1. To fall in drops, or single globules.

The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath. Shak. Merch. of Venice.

2. To let drops fall; to discharge itself in drops.

The heavens dropped at the presence of God. Psalms lxvii. 8.

While cumber'd with my dropping cloaths I lay,
The cruel nation, covetous of prey,
Stain'd with my blood th' unhospitable coast. Dryden's Æneid.

Beneath a rock he sigh'd alone,
And cold Lycæus wept from every dropping stone. Dryden.

3. To fall; to come from a higher place.

Philosophers conjecture that you dropped from the moon, or one of the stars. Gulliver's Travels.

In every revolution, approaching nearer and nearer to the sun, this comet must at last drop into the sun's body. Chryse.

4. To fall spontaneously.

So mayst thou live, till, like ripe fruit, thou drop Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease
Gather'd, not harshly pluck'd. Milton.

5. To fall in death; to die suddenly.

It was your presumptuous,
That in the dole of blows your son might drop. Shaksp. Macbeth.

6. To die.

Nothing, says Seneca, so soon reconciles us to the thoughts of our own death, as the prospect of one friend after another dropping round us. Digby to Pope.

7. To sink into silence; to vanish; to come to nothing: a familiar phrase.

Virgil's friends thought fit to let drop this incident of Helen. Addison's Travels.

I heard of threats occasioned by my verses: I sent to acquaint them where I was to be found, and so it dropped. Pope.

8. To come unexpectedly.

Either you come not here, or, as you grace
Some old acquaintance, drop into the place,
Careless and qualmish, with a yawning face. Dryden.

He could never make any figure in company, but by giving disturbance at his entry: and therefore takes care to drop in when he thinks you are just seated. Spectator, No 448.

9. To fall short of a mark.

Often it drops or overshoots by the disproportions of distance or application. Collier.

DROPSICAL. adj. [from dropsy.] Diseased with a dropsy; hydropical; tending to a dropsy.

The diet of nephritick and dropsical persons ought to be such as is opposite to, and subdueth, the alkalescent nature of the salts in the serum of the blood. Arbutnot on Aliments.

DRO'PIED. adj. [from dropsy.] Diseased with a dropsy.

Where great addition swells, and virtuenone,
It is a dropp'd honour: good alone
Is good. Shaksp. All's well that ends well.

DROPSY. n. f. [hydrops, Latin; whence anciently hydropisy, thence dropisy, drop- sy.] A collection of water in the body,

from too lax a tone of the solids, whereby digestion is weakened, and all the parts stuffed. Quincy.

An anasarca, a species of dropsy, is an extravasation of water lodged in the cells of the membrana adiposa. Sharp.

DROSS. n. f. [bnor, Saxon.]

1. The recrement or depuration of metals.

Some scumm'd the dross that from the metal came,
Some stirr'd the molten ore with ladles great,
And every one did swink, and every one did sweat. Spenser.

Should the mixture of a little dross constrain the church to deprive herself of so much gold, rather than learn how, by art and judgment, to make separation of the one from the other? Hawker.

2. Rust; incrustation upon metal.

An emperor, hid under a crust of dross, after cleansing, has appeared with all his titles fresh and beautiful. Addison.

3. Refuse; leavings; sweepings; any thing remaining after the removal of the better part; dregs; feculence; corruption.

Fairproud, now tell me why should fair be proud,
Sith all world's glory is but dross unclean;
And in the shade of death itself shall shroud,
However now thereof ye little ween? Spenser.

That most divine light only shineth on those minds which are purged from all worldly dross and human uncleanness. Raleigh.

All treasures and all gain esteem as dross,
And dignities and pow'rs, all but the highest. Milt.

Such precepts exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights. Tillotson.

DRO'SSINESS. n. f. [from drossy.] Foul-ness; feculence; rust.

The furnace of affliction refines us from earthly drossiness, and softens us for the impression of God's stamp. Boyle.

DRO'SSY. adj. [from dross.]

1. Full of scorious or recrementitious parts; full of dross.

So doth the fire the drossy gold refine. Davies.

and scorious parts, but whatsoever they had received either from earth or loadstone. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Worthless; foul; feculent.

Your intention hold,
*As fire these drossy rhymes to purify,
Or as elixir to change them into gold. Donne.

DRO'TCHEL. n. f. [corrupted perhaps from dretchel. To dretch, in Chaucer, is to idle, to delay. Droch, in Frisick, is delay.]

An idle wench; a sluggard. In Scottish it is still used.

DROVE. n. f. [from drive.]

1. A body or number of cattle: generally used of oxen or black cattle.

They brought to their stations many droves of cattle; and within a few days were brought out of the country two thousand muttons. Hayward.

A Spaniard is unacquainted with our northern droves. Brown.

2. A number of sheep driven. To an herd of oxen we regularly oppose, not a drove, but a flock, of sheep.

A drove of sheep, or an herd of oxen, may be managed managed by any noise or cry which the drivers shall accustom them to. South.

3. Any collection of animals.

The sounds and seas, with all their finny drows,
Now to the moon in wavering morrice move. Milton.

4. A crowd; a tumult.

But if to fame alone thou dost pretend,
The miser will his empty palace lend,
Set wide with doors, adorn'd with plated brass,
Where drows, as at a city-gate may pass. Dryden's Juvenal.

DRO'VEN. part. from drive. Not now used.

This is fought indeed;
Had we so done at first, we had drown them home
With clouts about their heads. Shakespeare.

DRO'VER. n. f. [from drove.] One that fats oxen for sale, and drives them to market.

The prince hath got your hero.
—I wish him joy of her.
—Why, that's spoken like an honest drower; so they sell bullocks. Shak. Much ado about Nothing.
The drower, who his fellow drower meets
In narrow passages of winding streets. Dryd. Juv.

DROUGHT. n. f. [from gode, Saxon.]

1. Dry weather; want of rain.

O earth! I will befriend thee more with rain
Than youthful April shall with all his showers:
In summer's droughts I'll drop upon thee still. Shak.
Great droughts in summer, lasting till the end of August, some gentle showers upon them, and then some dry weather, portend a pestilent summer
the year following. Bacon.

To south the Persian bay,
And inaccessible th' Arabian drought. Milton.
As torrents in the drowb of summer fail,
So perish'd man from death shall never rise. Sandys.
They were so learned in natural philosophy, that they foretold earthquakes and storms, great droughts, and great plagues. Temple.

In a drought, the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain. Dryd.
Upon a shower, after a drought, earthworms and land-snails innumerable come out of their lurking-places. Ray.

2. Thirst; want of drink.

His carcase, pin'd with hunger and with drought.
Milton.
One, whose drought
Yet scarce allay'd, still eyes the current stream, Whose liquid murmur heard new thirst excites. Milton.

DROUGHTINESS. n. f. [from droughty.]
The state of wanting rain.

DROUGHTY. adj. [from drought.]

1. Wanting rain; sultry.

That a camel, so patient of long thirst, should be bred in such droughty and parched countries, where it is of such eminent use for travelling over those dry and sandy deserts where no water is to be had, must be acknowledged an act of providence and design. Ray on Creation.

2. Thirsty; dry with thirst.

If the former years Exhibit no supplies, alas! thou must
With tasteless water wash thy droughty throat. Philips.

To DROWN. v. a. [from drunden, below,
German, Skinner; from druncman, Sax.
Mr. Lye.]

1. To suffocate in water.

They would soon drown those that refused to swim down the popular stream. King Charles.
When of God's image only eight he found Snatch'd from the wat'ry grave, and sav'd from nations drown'd. Pope.

2. To overwhelm in water.

Or so much as it needs

Most men being in sensual pleasures drown'd,
It seems their souls but in their senses are. Davies.

5. To lose in something that overpowers or covers.

Who cometh next will not follow that course, however good, which his predecessors held, for doubt to have his doings drown'd in another man's praise. Spenser on Ireland.
That the brightness of the sun doth drown our discerning of the lesser lights, is a popular error. Wotton.

My private voice is drown'd amid the senate. Addison.

Some aged man who lives this act to see,
And who in former times remember'd me,
May say, the son, in fortitude and fame,
Outgoes the mark, and drowns his father's name. Dryden.

To DROWN. v. n. To be suffocated in the waters.

There be, that keep them out of fire, and yet was never burned; that beware of water, and yet was never nigh drowning. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
Methought what pain it was to drown!
What dreadful noise of waters in my ears! Shak.

To DROWSE. v. a. [from droesen, Dutch.] To make heavy with sleep.

There gentle sleep
First found me, and with soft oppression seiz'd
My drows'd senses uncontroll'd. Milt. Parad. Lost.

To DROWSE. v. n.

1. To slumber; to grow heavy with sleep.

All their shape
Spangled with eyes, more numerous than those
Of Argus; and more wakeful than to drowse, Charm'd with Arcadian pipe. Milt. Parad. Lost.

2. To look heavy; not cheerful.

They rather drows'd, and hung their eyelids
down,
Slept in his face, and render'd such aspect
As cloudy men use to their adversaries. Shakespeare. Henry VI.

DRO'WSILY. adv. [from drowsy.]

The air swarms thick with wand'ring deities,
Which drowsily like humming beetles rise. Dryden.

2. Sluggishly; idly; slothfully; lazily.

We satisfy our understanding with the first things, and, thereby satiated, slothfully and drow- sily sit down. Raleigh.

DRO'WSINESS. n. f. [from drowsy.]

1. Sleepiness; heaviness with sleep; dis- position to sleep.

What a strange drowsiness possesses them! Shak.
In deep of night, when drowsiness
Hath lock'd up mortal sense, then listen I
To the celestial syren's harmony. Milton.
What succour can I hope the muse will send,
Whose drowsiness hath wrong'd the muse's friend? Crashaw.

He passes his whole life in a dozed condition, between sleeping and waking, with a kind of drowsiness and confusion upon his senses. South.

He that from his childhood has made rising betimes familiar to him, will not waste the best part of his life in drowsiness, and lying a-bed. Locke.

A sensation of drowsiness, oppression, and lassit-tude, are signs of a plentiful meal in young people. Arbutnot.

2. Idleness; indolence; inactivity.

It falleth out well, to shake off your drowsiness;
for it seemed to be the trumpet of a war. Bacon's Holy War.

DRO'WSIED. n. f. Sleepiness; inclination to sleep. Obsolete.

The royal virgin shook off drowsied;
And rising forth out of her baser bower,
Look'd for her knight. Fairy Queen.

DRO'WSY. adj. [from drowse.]

1. Sleepy; heavy with sleep; lethargick.

Drowsy am I, and yet can rarely sleep. Sidney.

fit of an ague, and do use to yawn and stretch. Bacon's Natural History.

The flowers, call'd out of their beds,
Start and raise up their drowsy heads. Cleveland.
Drunken at last, and drowsy, they depart
Each to his house. Dryden.

2. Heavy; lulling; causing sleep.

Sir Guyon, mindful of his vows yplight, Uprose from drowsy couch. Fairy Queen.
While thus she rested, on her arm reclin'd,
The hoary willows waving with the wind,
And feather'd quires that warbled in the shade,
And purling streams that through the meadow stray'd,
In drowsy murmurs lull'd the gentle maid. Add.

3. Stupid; dull.

Those inadvertencies, a body would think, even our author, with all his drowsy reasoning, could never have been capable of. Atterbury.

To DRUB. v. a. [from druber, to kill, Danish.]

To thresh; to beat; to bang; to thump;
to thwack; to cudgel. A word of contempt.

He that is valiant, and dares fight,
Though drubb'd, can lose no honour by't. Hudib.
The little thief had been soundly drubb'd with a good honest cudgel. L'Estrange.

Though the bread be not mine, yet, if it had been less than weight, I should have been rubbed. Locke.

DRUB. n. f. [from the verb.] A thump;
a knock; a blow.

The blows and drubs I have receiv'd
Have bruise'd my body, and bereav'd
My limbs of strength. Hudibras.
By setting an unfortunate mark on their followers, they have expos'd them to innumerable drubs and confusions. Addison.

To DRUDGE. v. n. [from dreccan, to vex, Saxon; dragen, to carry, Dutch.] To labour in mean offices; to toil without honour or dignity; to work hard; to slave.

And to crack'd fiddle, and hoarse tabour,
In merriment, did drudge and labour. Hudibras.
The poor sleep little: we must learn to watch
Our labours late, and early every morning,
Midst winter frosts; then, clad and fed with sparing,
Rise to our toils, and drudge away the day. Orway.
Advantages obtained by industry, directed by philosophy, can never be expected from drudging ignorance. Glanville.

Soon he came to court,
Proffering for hire his service at the gate,
To drudge, draw water, and to run or wait. Dryd.
I made no such bargain with you, to live always drudging. Dryden's Dedication, Aeneid.

What is an age, in doil renown drudg'd o'er!
One little single hour of love is more. Glanville.

DRUDGE. n. f. [from the verb.] One employed in mean labour; a slave; one doomed to servile occupation.

To conclude, this drudge of the devil, this diviner, laid claim to me. Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors.

He sits above and laughs the while
At thee, ordain'd his drudge, to execute Whate'er his wrath shall bid. Milton's Par. Lost.

Art thou our slave,
Our captive, at the publick mill our drudge,
And dar'st thou, at our sending and command,
Dispute thy coming? Milton's Agonistes.

He

He is content to be their drudge,
And on their errands gladly trudge. Hudibras.
The hard master makes men serve him for nought, who rewards his drudges and slaves with nothing but shame, and sorrow, and misery.
Tillessen.

DRU'DGER. n. f. [from drudge.]

1. A mean labourer.
2. The drudging-box; the box out of which flower is thrown on roast meat.

DRU'DGERY. n. f. [from drudge.] Mean labour; ignoble toil; dishonourable work; servile occupation.

My old dame will be undone for one to do her husbandry and her drudgery. Shakespeare.

Were there not instruments for drudgery as well as offices of drudgery? Were there not people to receive orders, as well as others to give and authorize them? L'Estrange.

You do not know the heavy grievances, The toils, the labours, weary drudgeries, Which they impose. Scutcheon's Oronoko.

To thee that drudgery of pow'r I give;
Cares be thy lot: reign thou, and let me live. Dryden.

Paradise was a place of bliss, as well as immortality, without drudgery, and without sorrow. Locke.

Even Drudgery himself,
As at the car he sweats, or dusty hews
The palace stone, looks gay. Thomson's Summer.
It is now handled by every dirty wench, and condemned to do her drudgery.
Swift's Meditations on a Broomstick.

DRU'DGINGBOX. n. f. [drudging and box.]

The box out of which flower is sprinkled upon roast meat.

But if it lies too long, the crackling's pall'd,
Not by the drudgingbox to be recall'd.
King's Cookery.

DRU'DGINGLY. adv. [from drudging.]

Laboriously; toilsomely.

He does now all the meanest and triflingest things himself drudgingly, without making use of any inferior or subordinate minister. Ray on the Creation.

DRUG. n. f. [drogue, French.]

1. An ingredient used in physick; a medicinal simple.

A fleet deseried
Hangs in the clouds, by equinoctial winds
Close sailing from Bengala, or the isles
Of Ternate and Tidore, whence merchants bring Their spicy drugs. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Judicious physick's noble art to gain,
He drugs and plants explor'd, alas! in vain. Smith.

Bright Helen mix'd a mirth-inspiring bowl,
Temper'd with drugs of sov'reign use, Caluage
The boiling bosom of tumultuous rage. Pope's Odyssey.

In the names of drugs and plants, the mistake in a word may endanger life. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

2. It is used sometimes for poison.

Mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law
Is death to any he that utters them. Shakespeare.
And yet no doubts the poor man's draught contrail;

He dreads no poison in his homely bowl:
Then fear the deadly drug, when gems divine
Enchase the cup, and sparkle in the wine. Dryd.

3. Any thing without worth or value; any thing of which no purchaser can be found.

Each noble vice
Shall hear a price,
And virtue shall a drug become:
An empty name,
Was all her fame,
But now she shall be dumb. Dryden's Albion.

4. A drudge. This seems the meaning here.

He from his first swath proceeded
Thro' sweat degrees that this brief world affords,
To such as may the passive drugs of it Freely command. Shakespeare.

TO DRUG. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To season with ingredients, commonly medicinal.

The forfeited grooma
Do mock their charge with snores.—I've drugg'd
their possets,
That death and nature do contend about them. Shakespeare.

2. To tincture with something offensive.

Of: they assay'd,
Hunger and thirst constraining; drugg'd as oft
With hatefulest disrelish, writh'd their jaws
With foot and cinders fill'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

DRUGGET. n. f. A slight kind of woollen stuff.

In druggets dress, of thirteen pence a-yard,
Se Philip's son amidst his Persian guard. Swift.

DRUGGIST. n. f. [from drug.] One who sells physical drugs.

Common nitre we bought at the druggists. Boyle.

DRUGSTER. n. f. [from drug.] One who sells physical simples.

They set the clergy below their apothecaries,
the physician of the soul below the drugsters of the body. Atterbury.

DRUM. n. f. [tromme, Danish; drumme, Erse.]

1. An instrument of military musick, consisting of vellum strained over a broad hoop on each side, and beaten with sticks.

Let's march without the noise of threatening drums. Shakespeare.

In drums, the closeness round about, that preserveth the sound from dispersing, maketh the noise come forth at the drum-hole far more loud and strong than if you should strike upon the like skin extended in the open air. Bacon.

Tears trickling down their breasts bedew the ground,
And drums and trumpets mix their mournful sound. Dryden.

Now no more the drum
Provokes to arms, or trumpet's clangor shrill
Affrights the wives, and chills the virgin's blood. Philips.

2. The tympanum of the ear, or the membrane which perceives the vibration of the air.

TO DRUM. v. n.

1. To beat a drum; to beat a tune on a drum.

2. To beat with a pulsatory motion.

Now, heart,
Set ope thy sluices, send the vigorous blood
Through every active limb for my relief;
Then take thy rest within the quiet cell,
For thou shalt drum no more. Dryden.

TO DRUMBLE. v. n. To drone; to be sluggish.

Take up these cloaths here quickly: where's the cowllast? Look, how you drumble! carry them to the landress in Datchet Mead. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

DRUMFISH. n. f. The name of a fish.

The under-jaw of the drumfish from Virginia. Woodward.

DRUMMAJOR. n. f. [drum and major.] The chief drummer of a regiment.

Such company may chance to spoil the swearing,
And the drummajor's oaths, of bulk unruly,
May dwindle to a feeble— Cleveland.

DRUMMAKER. n. f. [drum and maker.]

He who deals in drums.

The drummaker uses it, and the cabinetmaker. Mortimer.

DRUMMER. n. f. [from drum.] He whose office it is to beat the drum.

Drummer, strike up, and let us march away. Shakespeare.

Here rows of drummers stand in martial file,
And with their vellum-thunder shake the pile. Gay.

DRUMSTICK. n. f. [drum and stick.] The stick with which a drum is beaten.

DRUNK. adj. [from drink.]

1. Intoxicated with strong liquor; inebriated.

This was the morn when issuing on the guard,
Drawn up in rank and file, they stood prepar'd
Of seeming arms to make a short assay;
Then hasten to be drunk, the business of the day. Dryden.

We generally conclude that man drunk, who takes pains to be thought sober. Spektor.

2. Drenched or saturated with moisture.

I will make mine arrows drunk with blood. Deut.

DRUNKARD. n. f. [from drunk.] One given to excessive use of strong liquors; one addicted to habitual ebriety.

Some blood drawn on me would beget opinion
Of my more fierce endeavour. I've seen drunkards
Do more than this in sport. Shakespeare King Lear.

My bowels cannot hide her woes,
But, like a drunkard, I must vomit them. Shak.

God will not take the drunkard's excuse, that he has so long accustomed himself to intemperate drinking, that now he cannot leave it off. South.

DRUNKEN. adj. [from drink.]

1. Intoxicated with liquor; inebriated.

O monstrous beast! how like a swine he lies!
Sir, I will practise on this drunken man. Shakespeare.

Drunken men imagine every thing turneth round: they imagine that things come upon them; they see not well things afar off; those things that they see near hand, they see out of their place, and sometimes they see things double. Bacon.

2. Given to habitual ebriety.

3. Saturated with moisture.

Then let the earth be drunken with our blood. Shakespeare.

4. Done in a state of inebriation.

When your carters, or your waiting vassals,
Have done a drunken slaughter, and defac'd
The precious image of our dear Redeemer,
You straight are on your knees for pardon, pardon. Shakespeare.

We should for honour take
The drunken quarrels of a rake. Swift.

DRUNKENLY. adv. [from drunken.] In a drunken manner.

My blood already, like the pelican,
Hast thou tap'd out, and drunkenly carous'd. Shakespeare.

DRUNKENNESS. n. f. [from drunken.]

1. Intoxication with strong liquor.

Every going off from our natural and common temper, and our usual severity of behaviour, is a degree of drunkenness. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

2. Habitual ebriety.

The Lacedemonians trained up their children to hate drunkenness, by bringing a drunken man into their company. Watts on the Mind.

3. Intoxication or inebriation of any kind; disorder of the faculties.

Passion is the drunkenness of the mind, and therefore in its present workings not controllable by reason. Spenser.

DRY. adj. [brug, Saxon.]

1. Arid; not wet; not moist.

If

If the pipe be a little wet on the inside, it will make a differing sound from the same pipe dry.

Bacon.

When God said,
Be gather'd now, ye waters under heav'n,
Into one place, and the dry land appear!
Of turbid elements the sport;
From clear to cloudy tost, from hot to cold,
And dry to moist.

Milton.
Thomson.

2. Not rainy.

A dry March and a dry May portend a whole-some summer, if there be a showering April between.

Bacon.

The weather, we agreed, was too dry for the season.

Addison.

3. Not succulent; not juicy.

I will drain him dry as hay;
Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his penthouse lid;
He shall live a man forbid.

Shaksp. Macbeth.

4. Being without tears.

Dry mourning will decay more deadly bring,
As a north wind burns a too forward spring;
Give sorrow vent, and let the sluices go.

Dryden.

5. Thirsty; a-thirst.

So dry he was for sway.
Void of a bulky charger near their lips,
With which, in often interrupted sleep,
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry fur'd tongues.

Shaksp. Tempest.

Philips.

6. Jeune; barren; plain; unembellished; without pathos; without flowers.

As we should take care that our stile in writing be neither dry nor empty, we should look again if he not winding or wanton with far-fetched descriptions; either is a vice.

Ben Jonson.

It remaineth to treat concerning ornaments within or without the fabrick; a piece not so dry as the meer contemplation of proportions; and therefore I hope therein somewhat to refresh both the reader and myself.

Wotton's Architecture.

That the fire burns by heat, is an empty dry return to the question, and leaves us still ignorant.

Glanville.

It is a dry fable, with little or nothing in it.

L'Estrange.

Authority and friendship work upon some, dry and sober reason works upon others.

L'Estrange.

To clear up this theory, I was willing to lay aside dry subtilities with which the schools are filled.

Burnet's Theory.

These epistles will become less dry, and more susceptible of ornament.

Pope.

7. Hard; severe. [Dried anciently to endure; dry, Scottish.]

Of two noblemen, the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal cheer in his house; the other would ask of those that had been at his table, was there never a stout or dry blow given?

Bacon.

I rather hop'd I should no more

Hear from you o' th' gallanting score;

For hard dry bastings us'd to prove

The readiest remedies of love;

Next a dry diet.

Hudibras.

To DRY, v. a.

1. To free from moisture; to arefy; to exsiccate.

The meat was well, if you were so contented.
—I tell thee, Kate, 'twas burnt and dried away.

Shaksp. Lear.

Heat dries bodys that do easily expire, as parchment, leaves, roots, and clay; and so doth time arefy.

Bacon.

Herbs and flowers, if they be dried in the shade, or dried in the hot sun a small time, keep best.

Bacon.

The running streams are deep;

So, they have caught the father of the flock,
Who dries his fleece upon the neighbouring rock.

Dryden.

2. To exhale moisture.

'Twas grief no more, or grief and rage were one Within her soul: at last 'twas rage alone;

Vol. I.

Which, burning upwards in succession, dries
The tears that stood considering in her eyes.

Dryden.

3. To wipe away moisture.

Then with her vest the wound she wipes and dries.

Denham.

Sight so deform what heart of rock could long
Dried behold? Adam could not, but wept.

Milton.

DRY'LY, adv. [from dry.]

1. Without moisture.

2. Coldly; frigidly; without affection.

The archduke, conscious to himself how dryly the king had been used by his council, did strive to recover the king's affection.

Bacon's Henry VII.

Wouldst thou to honour and preaments climb,
Be bold in mischief, dare some mighty crime,
Which dungeons, death, or banishment deserves;
For virtue is but dryly prais'd, and starves.

Dryden's Juvenal.

3. Jejunely; barrenly; without ornament or embellishment.

Some dryly plain, without invention's aid,
Write dull receipts how poems may be made.

Pope.

DRY'NESS, n. s. [from dry.]

1. Want of moisture; siccity.

The Africans are conceived to be peculiarly scorched and torrid by the sun, by dryness of the soil, from want and defect of water.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Such was the disorder which did first disperse
Form, order, beauty, through the universe;
While dryness moisture, coldness heat resists,
All that we have, and that we are, subsists.

Denham.

The marrow supplies an oil for the junction of the bones and ligaments in the articulations, and particularly of the ligaments, preserving them from dryness and rigidity, and keeping them supple and flexible.

Ray on the Creation.

Is the sea ever likely to be evaporated by the sun, or to be emptied with buckets? Why then must we fancy this impossible dryness, and then, upon that fictitious account, calumniate nature?

Bentley.

2. Want of succulence.

If he fill'd

His vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones,
Call on him for't.

Shaksp. Antony and Cleop.

The difference of muscular flesh depends upon the hardness, tenderness, moisture, or dryness of the fibres.

Arbutnot.

3. Want of embellishment; want of pathos; jejune; barrenness.

Their new flowers and sweetness do as much corrupt as others dryness and squalor, if they chuse not carefully.

Ben Jonson.

Be faithful where the author excels, and paraphrase where penury of fancy or dryness of expression ask it.

Garth.

4. Want of sensibility in devotion; want of ardour; aridity.

It may be; that by this dryness of spirit, God intends to make us the more fervent and resigned in our direct and solemn devotions, by the perceiving of our weakness.

Taylor.

DRY-NURSE, n. s. [dry and nurse.]

1. A woman who brings up and feeds a child without the breast.

2. One who takes care of another: with some contempt of the person taken care of.

Mrs. Quickly is his nurse, or his drynurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer.

Shaksp. Twelfth Night.

To DRY-NURSE, v. a. [from the noun.] To feed without the breast.

As Romulus a wolf did rear,

So he was drynurs'd by a bear.

Hudibras.

DRY-SHOE, adj. [dry and shoe.] Without wet feet; without treading above the shoes in the water.

He had embarked us in such disadvantage, as we could not return dryshod.

Sidney.

Dryshod to pass, the parts the floods in twain;
And eke huge mountains from their native seat

She would command themselves to bear away.

Fairy Queen.

Has honour's fountain then suck'd back the stream?

He has; and hooting boys may dryshod pass,
And gather pebbles from the naked ford.

Dryden.

DRY-TWO, adj. [dualis, Latin.] Expressing the number two.

Modern languages have only one variation, and so the Latin; but the Greek and Hebrew have one to signify two, and another to signify more than two; under one variation the noun is said to be of the dual number, and under the other of the plural.

Clark's Latin Grammar.

To DUB, v. a. [dubban zo ridede, Saxon; addubba till riddara, Islandick. to dub a knight. Addubba, in its primary sense, signifies to strike, knights being made by a blow with the sword.]

1. To make a man a knight.

Knight, knight, good mother! Basilisco like.
What! I am dubb'd; I have it on my shoulder.

Shaksp. Twelfth Night.

The robes which the kings then allowed to each knight, when he was dubb'd, of green, or burnet, as they spake in that age, appeareth upon record.

Cowden's Remains.

The king stood up under his cloth of state, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubb'd the lord mayor London knight.

Hayward on Ed. VI.

2. To confer any kind of dignity, or new character.

The jealous o'erworn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewoman,
Are mighty gossips in this monarchy.

Sh. Ric. III.

Oave thee no instance why thou shouldst do treason,
Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor.

Shak.

Women commence by Cupid's dart,
As a king hunting dubs a hart.

Cromwell.

A plain gentleman, of an ancient family, is of better quality than a new knight, though the reason of his dubbing was meritorious.

Collins on Pride.

O post! thou hadst been dissector,
Hanging the monarch's hat (u) high,

If thou hadst dubb'd thy star a meteor,
That did but blaze, and rove, and die.

Pratt.

4. To dub.

Thou

These demoniacks let me dub
With the name of legion club. Swift.
A man of wealth is dubb'd a man of worth;
Venus shall give him form, and Anstis birth. Pope.

DUB. n. f. [from the verb.] A blow; a knock.
As skilful coopers hoop their tubs
With Lycian and with Phrygian dubs. Hudibras.

DUBIOUSITY. n. f. [from dubious.] A thing doubtful. A word not used.
Men often swallow falsties for truths, dubiousities for certainties, scissibilities for possibilities, and things impossible for possible. Brown's Vulg. Err.

DUBIOUS. adj. [dubius, Latin.]
1. Doubting; not settled in an opinion.
2. Uncertain; that of which the truth is not fully known.
No quick reply to dubious questions make. Derham.
We also call it a dubious or doubtful proposition, when there are no arguments on either side. Watts's Logick.

3. Not plain; not clear.
Satan with less toil, and now with ease,
Waits on the calmer wave, by dubious light. Milton.

4. Having the event uncertain.
His utmost pow'r with adverse pow'r oppos'd,
In dubious battle, on the plains of heav'n. Milton.

DUBIOUSLY. adv. [from dubious.] Uncertainly; without any determination.
Authors write often dubiously, even in matters wherein is expected a strict definitive truth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Almanack-makers wander in general, and talk dubiously, and leave to the reader the business of interpreting. Swift.

DUBIOUSNESS. n. f. [from dubious.] Uncertainty; doubtfulness.
She speaks with dubiousness, not with the certainty of a goddess. Broome.

DUBITABLE. adj. [dubito, Latin.] Doubtful; uncertain; what may be doubted.

DUBITATION. n. f. [dubitatio, Latin.] The act of doubting; doubt.
Many of the ancients denied the antipodes; but the experience of our enlarged navigation can now assert them beyond all dubitation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Dubitation may be called a negative perception; that is, when I perceive that what I see is not what I would see. Grew.

DUCAL. adj. [from duke.] Pertaining to a duke: as, a ducal coronet.

DUCAT. n. f. [from duke.] A coin struck by dukes: in silver, valued at about four shillings and six pence; in gold, at nine shillings and six pence.
I cannot instantly raise up the gross
Of full three thousand ducats. Shakespeare.
There was one that died in debt: it was reported,
where his creditors were, that he was dead: one said,
he hath carried five hundred ducats of mine into the other world. Bacon.

DUCK. n. f. [anas; ducken, to dip, Dut.]
1. A water fowl, both wild and tame.
The ducks, that heard the proclamation cried,
And fear'd a prosecution might betide,
Full twenty mile from town their voyage take,
Obscure in rushes of the liquid lake. Dryden.
Grubs, if you find your land subject to, turn ducks into it. Martin's Husbandry.

2. A word of endearment, or fondness.
Will you buy any tape or lace for your cap,
My dainty duck, my dear-a? Shak. Winter's Tale.

3. A declination of the head; so called from the frequent action of a duck in the water.
Back, shepherds, back; enough your play
Till next sunshine holyday;

Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes, and such court guise
As Mercury did first devise. Milton.

4. A stone thrown obliquely on the water, so as to strike it and rebound.
Neither crosse and pile, nor ducks and drakes, are quite so ancient as handy-dandy. Arbutnot and Pope.

TO DUCK. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To dive under water as a duck.
The varlet saw, when to the flood he came,
How without stop or stay he fiercely leapt;
And deep himself he ducked in the same,
That in the lake his lofty crest was steep. Fairy Queen.
Let the labouring bark climb hills of seas
Olympus high, and duck again as low
As hell's from heaven. Shakespeare's Othello.
Thou art wickedly devout;
In Tiber ducking thrice by break of day. Dryden.

2. To drop down the head, as a duck.
As some raw youth in country bred,
When at a skirmish first he hears
The bullets whistling round his ears,
Will duck his head aside, will start,
And feel a trembling at his heart. Swift.

3. To bow low; to cringe. In Scottish duyk, or juyk, to make obeisance, is still used.
I cannot flatter and look fair,
Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and cog,
Duck with French nods, and apish courtesy. Shak.
The learned pate
Ducks to the golden fool. Shakespeare's Timon.

TO DUCK. v. a. To put under water.

DUCKER. n. f. [from duck.]
1. A diver.
2. A cringer. DiA.

DUCKINGSTOOL. n. f. [duck and stool.] A chair in which scolds are tied, and put under water.
She in the duckingstool should take her seat,
Drest like herself in a great chair of state. Dorset.
Reclaim the obstinately opprobrious and virulent women, and make the duckingstool more useful. Addison's Freeholder.

DUCKLEGGED. adj. [duck and leg.] Short legged.
Ducklegg'd, short waisted, such a dwarf she is,
That she must rise on tiptoes for a kiss. Dryden's Juvenal.

DUCKLING. n. f. [from duck.] A young duck; the brood of the duck.
Ducklings, though hatched and led by a hen, if she brings them to the brink of a river or pond, presently leave her, and in they go. Ray on the Creation.
Ev'ry morn
Amid the ducklings let her scatter corn. Gay's Pastorals.

DUCKMEAT. n. f. [duck and meat; lens palustris.] A common plant growing in standing waters.

TO DUCKOY. v. a. [mistaken for decoy: the decoy being commonly practised upon ducks, produced the error.] To entice to a snare.
This fish hath a slender membranous string, which he projects and draws in at pleasure, as a serpent doth his tongue: with this he *duckoy*s little fishes, and preys upon them. Grew.

DUCKCOY. n. f. Any means of enticing and ensnaring.
Seducers have found it the most compendious way to their designs, to lead captive silly women, and make them the duckcoys to their whole family. Decay of Piety.

DUCKSFOOT. n. f. Black snakeroot, or Mayapple.

DU'CKWEED. n. f. [duck and weed.] The same with duckmeat.
That we call duckweed hath a leaf no bigger than a thyme leaf, but of a fresher green; and putteth forth a little string into the water, far from the bottom. Bacon.

DUCT. n. f. [ductus, Latin.]
1. Guidance; direction.
This doctrine, by fastening all our actions by a fatal decree at the foot of God's chair, leaves nothing to us but only to obey our fate, to follow the duct of the stars, or necessity of those iron chains which we are born under. Hammond.

2. A passage through which any thing is conducted: a term chiefly used by anatomists.
A duct from each of those cells ran into the root of the tongue, where both joined together, and passed forward in one common duct to the tip of it. Addison's Spectator.
It was observed that the chyle, in the thoracick duct, retained the original taste of the aliment. Arbutnot on Aliments.

DUCTILE. adj. [ductilis, Latin.]
1. Flexible; pliable.
Thick woods and gloomy night
Conceal the happy plant from human sight:
One bough it bears; but, wond'rous to behold!
The ductile rind and leaves of radiant gold. Dryden's Aeneid.

2. Easy to be drawn out into length, or expanded.
All bodies ductile and tensile, as metals, that will be drawn into wires; wool and tow, that will be drawn into yarn or thread; have the appetite of not discontinuing strong. Bacon.
Gold, as it is the purest, so it is the softest and most ductile of all metals. Dryden.

And heard a mermaid, on a dolphin's back,
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song. Shakef.

A fabrick huge
Rose like an exhalation, with the sound
Of dulcet symphonies, and voices sweet. Milton.

DULCIFICATION. n. f. [from dulcify.]

The act of sweetening; the act of freeing from acidity, saltiness, or acrimony.

In colcothar, the exactest calcination, followed by an exquisite dulcification, does not reduce the remaining body into elementary earth; for after the salt of vitriol, if the calcination have been too faint, is drawn out of the colcothar, the residue is not earth, but a mixt body, rich in medical virtues. Boyle.

TO DULCIFY. v. a. [dulcifer, Fr.] To sweeten; to set free from acidity, salt-ness, or acrimony of any kind.

A decoction of wild gourd, or colocynthis,

DUODECUPLE. adj. [duo and decuplus, Latin.] Consisting of twelve.

Griseplus, a learned Polander, endeavours to establish the duodecuple proportion among the Jews, by comparing some passages of scripture together. Arbutnot on Coins.

DUPE. n. f. [dupe, French; from duppe, a foolish bird, easily caught.] A credulous man; a man easily tricked. A modern word hardly established.

An usurping populace is its own dupe, a mere underworker, and a purchaser in trust for some single tyrant. Swift.

First slave to words, then vassal to a name, Then dupe to party; child and man the same, Dunciad.

TO DUPE. v. a. [from the noun.] To trick; to cheat.

The thrice a bigot keep, a genius quit; Faithless through piety, and dup'd through wit. Pope.

DUPLE. adj. [duplus, Latin.] Double; one repeated.

TO DUPLICATE. v. a. [duplico, Latin.]

1. To double; to enlarge by the repetition of the first number or quantity.

And some alterations in the brain duplicate that which is but a single object to our undisturbed sentiments. Glanville.

2. To fold together.

DUPPLICATE. adj. [from the verb.]

Duplicate proportion is the proportion of squares. Thus, in a rank of geometrical proportions, the first term to the third is said to be in a duplicate ratio of the first to the second, or as its square is to the square of the second: so in 2, 4, 8, 16, the ratio of 2 to 8 is a duplicate of that of 2 to 4, or as the square of 2 to the square of 4. Phillips, Harris, Bailey.

It has been found, that the attraction is almost reciprocally in a duplicate proportion of the distance of the middle of the drop from the concourse of the glasses, viz. reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the spreading of the drop, and its touching each glass in a larger surface; and again reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the attractions growing stronger within the same quantity of attracting surface. Newton's Opticks.

DUPPLICATE. n. f. Another correspondent to the first; a second thing of the same kind, as a transcript of a paper.

Nothing is more needful for perfecting the natural history of bodies, than the subjecting them to the fire; to which end I have reserved duplicates of the most considerable. Woodward.

DUPPLICATION. n. f. [from duplicate.]

1. The act of doubling.

What great pains hath been taken concerning the quadrature of a circle, and the duplication of a cube, and some other mathematical problems. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. The act of folding together.

3. A fold; a doubling.

The peritonæum is a strong membrane, every where double; in the duplications of which all the viscera of the abdomen are hid. Wifeman's Surg.

DUPPLICATION. n. f. [from duplicate.] A fold; any thing doubled.

The lymphducts, either dilacerated or obstructed, exonerate themselves into the foldings, or between the duplicatures of the membranes. Ray on the Creation.

DUPPLICITY. n. f. [duplicis, Latin.]

1. Doubleness; the number of two.

This duplicity was ill contrived to place one head at both extremes, and had been more tolerable to have set three or four at one. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Do not affect duplicities nor triplicities, nor any certain number of parts, in your division of things. Watts's Logick.

2. Deceit; doubleness of heart or of tongue.

DURABILITY. n. f. [durabilis, Latin.] The power of lasting; continuance; endurance.

Stones, though in dignity of nature inferior unto plants, yet exceed them in firmness of strength, or durability of being. Hooker.

Our times upon the earth have neither certainty nor durability. Raleigh's History.

DURABLE. adj. [durabilis, Latin.]

1. Lasting; having the quality of long continuance.

The bones of his body we may compare to the hard rocks and stones, and therefore strong and durable. Baligh's History.

With

With pins of adamant,
And chains, they made all fast; too fast they made,
And durable! Milton's Paradise Lost.
The glories of her majesty's reign ought to be recorded in words more durable than brass, and such as our posterity may read a thousand years hence. Swift.

2. Having successive existence.

Time, though in eternity, applied
To motion, measures all things durable
By present, past, and future. Milton.

DURABLENESS. n. f. [from durable.]

Power of lasting; continuance.
The different consistence and durableness of the strata wherof they consist, are more or less. Woodward.

A bad poet, if he cannot become immortal by the goodness of his verse, may by the durableness of the metal that supports it. Addison on Ancient Medals.

DURABLY. adv. [from durable.] In a lasting manner.

There indeed he found his fame flourishing, his monuments engraved in marble, and yet more durably in men's memories. Sidney.

DURANCE. n. f. [from durance, law
French.]

1. Imprisonment; the custody or power of a jailor; a prison.

Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts,
Is in base durance and contagious prison:
Haul'd thither by mechanick dirty hands. Shakespeare.

A poor, innocent, forlorn stranger, languishing in durance, upon the false accusations of a lying, insolent, whorish woman. South.

There's neither iron bar nor gate,
Portcullis, chain, nor bolt, nor grate;
And yet men durance there abide,
In dungeons scarce three inches wide. Hudib.
Notwithstanding the warning and example before me, I commit myself to lasting durance. Congreve's Old Bachelor.

2. Endurance; continuance; duration.
A doubtful word.

Sick nature at that instant trembled round,
And mother earth sigh'd as she felt the wound:
Of how short durance was this new made state;
How far more mighty than heav'n's love, hell's hate! Dryden.

DURATION. n. f. [duratio, Latin.]

1. A sort of distance or length, the idea whereof we get, not from the permanent parts of space, but from the fleeting and perpetually perishing parts of succession. Locke.

2. Power of continuance.

Duration is a circumstance so essential to happiness, that if we conceived it possible for the joys of heaven itself to pass from us in an instant, we should find ourselves not much concerned for the attainment of them. Rogers.

3. Length of continuance.

Aristotle, by greatness of action, does not only mean it should be great in its nature, but also in its duration; that it should have a due length in it. Addison's Spectator.

TO DURE. v. n. [duro, Latin.] To last;
to continue; to endure.

The delights and pleasures of the world are most pleasing while they dure. Raleigh's History.

DURFUL. adj. [from endure and full.]
Lasting; of long continuance; durable.
Not in use.

The durful oak, whose sap is not yet dried,
Is long ere it conceives the kindling fire;
But when it once doth burn, it doth divide
Great heat, and makes his flames to heav'n aspire. Spenser.

DURELESS. adj. [from dure.] Without continuance; fading; transitory; short.
Not in use.

Yet were that aptitude natural, more inclinable to follow and embrace the false and dureless pleasures of this stage-play world, than to become the shadow of God. Raleigh's History.

DURESSE. n. f. [French; hardship, severity.]

1. Imprisonment; constraint; confinement.

2. [In law.] A plea used, by way of exception, by him who, being cast into prison at a man's suit, or otherwise by threats, beating, &c. hardly used, seals any bond to him during his restraint.
This the law holds as invalid, and supposes to be constrained. Cowell.

DURING. prep. [This word is rather a participle from dure; as, during life; durante vita, life continuing; during my pleasure, my pleasure continuing the same.] For the time of the continuance of; while any thing lasts.

If during his childhood he be constantly and rigorously kept from drinking cold liquor whilst he is hot, forbearance grows into a habit. Locke.

DURITY. n. f. [dureté, French; durus,
Latin.] Hardness; firmness.

Ancients did burn fragments of marble, which in time became marble again, at least of indissoluble durity, as appeareth in the standing theatres. Wotton's Architecture.

Irradiancy or sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this; for it cometh short of their compactness and durity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DURST. The preterite of dare.

The Christians durst have no images of the Deity, because they would rather die than defile themselves with such an impiety. Stillingfleet.

DUSK. adj. [duyster, Dutch.]

1. Tending to darkness. See DUSKY.
2. Tending to blackness; dark-coloured.

The hills, to their supply,
Vapour and exhalation, dusk and moist,
Sent up again. Milton's Paradise Lost.

DUSK. n. f. [from the adjective.]

scurity.

I will wait on you in the dusk of the evening, with my show upon my back. Spektator.

2. Darkness of colour; tendency to blackness.

Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,
Whole dusk set off the whiteness of the skin. Dryden.

TO DUSK. v. a. [from the noun.] To make dusky.

TO DUSK. v. n. To grow dark; to begin to lose light or brightness; to have lustre diminished. Di.

DUSKILY. adv. [from dusky.] With a tendency to darkness or blackness.

DUSKISH. adj. [from dusk.]
1. Inclining to darkness; tending to obscurity.

From his infernal furnace forth he threw
Huge flames, that dimmed all the heaven's light,
Enroll'd in dusky smoke, and brimstone blue. Spenser.

2. Tending to blackness; dark-coloured.

Sight is not contented with sudden departments from one extreme to another; therefore rather a dusky mixture than an absolute black. Wotton's Architecture.

DUSKILY. adv. [from dusky.] Cloudily; darkly.

The sawdust burned fair, till part of the candle consumed: the dust gathering about the snail, made the snail to burn dusky. Bacon's Natural History.

DUSKY. adj. [from dusk; duyster, Dutch.]

1. Tending to darkness; obscure; not luminous.

Here lies the dusky torch of Mortimer, Chok'd with ambition of the meaner sort. Shak.
There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,
Whose every puff bears empty shades away. Dryd.
Through the plains of one continual day,
Six shining months pursue their even way;
And six succeeding urge their dusky flight,
Obscur'd with vapours and o'erwhelm'd in night. Pope.

2. Tending to blackness; dark-coloured;
not clear; not bright.

They did plot
The means that dusky Dis my daughter got. Shakespeare.
It is not green, but of a dusky brown colour. Bacon.

When Jove in dusky clouds involves the skies,
And the faint crescent shoots by fits before their eyes. Dryden.
The surface is of a dusky yellow colour. Woodward.

By mixing such powders, we are not to expect a strong and full white, such as that of paper;
but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black; that is, a grey, or dun, or russet brown. Newton's Opticks.

3. Gloomy; sad; intellectually clouded.

While he continues in life, this dusky scene of horror, this melancholy prospect of final perdition, will frequently occur to his fancy. Beaumont's Sermons.

Umbric, a dusky, melancholy sprite,
As ever sullied the fair face of light,
Down to the central earth, his proper scene,
Repairs to search the gloomy cave of spleen. Pope.

DUST. n. f. [dyrt, Saxon; duist, Erse.]

1. Earth or other matter reduced to small particles.

The dust
Should have ascended to the roof of heav'n, Rais'd by your populous troops. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

Dust helpeth the fruitfulness of trees, inasmuch as they cast dust upon them: that powdering, when a shower cometh, maketh a soiling to the tree, being earth and water finely laid on. Bacon's Natural History.

2. The grave; the state of dissolution.

The sceptre, learning, physick, must
All follow this, and come to dust. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Thou

Out of the ground wast taken, know thy birth;
For dust thou art, and shalt to dust return. Milt.

3. A mean and dejected state.

God raiseth up the poor out of the dust, to set them among princes. 1 Sam. ii. 8.

TO DUST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To free from dust.
2. To sprinkle with dust.

DUSTMAN. n. f. [dust and man.] One whose employment is to carry away the dust.

The dustman's cart offends thy clothes and eyes,
When through the street a cloud of ashes flies. Gay.

DUSTY. adj. [from dust.]

1. Filled with dust; clouded with dust.
All our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Shakespeare.
Arms and the dust held I left admire,
And solen strangely in some new desire. Dryden.
2. Covered

2. Covered or scattered with dust.

Even Drudgery himself,
As at the car he sweats, or dusty hews
The palace stone, looks gay. Thomson's Summer.

DU'TCHNESS. n. f. [dutche, French.]

1. The lady of a duke.

The duke of Cornwall, and Regan his dutchess, will be here. Shakespeare's King Lear.

The duke was to command the army, and the dutchess, by the favour she possessed, to be near her majesty. Swift.

The gen'rous god who wit and gold refines,
And ripens spirits as he ripens mines,
Kept dross for dutchesses, the world shall know it,
To you gave sense, good humour, and a poet. Pope.

2. A lady who has the sovereignty of a dukedom.

DU'TCHY. n. f. [dutché, French.] A territory which gives title to a duke, or has a duke for its sovereign.

Different states border on it; the kingdom of France, the dutchy of Savoy, and the canton of Bern. Addison in Italy.

France might have swallowed up his whole dutchy. Swift.

DUTCHY-COURT. n. f. A court wherein all matters appertaining to the dutchy of Lancaster are decided by the decree of the chancellor of that court. *Cowell.*DU'TEOUS. adj. [from duty.]

1. Obedient; obsequious; respectful to those who have natural or legal authority.

Great Aurengzebe did duteous care express,
And durst not push too far his great success. Dryden.

A female softness, with a manly mind;
A duteous daughter, and a sister kind;
In sickness patient, and in death resign'd. Dryd.
Who taught the bee with winds and rains to strive,
To bring her burden to the certain hive;
And through the liquid fields again to pass
Duteous, and hark'ning to the sounding brass? Prior.

2. Obsequious; obedient to good or bad purposes: with to.

I know thee well; a servicable villain!
As duteous to the vices of thy mistress,
As badness would desire. Shaksp. King Lear.
Every beast, more duteous at her call,
Than at Circean call the herd disguis'd. Milton.

3. Enjoined by duty; enforced by the relation of one to another. This sense is not now used.

With mine own tongue deny my sacred right,
With mine own breath release all duteous ties. Shakespeare.

DU'TIFUL. adj. [duty and full.]

1. Obedient; submissive to natural or legal superiors; reverent.

She died in an extreme old age, without pain, under the care of the most dutiful son that I have ever known or heard of. Swift to Pope.

2. Expressive of respect; giving token of reverence; respectful; reverential.

There would she kiss the ground, and thank the trees, bless the air, and do dutiful reverence to every thing she thought did accompany her at their first meeting. Sidney.

DU'TIFULLY. adv. [from dutiful.]

1. Obediently; submissively.

2. Reverently; respectfully.

His daughter Philoclea he found at that time dutifully watching by her mother, and Miso curiously watching her. Sidney.

He with joyful, nimble wing,
Flew dutifully back again,
And made an humble chaplet for the king. Swift.

DU'TIFULNESS. n. f. [from dutiful.]

1. Obedience; submission to just authority.

Piety, or dutifulness to parents, was a most popular virtue among the Romans. Dryden's Æn.

2. Reverence; respect.

It is a strange kind of civility, and an evil duti-fulness in friends and relatives, to suffer him to perish without reproof or medicine, rather than to seem unmannerly to a great finner. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

DU'TY. n. f. [from due.]

1. That to which a man is by any natural or legal obligation bound.

When ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do. Luke, xvii. 10.

The pain children feel from any necessity of nature, it is the duty of parents to relieve. Locke.

2. Acts or forbearances required by religion or morality. In this sense it has a plural.

Good my lord,
You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me: I Return those duties back, as are right fit;
Obey you, love you, and most honour you. Shakespeare.

All our duty is set down in our prayers, because in all our duty we beg the Divine assistance; and remember that you are bound to do all those duties, for the doing of which you have prayed for the Divine assistance. Taylor's Devotion.

3. Obedience or submission due to parents, governours, or superiours; loyalty; piety to parents.

Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flatter's bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakespeare's King Lear.

God's party will appear small, and the king's not greater; it being not probable, that those should have sense of duty to him that had none to God. Decay of Piety.

4. Act of reverence or respect.

They both duties.
Did duty to their lady as became. Fairy Queen.

5. The business of a soldier on guard.

The regiment did duty there punctually. Clarendon.
Otho, as often as Galba supped with him,
used to give every soldier upon duty an aureus.
Arbutnot on Coins.

6. The business of war; service.

The night came and severed them, all parties being tired with the duty of the day. Clarendon.
See how the madmen bleed! Behold the gains
With which their master, love, rewards their pains!
For seven long years, on duty ev'ry day,
Lo! their obedience, and their monarch's pay! Dryden.

7. Tax; impost; custom; toll.

All the wines make their way through several duties and taxes, before they reach the port. Addison.
Such shekels as they now shew, were the old ones in which duty was to be paid by their law.
Arbutnot on Coins.

DWARF. n. f. [bpeong, Saxon; dawerg, Dutch.]

1. A man below the common size of men.

Get you gone, you dwarf!
You minimus, of hind'ring knot-grafs made. Shakespeare.
Such dwarfs were some kind of apes. Brown.

They, but now who seem'd
In bigness to surpass earth's giant sons,
Now less than smallest dwarfs, in narrow room Throng numberless. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Any animal or plant below its natural bulk.

In a delicate plantation of trees, all well grown, fair, and smooth, one dwarf was knotty and crooked, and the rest had it in derision. L'Estr.
Saw off the stock in a smooth place; and for dwarf trees, graft them within four fingers of the ground. Mortimer.

3. An attendant on a lady or knight in romances.

The champion stout,
Eftsoones dismounted from his coarser brave,
And to the dwarf awhile his needless spear he gave. Spenser.

4. It is used often by botanists in composition; as, dwarf-elder, dwarf-honey-suckle.To DWARF. v. a. [from the noun.] To hinder from growing to the natural bulk; to lessen; to make little.

It is reported that a good strong canvas, spread over a tree grafted low, soon after it putteth forth, will dwarf it, and make it spread. Bacon's Natural History.

The whole sex is in a manner dwarfed, and shrunk into a race of beauties, that seems almost another species. Addison.

DWARFISH. adj. [from dwarf.] Below the natural bulk; low; small; little; petty; despicable.

Their dwarfish pages were
As cherubins, all gilt. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
And are you grown so high in his esteem,
Because I am so dwarfish and so low? Shakespeare.
This unheard fauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories. Shakespeare's King John.

A thicket close beside the grove there stood,
With briars and brambles choak'd, and dwarfish
wood. Dryden.

We should have lost oaks and cedars, and the other tall and lofty sons of the forest, and have found nothing but dwarfish shrubs, and creeping moss, and despicable mushrooms. Bentley.

DWARFISHLY. adv. [from dwarfish.] Like a dwarf.DWARFISHNESS. n. f. [from dwarfish.] Minuteness of stature; littleness.

'Tis no wonder that science hath not outgrown the dwarfishness of its pristine stature, and that the intellectual world is such a microcosm. Glanville's Scepiss.

To DWAALE. v. a. [bpelian, Saxon, to wander; dwaalen, Dutch.] To be delirious: a provincial word mentioned by Janius.To DWELL. v. n. preterite dwelt, or dwelled. [dualla, old Tentonick, is stay, delay; duelia, Islandick, to stay, to stand still.]

1. To inhabit; to live in a place; to reside; to have an habitation.

Abraham sojourn'd in the land of promise as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles. Heb. xi. 9.

3. To be in any state or condition.

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Shak.

4. To

4. To be suspended with attention; to hang upon with care or fondness.

He in great passion all this while did dwell;
More busying his quick eyes her face to view,
Than his dull ears to hear what she did tell.

Spenser.

Th' attentive queen

Dwell on his accents. Smith's Pbed. and Hippol.
Such was that face, on which I dwell with joy,
Ere Greece assembled stemm'd the tides to Troy.

Pope.

5. To continue long speaking.

He preach'd the joys of heav'n, and pains of hell,
And warn'd the sinner with becoming zeal;
But on eternal mercy lov'd to dwell.

Dryden's Good Parson.

We have dwell pretty long on the considerations of space and duration.

Locke.

Those who defend our negotiators, dwell upon their zeal and patience.

Swift.

- To DWELL. v. a. To inhabit. Not used.

I saw and heard; for we sometimes
Who dwell this wild, constrain'd by want, come forth
To town or village nigh. Milton's Par. Regained.

- DWE'LLER. n. f. [from dwell.] An inhabitant; one that lives in any place.

The houses being kept up, did of necessity enforce a dwell; and the proportion of land for occupation being kept up, did of necessity enforce that dwell not to be beggar or cottager, but a man of some substance.

Bacon's Henry VII.

Their cries soon waken all the dwellers near;
Now murmuring noises rise in every street. Dryd.

- DWE'LLING. n. f. [from dwell.]

- I. Habitation; place of residence; abode.

His *dwell*ing is low in a valley green,
Under the foot of Rauran mossy hore. Fairy Queen.

Hazor shall be a *dwell*ing for dragons, and a desolation for ever. Jer. xlix. 33.

If he have several *dwell*ings, let him sort them so, that what he wanteth in the one he may find in the other. Bacon.

God will deign

To visit oft the *dwell*ings of just men, Delighted. Milton's Paradise Lost.

All *dwell*ings else

Flood overwhelm'd, and them with all their pomp Deep under water roll'd; sea cover'd sea, Sea without shore! Milton's Paradise Lost.

The living few, and frequent funerals, then Proclaim'd thy wrath on this forsaken place;
And now those few, who are return'd again,
Thy searching judgments to their *dwell*ings trace.

Dryden.

The force of fire ascended first on high,
And took its *dwell*ing in the vaulted sky.

Dryden's Ovid.

2. State of life; mode of living.

My *dwell*ing shall be with the beasts of the field.

Daniel.

- DWE'LLINGHOUSE. n. f. [from dwell and house.] The house at which one lives.

A person ought always to be cited at the place of his *dwell*inghouse, which he has in respect of his habitation and usual residence; and not at the house which he has in respect of his estate, or the place of his birth.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

- DWE'LLINGPLACE. n. f. [dwell and place.] The place of residence.

People do often change their *dwell*ingplaces, and some must die, whilst other some do grow up into strength.

Spenser.

- To DWINDLE. v. n. [bpinan, Saxon.]

1. To shrink; to lose bulk; to grow little.

Thy *dwind*led legs seem crawling to the grave.

Dryden.

Proper names, when familiarized in English,
*dwind*le to monosyllables; whereas in other languages they receive a softer turn, by the addition of a new syllable.

Addison.

Our drooping days are *dwind*led down to nought,
Their period finish'd ere 'tis well begun. Thomson.

2. To degenerate; to sink.

'Tis now *dwind*led down to light frothy stuff.

Norris.

If there have been such a gradual diminution of the generative faculty of the earth, that it hath *dwind*led from nobler animals to puny mice and insects, why was there not the like decay in the production of vegetables?

Bentley.

He found the expected council was *dwind*ling into a conventicle, a packed assembly of Italian bishops, not a free convention of fathers.

Atterbury.

Religious societies, though begun with excellent intentions, are said to have *dwind*led into factious clubs.

Swift.

3. To wear away; to lose health; to grow feeble.

Weary sev'nights nine times nine,
Shall he *dwind*le, peak, and pine.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

- DR'NASTY. n. f. [δυσκρατία] Government; sovereignty.

Some account him fabulous, because he carries up the Egyptian dynasty, before the flood, yea, and long before the creation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Greece was divided into several dynasties, which our author has enumerated under their respective princes.

Pope.

- DY'SCRASY. n. f. [δυσκρασία.] An unequal mixture of elements in the blood or nervous juice; a distemperature, when some humour or quality abounds in the body.

DiA.

In this pituitous dyscrasy of blood, we must vomit off the pituita, and purge upon intermissions.

Fleyer on the Humours.

- DYSENTERY. n. f. [dysenteria, French, from δυσεντρία.] A looseness, wherein very ill humours flow off by stool, and are also sometimes attended with blood.

DiA.

From an unusual inconstancy of the weather, and perpetual changes of the wind from east to west, proceed epidemical dysenteries. Arbuth. on Air.

- DYSPEPSY. n. f. [δυσπεψία.] A difficulty of digestion, or bad fermentation in the stomach or guts.

It doth end in a dysentery, palas of the hæmorrhoids, inflammations of any of the lower parts, diabetes, a continual pissing, or a hot dysury, difficulty of making water.

Harvey.

E A D

E, Has two sounds; long, as scène, and short, as men. E is the most frequent vowel in the English language; for it not only is used like the rest in the beginning or end of words, but has the peculiar quality of lengthening the foregoing vowel, as, ein, cane; man, mäne; gip, gäpe; glid, glide; brüd, brüde; chin, chine; wip, wipe; thin, thine; näd, näde; tün, tüne; plüm, plüme. Yet it sometimes occurs final, where yet the foregoing vowel is not lengthened; as güne, knowledge, edge, give. Anciently almost every word ended with e, as for can, canne; for year, yeare; for great, greate; for need, neede; for flock, flocke. It is probable that this e final had at first a soft sound, like the female e of the French; and that afterwards it was in poetry either mute or vocal, as the verse required, 'till at last it became universally silent.

Ea has the sound of e long: the e is commonly lengthened rather by the immediate addition of a than by the apposition of e to the end of the word; as mēn, mēan; sēl, sēal; mēt, mēat; nēt, nēat.

EACH. pron. [elc, Saxon; elch, Dutch; ilk, Scottish.

1. Either of two.

Though your orbs of different greatness be,
Yet both are for each other's use dispos'd;
His to inclose, and your's to be inclos'd. Dryden.

2. Every one of any number. This sense is rare, except in poetry.

Th' invention all admir'd, and each how he
To be the inventor mis'd. Milton.

Let each
His adamant coat gird well, and each Fit well his helm. Milton.

By hunger, that each other creature tames,
Thou art not to be harm'd, therefore not mov'd;
Thy temperance invincible besides.

Milton's Par. Reg.

Wife Plato said, the world with men was stor'd,
That succour each to other might afford. Denham.

To EACH the correspondent word is other, whether it be used of two, or of a greater number.

'Tis said they eat each other. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Let each esteem other better than themselves.

Phil. ii. 3.

Lowliest of women! heaven is in thy soul;
Beauty and virtue shine for ever round thee,
Bright'ning each other! Thou art all divine.

Addison's Cato.

EAD. [ad. ed.] in the compound, and eadig in the simple names, denotes happiness or blessedness. Thus Eadward is a happy preserver; Eadulph, happy assistance; Eadgar, happy power; Eadwin, happy conqueror; which Matarius Enpolemus, Fausla, Fortunatus, Felicianus, &c. do in some measure resemble. Ead may also in some cases be derived from the Saxon eath, which signifies easy, gentle, mild, Gib. Camden.

EA'GER. adj. [eagon, Saxon; aigre, French.]

1. Struck with desire; ardently wishing; keenly desirous; vehement in desire; hotly longing.

Of action eager, and intent of thought;
The chiefs your honourable danger sought.

Dryden's Ovid.

Eager to read the rest, Achates came. Dryden's Æn.

With joy the ambitious youth his mother heard,
And, eager for the journey, soon prepar'd;
He longs the world beneath him to survey,
To guide the chariot, and to give the day. Dryden.

Love inflam'd, and eager on his bliss,
Smother'd her words. Addison's Ovid.

2. It is used sometimes with of, sometimes with for, sometimes with on or after before the thing sought.

3. Hot of disposition; vehement; ardent; impetuous.

Apt as well to quicken the spirits as to allay that which is too eager. Hooker.

Nor do the eager clamours of disputants yield more relief to eclipsed truth, than did the sounding braß of old to the labouring moon.

Glanville's Sceptis.

Imperfect zeal is hot and eager, without knowledge. Spratt.

Eager his tone, and ardent were his eyes. Dryden.
A man, charged with a crime of which he thinks himself innocent, is apt to be too eager in his own defence. Dryden.

4. Quick; busy; easily put in action.

His Numidian genius
Is well dispos'd to mischief, were he prompt
And eager on it; but he must be spur'd. Addis. Cato.

5. Sharp; sower; acid.

With a sudden vigour it doth posset
And curd, like eager droppings, into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood. Shakesp. Hamlet.

6. Keen; severe; biting.

The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.
—It is a nipping and an eager air. Shakesp. Hamlet.
The flesh shrinketh, but the bone resisteth, whereby the cold becometh more eager.

Bacon's Natural History.

7. Brittle; inflexible; not ductile. A cant word of artificers.

Gold will be sometimes so eager, as artists call it, that it will as little endure the hammer as glass itself. Locke.

EA'GERLY

1. With great ardour of desire; with impetuosity of inclination.

To the holy war how fast and eagerly did men go, when the priest persuaded them that whosoever died in that expedition was a martyr? South.

How eagerly he flew, when Europe's fate
Did for the seed of future actions wait. Stepney.

2. Ardently; hotly.

Brutus gave the word too early,
Who having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly; his soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Anthony were all inclos'd. Shakesp.

3. Keenly; sharply.

Abundance of rain froze so eagerly as it fell, that it seemed the depth of winter had of a sudden been come in. Knolles's History of the Turks.

EA'GERNESS

1. Keeness of desire; ardour of inclination.

She knew her distance, and did eager for me,
Madding my eagerness with her restraint. Shakesp.

E A G

Have you not seen, when whistled from the fist,
Some falcon stoop'd at what her eye design'd,
And, with hereagerness, the quarry mis'd. Dryden.

The eagerness and strong bent of the mind after knowledge, if not warily regulated, is often an hindrance to it. Locke.

Detraction and obloquy are received with as much eagerness as wit and humour.

Addison's Freeholder.

Joba lives to catch
That dear embrace, and to return it too,
With mutual warmth and eagerness of love.

Addison's Cato.

His continued application to publick affairs diverts him from those pleasures which are pursued with eagerness by princes who have not the publick so much at heart. Addison.

The things of this world, with whatever eagerness they engage our pursuit, leave us still empty and unsatisfied with their fruition. Rogers.

2. Impetuosity; vehemence; violence.

It finds them in the eagerness and height of their devotion; they are speechless for the time that it continues, and prostrate and dead when it departs.

Dryden.

I'll kill thee with such eagerness of haste,
As fiends, let loose, would lay all nature waste.

Dryden.

EA'GLE. n. f. [aigle, French; aquila, Latin; ealher, Erse.]

A bird of prey, which, as it is reported, renews its age when it grows old. It is also said not to drink at all, like other birds with sharp claws. It is given out, that when an eagle sees its young so well grown as to venture upon flying, it hovers over their nest, and excites them to imitate it, and take their flight; and when it sees them weary, or fearful, it takes them upon its back. Eagles are said to be extremely sharp-sighted, and,
when they take flight, spring perpendicularly upward, with their eyes steadily fixed upon the sun. Calmet.

Draw forth the monsters of the abyss profound,
Or fetch th' aerial eagle to the ground. Pope.

2. The standard of the ancient Romans.

Arts still followed where Rome's eagles flew. Pope.

EA'GLE-EYED. adj. [from eagle and eyed.]

Sharp-sighted as an eagle.

As he was quick and perspicacious, so was he inwardly eagle-eyed, and versed in the humours of his subjects. Howell.

Ev'ry one is eagle-eyed to see Another's faults and his deformity. Dryden.

EA'GLESPED. n. f. [eagle and speed.]

Swiftneß like that of an eagle.

Abrupt, with eaglespeed she cut the sky, Instant invisible to mortal eye. Pope.

EA'GLESTONE. n. f. A stone said to be found at the entrance of the holes in which the eagles make their nests, and affirmed to have a particular virtue in defending the eagle's nest from thunder.

Calmet.

The eaglestone contains, in a cavity within it,
a small loose stone, which rattles when it is shaken;
and every fossil, with a nucleus in it, has obtained the name. The analogy between a stone, thus containing another within it, or, as the fanciful writers express it, pregnant with another, and a woman big with child, led people to imagine that it must have great virtues and effects in accelerating or retarding delivery; so that, if tied to the arm of a woman with child, it prevents abortion; and if to the leg, it promotes delivery. On such idle and imaginary virtues was raised all the credit which this famous fossil possessed for many ages.

4 N

Hill's Materia Medica.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle; and so doth the petites, or eaglestone, which hath a little stone within it.

Bacon.

EA'GLET. n. f. [from eagle.] A young eagle.

This treason of his sons did the king express in an emblem, wherein was an eagle with three eaglets tying on her breast, and the fourth pecking at one of her eyes.

When I am king, claim thou of me The earldom of Hereford.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

EA'RLINESS. n. f. [from early.] Quickness of any action with respect to something else: as, earliness in the morning, the act of rising soon with respect to the sun; earliness of growth, the act of growing up soon in comparison with other things of the same kind.

The next morning we, having striven with the sun's earliness, were beyond the prospect of the highest turrets.

Sidney.

The goodness of the crop is great gain, if the goodness answer the earliness of coming up.

Bacon.

EA'RLY. adj. [ær, Saxon, before.] Soon with respect to something else: as, in the morning, with respect to the sun; in time, with respect to creation; in the season, in comparison with other products.

I am a tainted wether of the flock, Meetest for death: the weakest kind of fruit Drops earliest to the ground, and so let me.

Shakespeare.

It is a curiosity to have several fruits upon one tree; and the more when some of them come early, and some come late.

Bacon's Natural History.

God made all the world, that he might be worshipped in some parts of the world; and therefore, in the first and most early times of the church, what care did he manifest to have such places erected to his honour!

South.

The nymphs, forsaking ev'ry cave and spring, Their early fruit and milk-white turtles bring.

Pope.

Sickness is early old age: it teaches us diffidence in our earthly state, and inspires us with thoughts of a future.

Pope.

Oh foul of honour!
Oh early heroes! Smith's Phædra and Hippolitus.
EA'RLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Soon; betimes.

Early before the morn, with crimson ray,
The windows of bright heav'n opened had. Spenser.

filling early into their minds religion, virtue, and honour. Addison.

To EARN. v. a. [earnian, Saxon.]

1. To gain as the reward or wages of labour, or any performance.

Those that have joined with their honour great perils, are less subject to envy; for men think that they earn their honours hardly. Bacon's Essays.

Winning cheap the high repute,
Which he through hazard huge must earn. Milton.
I to the evil turn

My obvious breast; arming to overcome
By suffering, and earn rest from labour won. Milton.
Men may discern

From what consummate virtue I have chose
This perfect man, by merit call'd my Son,
To earn salvation for the sons of men. Milton.

Since they all beg, it were better for the state to keep them, even although they earned nothing.

Grant's Bills of Mortality.
This is the great expence of the poor, that takes up almost all their earnings. Locke.

The poems gained the plagiarist wealth, while the author hardly earned his bread by repeating them.
Pope on Homer.

After toiling twenty days,
To earn a stock of pence and praise,
Thy labour's grown the critic's prey. Swift.

2. To obtain, as a consequence of action.

I can't say where
It does abhor me, now I speak the word:
To do the act, that might th' addition earn,
Not the world's mals of vanity could make me.

Shakespeare.

EA'RNEST. adj. [earnest, Saxon.]

1. Ardent in any affection; warm; zealous; importunate.

He which prayeth in due sort, is thereby made the more attentive to hear; and he which heareth, the more earnest to pray for the time which we bestow, as well in the one as the other. Hooker.

2. Intent; fixed; eager.

On that prospect strange
Their earnest eyes they fix'd; imagining,
For one forbidden tree, a multitude
Now ris'n, to work them further woe or shame.

They are never more earnest to disturb us, than when they see us most earnest in this duty. Duppa.

3. Serious; important. Some say in earnest, not in jest.

They whom earnest lets do often hinder from being partakers of the whole, have yet this the length of divine service, opportunity for access unto some reasonable part thereof. Hooker.

EA'RNEST. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Seriousness; a serious event, not a jest; reality, not a feigned appearance.

Take heed that this jest do not one day turn to earnest. Sid.

opinion of the world, which every man most earnestly desires. South.

Earnestly invoke the goodness and power of an all-merciful and almighty God. Smalridge.

2. Eagerly; desirously.

Why so earnestly seek you to put up that letter?
Shakespeare.

My soul, more earnestly releas'd,
Will outstrip her's; as bullets flown before,
A latter bullet may o'ertake, the powder being more.

EA'RNESTNESS. n. f. [from earnest.]

1. Eagerness; warmth; vehemence; impetuosity.

Often with a solemn earnestness,
More than, indeed belong'd to such a trifle,
He begg'd of me to steal it. Shakespeare's Othello.
Audacity and confidence doth in business so great effects, as a man may doubt, that, beside the very daring and earnestness, and persisting and importunity, there should be some secret binding, and flooping of other men's spirits to such persons.

Bacon's Natural History.
Marcus is overwarm; his fond complaints
Have so much earnestness and passion in them,
I hear him with a secret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehemence of temper.

Addison's Cato.

2. Solemnity; zeal; seriousness.

There never was a charge maintained with such a shew of gravity and earnestness, which had a slighter foundation to support it. Asterbury.

3. Solitude; care; intenseness.

With overstraining, and earnestness of finishing their pieces, they often did them more harm than good. Dryden.

EARTH. n. f. [from ear, to plow.] A plowed field. Not now in use.

Fires oft are good on barren earths made,
With crackling flames to burn the stubble blade.
May's Vlog.

EARTH. n. f. [eorþe, Saxon.]

1. The element distinct from air, fire, or water; soil; terrene matter.

The smiling god is seen; while water, earth,
And air attest his bounty. Thomson.

2. The terraqueous globe; the world.

Nought so vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special good doth give. Shakesp.
This solid globe we live upon is called the earth;
which word, taken in a more limited sense, signifies such parts of this globe as are capable, being exposed to the air, to give rooting and nourishment to plants, so that they may stand and grow in it.

Locke.

3. Different modification of terrene matter.
In this sense it has a plural.

The five genera of earths are, 1. Boles. 2. Clays.
3. Marls. 4. Ochres. 5. Tripelas.

Hill's Mat. Medica.
Earths are opaque, insipid, and, when dried, friable, or consisting of parts easy to separate, and soluble in water; not disposed to burn, flame, or take fire. Woodward.

4. This world opposed to other scenes of existence.

What are these,
So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,
That look not like th' inhabitants o' th' earth,
And yet are on't? Shakespeare's Macbeth.
They can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heav'n
Will not have earth to know. Shakesp. Cor. I. i.

5. The inhabitants of the earth.

The whole earth was of one language. Gen. xi. 1.

6. Country; distinct region.

In ten set battles have we driven back
Those heathen Saxons, and regain'd our earth,
As earth recovers from the ebbing tide. Dryden.

7. The act of turning up the ground in tillage. [from ear, to plow.]

Such land as ye break up for barley to sow,
Two earths, at the least, ere ye sow it bestow.

Tusser.

To EARTH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hide in earth.

The fox is earthed; but I shall send my two tar-riers in after him. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

2. To cover with earth.

Earth up with fresh mould the roots of those auriculas which the frost may have uncovered.

Evelyn's Calendar.

To EARTH. v. n. To retire under ground.

Hence foxes earth'd, and wolves abhor'd the day,
And hungry churls ensnar'd the nightly prey. Ticket.

EA'RTHBORDE. n. f. [earth and board.] The board of the plow that shakes off the earth.

The plow reckoned the most proper for stiff black clays, is one that is long, large, and broad, with a deep head and a square earthboard, so as to turn up a great furrow. Mortimer.

EA'RTHBORN. adj. [earth and born.]

1. Born of the earth; terrigenous.

The wounds I make but sow new enemies;
Which from their blood, like earthborn brethren rise. Dryden.

The God for ever great, for ever king,
Who slew the earthborn race and measures right
To heav'n's great habitants! Prior.

Earthborn Lycon shall ascend the throne. Smith.

EA'RTHBOUND. adj. [earth and bound.]

Fastened by the pressure of the earth.

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earthbound root? Shakespeare's Macb.

EA'RTHEN. adj. [from earth.] Made of earth; made of clay.

About his shelves
Green earthen pots, bladders, and musty seeds
Were thinly scatter'd. Shakespeare.

As a rustick was digging the ground by Padua, he found an urn, or earthen pot, in which there was another urn, and in this lesser a lamp clearly burning. Wilkins.

The most brittle water-carriage was used among the Egyptians, who, as Strabo saith, would sail sometimes in the boats made of earthen ware.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

EA'RTHFLAX. n. f. [earth and flax.] A kind of fibrous fossil.

EA'RTHLY. adj. [from earth.]

1. Not heavenly; vile; mean; fordid.

But I remember now

I'm in this earthly world, where to do harm

Is often laudable; to do good, sometime

Accounted dangerous folly. Shakesp. Macbeth.

When faith and love, which parted from thee never,

Had ripen'd thy just soul to dwell with God,

Meekly thou didst resign this earthly load

Of death, call'd life. Milton.

2. Belonging only to our present state; not spiritual.

Our common necessities, and the lack which we all have as well of ghostly as of earthly favours, is in each kind easily known. Hooker.

You have scarce time

To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span,

To keep your earthly audit. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

It must be our solemn business and endeavour, at fit seasons, to turn the stream of our thoughts from earthly towards divine objects. Atterbury.

3. Corporeal; not mental.

Great grace that old man to him given had,

For God he often saw, from heaven high,

All were his earthly eyes both blunt and bad. Spenser.

Sudden he view'd, in spite of all her art,

An earthly lover lurking at her heart. Pope.

4. Any thing in the world; a female hyperbole.

Oh! if to dance all night, and dress all day,

Charm'd the small-pox, or chas'd old-age away,

Who would not scorn what housewife's cares produce?

Or who would learn one earthly thing of use? Pope.

EA'RTHNUT. n. s. [earth and nut.] A pig-nut; a root in shape and size like a nut.

When there are earthnuts in several patches, though the roots lie deep in the ground, and the stalks be dead, the swine will by their scent root only where they grow. Ray.

EA'RTHQUAKE. n. s. [earth and quake.] Tremor or convulsion of the earth.

This subterranean heat or fire being in any part of the earth stop'd, by some accidental glut or obstruction in the passages through which it used to ascend, and being preternaturally assembled in greater quantity into one place, causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions; and making the like effort upon the earth, expanded upon the face of the abyss, occasions that agitation and convulsion which we call an earthquake. Woodward's Natural History.

These tumults were like an earthquake, shaking the very foundations of all, than which nothing in the world hath more of horror. King Charles.

Was it his youth, his valour, or success,

These might perhaps be found in other men:

'Twas that respect, that awful homage paid me;

That fearful love which trembled in his eyes,

And with a silent earthquake shook his soul. Dryden.

The country, by reason of its vast caverns and subterraneous fires, has been miserably torn by earthquakes, so that the whole face of it is quite changed. Addison on Italy.

EA'RTHSHAKING. adj. [earth and shake.]

Having power to shake the earth, or to raise earthquakes.

By the earthshaking Neptune's voice,

And Tethys grave majestic pace. Milton.

Now scarce withdrawn the fierce earthshaking

pow'r,

Jove's daughter Pallas watch'd the fav'ring hour;

Back to their caves she bade the winds to fly,

And hush'd the blust'ring brethren of the sky. Pope.

EA'RTHWORM. n. s. [earth and worm.]

1. A worm bred under ground.

Worms are found in snow commonly, like earth- worms, and therefore it is not unlike that it may likewise put forth plants. Bacon's Natural History.

Upon a shower, after a drought, earthworms and landsnails innumerable come out of their lurking places. Ray.

2. A mean fordid wretch.

Thy vain contempt, dull earthworm, cease;

I won't for refuge fly. Norris.

EA'RTHY. adj. [from earth.]

1. Consisting of earth.

Long may'st thou live in Richard's seat to sit,

And soon lie Richard in an earthly pit! Shakesp.

Lamps are inflamed by the admission of new air, when the sepulchres are opened, as we see in fat earthly vapours of divers sorts. Wilkins's Matb. Mag.

All water, especially that of rain, is stored with matter, light in comparison of the common earthly matter. Woodward.

2. Composed or partaking of earth; terrene.

To survey his dead and earthly image,

What were it but to make my sorrow greater. Shakespeare.

Him lord pronounc'd, he, O indignity!

Subjected to his service angel-wings,

And flaming ministers to watch and tend.

Their earthly charge. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Inhabiting the earth; terrestrial.

Those earthly spirits black and envious are;

I'll call up other Gods of form more fair. Dryden.

4. Relating to earth.

Mine is the shipwreck, in a watry sign;

And in an earthly, the dark dungeon thine. Dryden.

5. Not mental; gross; not refined.

Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak;

Lay open to my earthly gross conceit,

Smother'd in errors, feeble, shallow, weak,

The folded meaning of your words deceit. Shakesp.

Nor is my flame

So earthly, as to need the dull material force

Of eyes, or lips, or cheeks. Denham's Sophy.

EASE. n. s. [aïse, French.]

1. Quiet; rest; undisturbed tranquillity; not solicitude.

We should not find her half so brave and bold

To lead it to the wars and to the seas;

To make it suffer watchings, hunger, cold;

When it might feed with plenty, rest with ease. Davies.

The priest on skins of off'ring takes his ease,

And nightly visions in his slumber sees. Dryd. Æn.

2. Freedom from pain; a neutral state between pain and pleasure.

That which we call ease is only an indolency, or a freedom from pain. L'Estrange.

Is it a small crime to wound himself by anguish of heart, to deprive himself of all the pleasures, or eases, or enjoyments of life? Temple.

3. Rest after labour; intermission of labour.

Give yourselves ease from the fatigue of waiting. Swift.

4. Facility; not difficulty.

The willing metal will obey thy hand,

Following with ease, if favour'd by thy fate,

Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state;

If not, no labour can the tree constrain,

And strength of stubborn arms and steel are vain. Dryden.

5. Unconstrained; freedom from harshness, formality; forced behaviour, or conceits.

True ease in writing comes from art, not chance;

As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance. Pope.

6. At EASE. In a state of undisturbed leisure; without pain; without anxiety.

Lucan content with praise, may lie at ease.

In costly grotto and marble palaces. Dryden's Juv.

Men of parts and penetration were not idly to dispute at their ease, but were to act according to the result of their debates. Locke.

No body is under an obligation to know every thing: knowledge and science in general is the business only of those who are at ease and leisure. Locke.

To EASE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To free from pain.

Help and ease children the best you can; but by no means bemoan them. Locke.

2. To assuage; to mitigate; to alleviate.

Thy father made our yoke grievous, now therefore ease thou somewhat the grievous servitude. Cham.

Complain, queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;

It shall be ease'd, if France can yield relief. Shakesp.

As if with sports my sufferings I could ease. Dryd.

Though he speaks of such medicines as procure sleep, and ease pain, he doth not determine their doses. Arbutnot.

Will he for sacrifice our sorrows ease?

And can our tears reverse his firm decrees? Prior.

3. To relieve from labour, or any thing that offends: with of before the thing.

If ere night the gath'ring clouds we fear,

A song will help the beating storm to bear;

And that thou may'st not be too late abroad

Sing, and I'll ease thy shoulders of thy load. Dryd.

I will ease me of mine adversaries. Isaiah, l. 24.

No body feels pain that he wishes not to be ease'd of, with a desire equal to that pain, and inseparable from it. Locke.

EA'SFUL. adj. [ease and full.] Quiet; peaceable; fit for rest.

I spy a black, suspicious, threat'ning cloud,

That will encounter with our glorious sun,

Ere he attain his easy western bed. Shakesp. Henry VI.

1. Assistance; support; relief from expences.

He has the advantage of a free lodging, and some other easements. Swift.

2. [in law.] A service that one neighbour has of another by charter or prescription, without profit; as a way through his ground, a sink, or such like. Cowel.

EA'SILY. adv. [from easy.]

1. Without difficulty.

Sounds move swiftly, and at great distance; but they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopp'd. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

She ask'd the reason of his woe;

She ask'd, but with an air and mien

That made it easily foreseen

She fear'd too much to know. Prior.

2. Without pain; without disturbance; in tranquillity.

Is it not to bid defiance to all mankind to condemn their universal opinions and designs, if, instead of passing your life as well and easily, you resolve to pass it as ill and as miserable as you can? Temple.

3. Readily; without reluctance.

I can easily resign to others the praise of your illustrious family. Dryden's Ded. to State of Inno.

Not soon provok'd, she easily forgives;

And much she suffers, as she much believes. Prior.

EA'SINESS. n. s. [from easy.]

1. Freedom from difficulty.

Believe me, friends, loud tumults are not laid

With half the easiness that they are rais'd. Ben Jonson.

Easiness and difficulty are relative terms, and relate to some power; and a thing may be difficult to a weak man, which yet may be easy to the same person, when assisted with a greater strength. Tilley.

The seeming easiness of Pindarick verse has made it spread; but it has not been considered. Dryden.

You left a conquest more than half achiev'd,

And for whose easiness I almost griev'd. Dryden.

This plea, under a colour of friendship to religion, invites men to it by the easiness of the terms, it offers. Rogers.

2. Flexibility; compliance; readiness; not opposition; not reluctance.

His yielding unto them in one thing might happily put them in hope, that time would breed the like easiness of condescending further unto them. Hooker.

Since

Since the change of east to alter and change laws is so evil, no doubt but to bear a tolerable fore is better than to run on a dangerous remedy. Hooker.

Give to him, and he shall but laugh at your east; save his life, but, when you have done, look to your own. South.

The safest way to secure honesty is to lay the foundation of it early in liberality, and an east to part with to others whatever they have or like themselves. Locke.

3. Freedom from constraint; not effort; not formality.

Abstract and mystick thoughts you must express with painful care, but seeming east; For truth shines brightest through the plainest dress. Roscommon.

4. Rest; tranquillity; ease; freedom from pain.

I think the reason I have assigned hath a great interest in that rest and east we enjoy when asleep. Ray.

A knave, a rascal, an eater of broken meats. Shak.

If the taste of this fruit maketh the eaters like gods, why remainest thou a beast? Brown's Vulg. Err.

As if the lotus grew only here, the virtue of whose fruit is to cause in the eaters an oblivion of all other soils. Howel.

2. A corrosive.

EATH. adj. [ead, Saxon.] Easy; not difficult. An old word.

Where eath abounds, it's eath to do amiss. Fairy Queen.

What works not beauty, man's relenting mind Is eath to move with plaints and shows of woe. Keats.

The way was straight and eath. Fairfax.

EATH. adv. [from the adjective.] Easily. An old word.

Who hath the world not try'd, From the right way full eath may wander wide. Hubb. Tale.

EATINGHOUSE. n. s. [eate and house.] A house house where provisions are sold ready dressed.

An hungry traveller slept into an eating house for his dinner. L'Estrange.

EAVES. n. f. [efere, Saxon.] The edges of the roof which overhang the house.

Every night he comes
With musick of all sorts, and songs compos'd
To her unworthiness: it nothing leads us
To chide him from our eaves; for he persists,
As if his life lay on't.

Shakespeare. All's well that ends well.

His tears run down his beard, like Winter drops
From eaves of reeds. Shakespeare. Tempest.

If in the beginning of Winter the drops of the eaves of houses come more slowly down than they use, it portendeth a hard and frosty Winter. Bacon.

Usher'd with a shower still,
When the gulf hath blown his fill,
Finding on the rustling leaves,
With minute drops from off the eaves. Milton.

The icicles hang down from the eaves of houses. Woodward.

Under our tents I'll play the eaves dropper.
To hear if any mean do shrink from me. Shakespeare.

EBB. n. f. [ebba, eylob, Saxon; ebbe, Dutch.]

1. The reflux of the tide towards the sea: opposed to flow.

The clear sun on his wide wat'ry glass
Gaz'd hot, and of the fresh wave largely drew,
As after thirst; which made their flowing shrink
From standing lake to tripping ebb, that stole
With soft foot tow'rd the deep. Milton.

Hither the seas at stated times resort,
And shove the laden vessels into port;
Then with a gentle ebb retire again,
And render back their cargo to the main. Addison on Italy.

2. Decline; decay; waste.

You have finished all the war, and brought all things to that low ebb which you speak of. Spenser on Ireland.

This tide of man's life, after it once turneth and declineth, ever runneth with a perpetual ebb and falling stream, but never floweth again. Raleigh's History.

Thus all the treasure of our flowing years,
Our ebb of life for ever takes away. Rescaymon.

The greatest age for poetry was that of Augustus Cæsar, yet painting was then at its lowest ebb, and perhaps sculpture was also declining. Dryden.

Near my apartment let him pris'ner be,
That I his hourly ebb of life may see. Dryden.

What is it he aspires to?
Is it not this? To shed the flow remains,
His last poor ebb of blood in your defence. Addison's Cato.

To EBB. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To flow back towards the sea: opposed to flow.

Though my tide of blood
Hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now,
Now it doth turn and ebb back to the sea. Shakespeare.

From thence the tide of fortune left their shower,
And ebb'd much faster than it flow'd before. Dryden's Æn.

2. To decline; to decay; to waste.

Well, I am standing water:
—I'll teach you how to flow.

—Do so: to ebb
Hereditary sloth instructs me. Shakespeare. Tempest.

But oh, he ebbs! the smiling waves decay!
For ever lovely stream, forever stay! Halifax.

E'BN. } n. f. [ebenus, Latin.] A hard,

E'BON. } heavy, black, valuable wood.

E'BONY. } which admits a fine gloss.

If the wood be very hard, as ebony, or lignum vitæ, they are to turn; they use not the same tools they do for soft woods. Mowbray's Meob. Exercises.

Of by the winds extinct the signal lies,
Ere night has half roll'd round her ebon throne. Gay.

EBRI'ETY. n. f. [ebrietas, Latin.] Drunkenness; intoxication by strong liquors.

Bitter almonds, as an antidote against ebriety, hath commonly failed. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EBRILLADE. n. f. [French.] A check of the bridle which a horseman gives a horse, by a jerk of one rein, when he refuses to turn.

EBRIOSITY. n. f. [ebriositas, Latin.] Habitual drunkenness.

That religion which excuseth Noah in surprisal, will neither acquit ebriety nor ebriety in their intended perversion. Brown.

EBULLITION. n. f. [ebullo, Lat.]

1. The act of boiling up with heat.

2. Any intestine motion.

The dissolution of gold and silver disagree; so that in their mixture there is great ebullition, darkness, and in the end, a precipitation of a black powder. Bacon.

Iron, in aqua fortis, will fall into ebullition with noise and emication; as also a crasse and humid exhalation, caused from the combat of the sulphur of iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aqua fortis. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. That struggling or effervescence which arises from the mingling together any alkalizate and acid liquor; any intestine violent motion of the parts of a fluid occasioned by the struggling of particles of different properties. Quincy.

When aqua fortis, or spirit of vitriol, poured upon filings of iron, dissolves the filings with a great heat and ebullition, is not the heat and ebullition effected by a violent motion of the parts; and does not their motion argue, that the acid parts of the liquor rush towards the parts of the metal with violence, and run forcibly into its pores, 'till they get between its outmost particles and the main mass of the metal? Newton.

A violent cold, as well as heat, may be produced by this ebullition; for if sal ammoniac, or any pure volatile alkali, dissolved in water, be mixed with an acid, an ebullition, with a greater degree of cold, will ensue. Arbutnot on Aliments.

ECCE'NTRICAL. } adj. [eccentricus, Lat.]

ECCE'NTRICK. }

1. Deviating from the centre.

2. Not having the same centre with another circle: such circles were supposed by the Ptolemaick philosophy.

Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricicks and epicycles, and a wonderful engine of orbs. Bacon.

Thither his course he bends
Through the calm firmament; but up or down,
By centrick or eccentric, hard to tell. Milton.

They build, unbuild, contrive,
[To save appearances: they gird the sphere
With centrick, and eccentric, scribbled o'er,
Cycle, and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton.

Whence is it that planets move all one and the same way in orbs concentrick, while comets move all manner of ways in orbs very eccentric? Newton's Opticks.

3. Not terminating in the same point; not directed by the same principle.

Whatsoever affairs pass such a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends; which must needs be often eccentric to the ends of his maker. Bacon's Essays.

Irregular; anomalous; deviating from stated and constant methods.

This motion, like others of the times, seem eccentric and irregular. King Charles.

A character of an eccentric virtue, is the more exact image of human life, because it is not wholly exempted from its frailties. Dryden.

Then from what'er we can to sense produce,
Common and plain, or wood'rous and abstruse,
From nature's constant or eccentric laws,
The thoughtful soul this general inference draws.
That an effect must presuppose a cause. Prior.

ECCENTRICITY. n. f. [from eccentric.]

1. Deviation from a centre.

2. The state of having a different centre from another circle.

In regard of eccentricity, and the epicycle wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is unequal. Brown.

By reason of the sun's eccentricity to the earth, and obliquity to the equator, he appears to us to move unequally. Holder.

3. Excursion from the proper orb.

The duke at his return from his eccentricity, for so I account favourites abroad, met no good news. Wotton.

4. Eccentricity of the earth is the distance between the focus and the centre of the earth's elliptick orbit. Harris.

ECCHY'MOSIS. n. f. [εκχυμωσις.] Livid spots or blotches in the skin, made by extravasated blood. Quincy.

Ecchymosis may be defined an extravasation of the blood in or under the skin, the skin remaining whole. Wifeman.

Laxations are accompanied with tumour and ecchymosis. Wifeman.

ECCLESIASTICAL. } adj. [ecclesiasticus, Lat.] Relating to the church; not civil.

Is discipline an ecclesiastical matter or civil? If an ecclesiastical, it must belong to the duty of the ministers. Hasker.

Clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, yet in their sermons are liberal of those which they find in ecclesiastical writers. Swift.

A church of Englandman has a true veneration for the scheme established among us of ecclesiastical government. Swift.

ECCLESIASTICK. n. f. [from the adjective.] A person dedicated to the ministries of religion.

The ambition of the ecclesiasticks destroyed the purity of the church. Burnet's Theory.

ECCOPROTICKS. n. f. [εκκοπρωτικα.] Such medicines as gently purge the belly, so as to bring away no more than the natural excrements lodged in the intestines.

The body ought to be maintained in its daily excretions by such means as are eccoprotick. Harvey on the Plague.

ECHINA'TE. } adj. [from echinus, Latin.]

ECHINA'TED. } Bristled like an hedgehog; set with prickles.

An echinated pyrites in shape approaches the echinated crystalline balls. Woodward on Fossils.

E'CHINUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A hedgehog.

2. A shell fish set with prickles.

3. [With botanists.] The prickly head, cover of the seed, or top of any plant.

4. [In architecture.] A member or ornament, taking its name from the roughness of the carving, resembling the prickly rind of a chesnut, and not unlike the thorny coat of a hedgehog.

This ornament is used by modern architects in cornices of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite orders; and generally set next to the abacus, being curved with anchors, darts, and ovals or eggs. Harris.

E'CHO. n. f. [ἠχώ; Lat.]

1. Echo was supposed to have been once a nymph, ymph, who pined into a sound for love of Narcissus.

The pleasant myrtle may teach th' unfortunate Ecbo
In these woods to resound the renowned name of a goddess. Sidney.

2. The return or repercussion of any sound.
The sound, filling great spaces in arched lines, cannot be guided; therefore there hath not been any means to make artificial ecboer. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

3. The sound returned.
Babbling ecbo mocks the hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well-tun'd horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once. Shakefp.
Wilt thou hunt?
Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,
And fetch shrill ecboes from their hollow earth.
Shakespeare.

O woods, O fountains, hillocks, dales and bow'rs!
With other ecbo late I taught your shades
To answer, and resound far other song! Milton.
To you I mourn, nor to the deaf I sing;
The woods shall answer, and the ecbo ring. Pope.
'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;
The sound must seem an ecbo to the sense. Pope.

To E'CHO. v. n.

1. To resound; to give the repercussion of a voice.

At the parting
All the church ecbo'd. Shakefp. Taming of the Shrew.
Through rocks and caves the name of Delia
sounds;

Della each cave and ecboing rock rebounds. Pope.

2. To be founded back.
Hark, how the sound disturbs imperious Rome!
Shakes her proud hills, and rolls from dome to dome!
Her mix'd princes hear the ecboing noise,
And, Albion, dread thy wrath and awful voice.
Blackmore.

To E'CHO. v. a. To send back a voice;
to return what has been uttered.

Our separatists do but ecbo the same note.

With peals of shouts the Tyrians praise the song;
Those peals are ecbo'd by the Trojan throng.
Dryden's Aen.

One great death deforms the dreary ground;
The ecbo'd woes from distant rocks resound. Prior.

ECLAIRCISSEMENT. n. f. [French.] Explanation; the act of clearing up an affair by verbal expostulation.

The eclaircissement ended in the discovery of the informer. Clarendon.

ECLAT. n. f. [French.] Splendour; show;
lustre. Not English.

Nothing more contributes to the variety, surprise, and eclat of Homer's battles, than that artificial manner of gaging his heroes by each other.
Pope's Essay on Homer.

ECLÉ'TICK. adj. [Greek.] Selecting;
chusing at will.

Cicero was of the eclé'tick sect, and chose out of each such positions as came nearest truth.
Watts on the Mind.

ECLÉ'GMA. n. f. [Greek.] A form of medicine made by the incorporation of oils with syrups, and which is to be taken upon a liquorice stick. Quincy.

ECLIPSE. n. f. [Greek.]
1. An obscuration of the luminaries of heaven; the sun is eclipsed by the intervention of the moon; the moon by the interposition of the earth. The word originally signifies departure from the place, to which Milton alludes.

Sips of yew,
Silver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shakefp. Macbeth.
Planets, planet-struck, real eclipses
Then suffer'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
So though the sun victorious be,
And from a dark eclipse let free,

The influence, which we fondly fear,
Afflicts our thoughts the following year. Waller.

An eclipse of the moon is when the atmosphere of the earth, between the sun and the moon, hinders the light of the sun from falling upon and being reflected by the moon: if the light of the sun is kept off from the whole body of the moon, it is a total eclipse; if from a part only, it is a partial one.
Locke.

2. Darkness; obscuration.

All the posterity of our first parents suffered a perpetual eclipse of spiritual life. Raleigh's Hist.
Experience we have of the vanity of human glory,
in our scatterings and eclipses. King Charles.

To ECLIPSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To darken a luminary.

Let the eclipsed moon her throne resign. Sandys.
Now if the earth were flat the darken'd moon
Would seem to all eclips'd as well as one. Greecb.

2. To extinguish; to put out.

Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son,
Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon. Shakefp. Henry VI.

3. To cloud; to obscure.

They had seen tokens of more than common greatness, howsoever now eclipsed with fortune.
Sidney.

Praise him to his father:

—Let the prince's story
Seem to eclipse, and cast a cloud on his.
Danham's Sophy.

Let other muses write his prosp'rous fate,
Of conquer'd nations tell, and kings reitor'd;
But mine shall sing of his eclips'd estate,
Which, like the sun's more wonders does afford.
Dryden.

He descended from his Eathery, and eclipsed the glory of his divine Majesty with a veil of flesh.
Calamy's Sermons.

4. To disgrace.

She told the king, that her husband was eclipsed in Ireland by the no-countenance his majesty had shewed towards him. Clarendon.

Another now hath to himself engros'd
All pow'r, and us eclips'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

ECLIP'TICK. n. f. [Greek.] A great circle of the sphere, supposed to lie drawn through the middle of the Zodiack, and making an angle with the Equinoctial, in the points of Aries and Libra, of 23°. 30'. which is the sun's greatest declination. This is by some called via solis, or the way of the sun, because the sun, in his annual motion, never deviates from this line. This line is drawn on the globe: but in the new astronomy the Ecliptick is that path among the fixed stars, which the earth appears to describe to an eye placed in the sun, as in its annual motion it runs round the sun from West to East. If you suppose this circle to be divided into twelve equal parts, they will be the twelve signs. Harris.

All stars that have their distance from the Eclip-tick northwards not more than twenty-three degrees and a half, may, in progression of time, have declination southward, and move beyond the equator.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The terraqueous globe had the same size and position, in respect of the sun, that it now hath: its axis was not parallel to that of the Ecliptick, but inclined in like manner as it is at present.
Woodward's Natural History.

You must conceive an imaginary plane, which passing through the centre of the sun and the earth, extends itself on all sides as far as the firmament:
this plane is called the Ecliptick, and in this the centre of the earth is perpetually carried, without any deviation. Bentley.

ECLIP'TICK. adj. Described by the eclip-tick line.

The earth's rotation makes the night and day;
The sun revolving through th' Ecliptick way,
Effects the various seasons of the year. Blackmore.

E'CLOGUE. n. f. [Greek.] A pastoral poem, so called because Virgil called his pastorals eclogues.

What exclaiming praises Basilus gave this eclogue any man may guess, that knows love is better than spectacles to make every thing seem great. Sidney.

It is not sufficient that the sentences be brief, the whole eclogue should be so too. Pope.

ECO'NOMY. n. f. [Greek.] This word is often written, from its derivation, æconomy; but æ being no diphthong in English, it is placed here with the authorities for different orthography.]

1. The management of a family; the government of a household.

By St. Paul's economy the heir differs nothing from a servant, while he is in his minority; so a servant should differ nothing from a child in the sub-

2. Distribution of expence.

Particular sums are not laid out to the greatest advantage in his economy; but are sometimes suffered to run waste, while he is only careful of the main. Dryden.

Frugality; discretion of expence; laudable parsimony.

I have no other notion of economy, than that it is the parent of liberty and ease. Swift to Bolingb.

4. Disposition of things; regulation.

All the divine and infinitely wise ways of economy that God could use towards a rational creature, oblige mankind to that course of living which is most agreeable to our nature. Hamm.

5. The disposition or arrangement of any work.

In the Greek poets, as in Plautus, we see the economy and disposition of poems better observed than in Tertence. Ben Johnson.

If this economy must be observed in the minutest parts of an epick poem, what soul, though sent into the world with great advantages of nature, cultivated with the liberal arts and sciences, can be sufficient to inform the body of so great a work?
Dryden's Dedication to the Aeneid.

6. System of matter; distribution of every thing active or passive to its proper place.

These the strainers aid,
That by a constant separation made,
They may a due economy maintain,
Exclude the noxious parts, the good retain.
Blackmore.

ECONOMICK. } adj. [from economy.]
ECONOMICAL. }

1. Pertaining to the regulation of an household.

Her quick'ning power in every living part,
Both as a nurse, or as a mother serve;
And doth employ her economick art,
And busy care, her household to preserve. Davies.

In economical affairs, having proposed the government of a family, we consider the proper means to effect it. Watts.

2. Frugal.

Some are so plainly economical, as even to desire that the seat be well watered, and well swelled.
Wotton's Architect.

ECHE'RACTICKS. n. f. [Greek.]
Such medicines as render tough humours more thin, so as to promote their discharge. Quincy.

Procure the blood a free course, ventilation, and transpiration, by suitable purges and ecphractick medicines. Harvey.

ECTASY. n. f. [Greek.]

1. Any passion by which the thoughts are absorbed, and in which the mind is for a time lost.

Follow them swiftly,

And

And hinder them from what this ecstasy
May now provoke them to. Shakefp. Temp. st.

'T may be
No longer joy there, but an ecstasy. Suckling.
Whether what we call ecstasy be not dreaming with our eyes open, I leave to be examined, Locke.

2. Excessive joy; rapture.

O love, be moderate! allay thy ecstasy. Shakefp.
The religious pleasure of a well-disposed mind moves gently, and therefore constantly: it does not affect by rapture and ecstasy; but is like the pleasure of health, still and sober. South.

Each delighted, and delighting, gives
The pleasing ecstasy which each receives, Prior.
A pleasure, which no language can express;
An ecstasy, that mothers only feel,
Plays round my heart. Philipp. Dismiss Mother.

3. Enthusiasm; excessive elevation and absorption of the mind.

He lov'd me well, and oft would beg me sing;
Which when I did, he on the tender grass
Would sit, and harken even to ecstasy. Milton.

4. Excessive grief or anxiety. This is not now used.

Sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air,
Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow seems A modern ecstasy. Shakefp. Macbeth.

Better be with the dead,
Than on the torture of the mind to lie
In restless ecstasy. Shakefp. Macbeth.

5. Madness; distraction. This sense is not now in use.

Now see that noble and most sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled out of tune, and harsh,
That unmatch'd form, and feature of blown youth, Blasted with ecstasy. Shakefp. Hamlet.

ECSTASIED. adj. [from ecstasy.] Ravished; filled with enthusiasm.

These are as common to the inanimate things as to the most ecstasied soul upon earth. Norris.

ECSTATICAL. } adj. [in ecstasy.]

ECSTATICK. } adj. [in ecstasy.]

1. Ravished; rapturous; elevated beyond the usual bounds of nature.

There doth my soul in holy vision sit,
In pensive trance, and anguish, and ecstasick fit. Milton.

When one of them, after an ecstasick manner,
fell down before an angel, he was severely rebuked,
and bidden to worship God. Stillingfleet.

In trance ecstasick may thy pangs be drown'd;
Bright clouds descend, and angels watch thee round. Pope.

2. Raised to the highest degree of joy.

To gain Pescennius one employs his schemes;
One grasps a Cærops in ecstasick dreams. Pope.

3. Tending to external objects. This sense is, I think, only to be found once, though agreeable enough to the derivation.

I find in me a great deal of ecstasick love, which continually carries me out to good without myself. Norris.

ECTYPE. n. s. [ετυπη.] A copy.

The complex ideas of substances are ectypes, copies, but not perfect ones; not adequate. Locke.

ECURIE. n. s. [French; equus, Lat.] A place covered for the lodging or housing of horses.

EDACIOUS. adj. [edax, Lat.] Eating; voracious; devouring; predatory; ravenous; rapacious; greedy.

EDACITY. n. s. [edacitas, Lat.] Voracity; ravenousness; greediness; rapacity.

The wolf is a beast of great edacity and digestion;
it may be the parts of him comfort the bowels. Bacon.

To EDDER. v. a. [probably from edge.]

To bind or interweave a fence. Not in use.

To add strength to the hedge, edder it; which is, bind the top of the stakes with some small long pole on each side. Mortimer's Husbandry.

EDDER. n. s. [from the verb.] Such fence-wood as is commonly put upon the top of fences. Not in use.

In lopping and felling, save edder and stakes,
Thin hedges, as needeth, to mend or to make. Tusser.

EDDY. n. s. [ed, backward, again, and ea, water, Saxon.]

1. The water that by some repercussion, or opposite wind, runs contrary to the main stream.

My praises are as a bulrush, upon a stream; if they sink not, 'tis because they are borne up by the strength of the current, which supports their lightness; but they are carried round again, and return on the eddy where they first began. Dryden.

2. Whirlpool; circular motion.

The wild waves murther'd him, and suck'd him in,
And smiling eddies dimpled on the main. Dryden.
So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden, th' impetuous hurricanes descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away. Addison's Cato.

EDDY. adj. Whirling; moving circularly.

And chaff with eddy winds is whirl'd around;
And dancing leaves are lifted from the ground. Dryd. Virg.

EDEMATOSE. adj. [ειδματωσ.] Swelling; full of humours; commonly written oedematous.

A serosity obstructing the glands may be watery, edematose, and schitrous, according to the viscidosity of the humour. Arbutnot.

EDENTATED. adj. [edentatus, Lat.] Deprived of teeth.

EDGE. n. s. [ecbe, Saxon.]

1. The thin or cutting part of a blade.

Seize upon Fife; give to the edge o' th' sword
His wife, his babes. Shakefp. Macbeth.
He that will a good edge win,
Must forge thick, and grind thin. Proverb.
The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife,
No more shall cut his master. Shakefp.
'Tis slander,
Whose edge is sharper than the sword. Shakefp. Cymbeline.

2. A narrow part rising from a broader.

Some harrow their ground over, and then plow
it upon an edge. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. Brink; margin; extremity.

The rays which pass very near to the edges of any body, are bent a little by the action of the body. Newton's Opticks.
We have, for many years, walked upon the edge of a precipice, while nothing but the slender thread of human life has held us from sinking into endless misery. Rogers.
Yet, the last pen for freedom let me draw,
When truth stands trembling on the edge of law. Pope.

4. Sharpness of mind; proper disposition for action or operation; intenseness of desire.

Give him a further edge,
And drive his purpose into these delights. Shakefp. Hamlet.
But when long time the wretches thoughts refin'd,
When want had set an edge upon their mind,
Then various cares their working thoughts employ'd,
And that which each invented, all enjoy'd. Creech's Manil.

5. Keeness; acrimony of temper.

Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord!
That would reduce these bloody days again. Shakefp. Rich. III.

6. To set teeth on EDGE. To cause a tingling uneasiness in the teeth.

A harsh grating tone set to the teeth on edge. Bacon.

To EDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sharpen; to enable to cut.
There sat she roiling her alluring eyes,
To edge her champion's sword, and urge my ruin. Dryden.

2. To furnish with an edge.
I fell'd along a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case,
So wond'rous hard, and so secure of wound,
It made my sword, though edge with flint, rebound. Dryden.

3. To border with any thing; to fringe.
Their long descending train,
With rubies edge'd, and sapphires, swept the plain. Dryden.

I rid over hanging hills, whose tops were edged with groves, and whose foot were watered with winding rivers. Pope.

4. To exasperate; to embitter.
By such reasonings the simple were blinded, and the malicious edged. Hayward.
He was indigent and low in money, which perhaps might have a little edged his desperation. Wotton's Life of D. of Buck.

5. To put forward beyond a line.
Edging by degrees their chairs forwards, they were in a little time got up close to one another. Locke.

To EDGE. v. n. [perhaps from ed, back-ward, Saxon.] To move forward against any power; going close upon a wind, as if upon its skirts or border, and so sailing slow.

I must edge upon a point of wind,
And make slow way. Dryden's Cleomenes.

EDGED. participial adj. [from edge.] Sharp; not blunt.

We find that subtle or edged quantities do prevail over blunt ones. Digby on Bodies.

EDGING. n. s. [from edge.]

1. What is added to any thing by way of ornament.

The garland which I wove for you to wear,
And border'd with a rosy edging round. Dryden.
A woman branches out into a long dissertation upon the edging of a petticoat. Addison's Spect.

2. A narrow lace.

EDGELESS. adj. [from edge.] Blunt; obtuse; unable to cut.
To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword; despair and die. Shakefp. Rich. III.

They are edgeless weapons it hath to encounter. Dec. of P.

EDGETOOL. n. s. [edge and tool.] A tool made sharp to cut.
There must be no playing with things sacred, nor jesting with edgetools. L'Estrange.
Nurses from their children keep edgetools. Dorset.
I shall exercise upon steel, and its several sorts;
and what sort is fittest for edgetools, which for springs. Moxon.

EDGEWISE. adv. [edge and wise.] With the edge put into any particular direction.
Should the flat side be objected to the stream, it would be soon turned edgewise by the force of it. Ray.

EDIBLE. adj. [from edo, Latin.] Fit to be eaten; fit for food.

Some flesh is not edible, as horses and dogs. Bacon.
Wheat and barley, and the like, are made either edible or potable by man's art and industry. Mort against Ateism.

Some of the fungous kind, gathered for edible mushrooms, have produced a difficulty of breathing. Arbutnot.

The edible creation decks the board. Prior.

EDICT. n. s. [edictum, Lat.] A proclamation or command or prohibition; a law promulgated.

When

EDI

When an absolute monarch commanded his subjects that which seemeth good in his own discretion, hath not his edict the force of a law? Hooker.

The great King's kings,
Hath in the table of his law commanded
That thou shalt do no murder; will you then Spurn at his edict, and fulfil a man's?

Shakesp. Rich. III.

Severe decrees may keep our tongues in awe,
But to our thoughts what edict can give law? Dryd.

The ministers are always preaching, and the governors putting out edicts, against gaming and false cloaths. Addison.

EDIFICATION. n. f. [edificatio, Lat.]

1. The act of building up man in the faith; improvement in holiness.

Our blessed Saviour told us, that we must account for every idle word, not meaning that every word not designed for edification, or less prudent, shall be reckoned for a sin. Taylor.

2. Improvement; instruction.

Out of these magazines I shall supply the town with what may tend to their edification. Addison's Guardian.

EDIFICE. n. f. [edificium, Lat.] A fabrick; a building; a structure.

My love was like a fair house built on another man's ground; so that I have lost my edifice by mistaking the place where I erected it.

Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
God built

So spacious, and his line stretch'd out so far,
That man may know he dwells not in his own;
An edifice too large for him to fill. Milton.

The edifice, where all were met to see him,
Upon their heads and on his own he pull'd. Milton.

As Tuscan pillars owe their original to this country, the architects always give them a place in edifices raised in Tuscany. Addison on Italy.

He must be an idiot that cannot discern more strokes of workmanship in the structure of an animal than in the most elegant edifice. Bentley.

EDIFIER. n. f. [from edify.] One that improves or instructs another.

To EDIFY. v. a. [edifico, Lat.]

1. To build.

There was a holy chapel edify'd,
Wherein the hermit wont to lay
His holy things each morn and eventide. Spenser.
Men have edify'd

A lofty temple, and perfum'd an altar to thy name. Chapm.

2. To instruct; to improve.

He who speaketh no more than edifyeth, is undeservedly reprehended for much speaking. Hooker.

Men are edified, when either their understanding is taught somewhat whereof, in such actions, it becometh all men to consider, or when their hearts are moved with any affection suitable thereunto. Hooker.

Life is no life, without the blessing of a friendly and an edifying conversation. L'Estrange.

He gave, he taught; and edify'd the more,
Because he shew'd, by proof, 'twas easy to be poor. Dryden.

3. To teach; to persuade. This is now either obsolete or ludicrous.

You shall hardly edify me, that those nations might not, by the law of nature, have been subdued by any nation that had only policy and moral virtue. Bacon's Holy War.

EDILE. n. f. [edilis, Latin] The title of a magistrate in old Rome, whose office seems in some particulars to have resembled that of our justices of peace.

The edile, ho! let him be apprehended. Shakesp.

EDITION. n. f. [editio, Latin.]

1. Publication of any thing, particularly of a book.

This English edition is not so properly a translation, as a new composition upon the same ground. Burnet.

VOL. I,

EFF

2. Republication; generally with some revision or correcting.

These are of the second edition. Shakesp.

The business of our redemption is to rub over the defaced copy of the creation, to reprint God's image upon the soul, and to set forth nature in a second and a fairer edition. South.

I cannot go so far as he who published the last edition of him. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

The Code, composed hastily, was forced to undergo an emendation, and to come forth in a second edition. Baker.

EDITOR. n. f. [editor, Latin.] Publisher; he that revises or prepares any work for publication.

When a different reading gives us a different sense, or a new elegance in an author, the editor does very well in taking notice of it. Addis. Spect.

This nonsense got into all the editions by a mistake of the stage editors. Pope's Notes on Shakesp.

To EDUCATE. v. a. [educio, Latin.] To breed; to bring up; to instruct youth.

Their young succession all their cares employ,

E'GOTIST. n. s. [from ego.] One that is always repeating the word ego, I; a talker of himself.

A tribe of egotists, for whom I have always had a mortal aversion, are the authors of memoirs, who are never mentioned in any works but their own. Spect.

To E'GOTIZE. v. n. [from ego.] To talk much of one's self.

EGRE'GIOUS. adj. [egregious, Lat.]

1. Eminent; remarkable; extraordinary.

He might be able to adorn this present age, and furnish history with the records of egregious exploits both of art and valour. Moore against Atheism.

One to empire born;

Egregious prince; whose manly childhood shew'd His mingled parents, and portended joy Unspeakable. Philips.

An egregious and pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity. Woodward.

2. Eminently bad; remarkably vicious. This is the usual sense.

We may be bold to conclude, that these last times, for insolence, pride, and egregious contempt of all good order, are the worst. Hooker's Preface.

Ah me, most credulous fool!

Egregious murderer! Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

And hence th' egregious wizzard shall foredoom

The fate of Louis and the fall of Rome. Pope.

EGRE'GIOUSLY. adv. [from egregious.] Eminent ly; shamefully.

Make the Moor thank me, love me, and reward me,

For making him egregiously an ass,

And practising upon his peace and quiet,

Even to madness. Shakespeare's Othello.

He discovered that, besides the extravagance of every article, he had been egregiously cheated.

Arbutnot's John Bull.

E'GRESS. n. s. [egressus, Lat.] The power or act of going out of any place; departure.

Gates of burning adamant,

Barr'd over us, prohibit all egress. Milton.

This water would have been locked up within the earth, and its egress utterly debarred, had the strata of stone and marble remained continuous.

Woodward's Nat. Hist.

EGRE'SSION. n. s. [egressio, Lat.] The act of going out.

The vast number of troops is expressed in the swarms; their tumultuous manner of issuing out of their ships, and the perpetual egression, which seemed without end, are imaged in the bees pouring out. Pope.

E'GRET. n. s. A fowl of the heron kind, with red legs. Bailie.

E'GRIOT. n. s. [aigret, French; perhaps from aigre, sour.] A species of cherry.

The cœur-cherry, which inclineth more to white, is sweeter than the red: but the egriot is more sour. Bacon.

To EJA'ULATE. v. a. [ejaculor, Lat.]

To throw; to shoot; to dart out.

Being rooted so little way in the skin, nothing near so deeply as the quills of fowls, they are the more easily ejaculated. Grew's Museum.

The mighty magnet from the centre darts

This strong, though subtle force, through all the parts:

Its active rays ejaculated thence,

Irradiate all the wide circumference. Blackmore.

EJACULATION. n. s. [from ejaculate.]

1. The act of darting or throwing out.

There seemeth to be acknowledged, in the act of envy, an ejaculation or irradiation of the eye.

Bacon's Essays.

There is to be observed, in those dissolutions which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are; as the ebullition, the precipitation to the bottom, the ejaculation towards the top, the suspension in the midst, and the like. Bacon.

2. A short prayer darted out occasionally, without solemn retirement.

In your dressing let there be ejaculations fitted to the several actions of dressing; as at washing your hands, pray God to cleanse your soul from sin.

Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

EJA'CLATORY. adj. [from ejaculate.]

1. Suddenly darted out; uttered in short sentences.

The continuance of this posture might incline to ease and drowsiness; they used it rather upon some short ejaculatory prayers, than in their larger devotions. Duppa's Devotion.

2. Sudden; hasty.

We are not to value ourselves upon the merit of ejaculatory repentances, that take us by fits and starts. L'Estrange.

To EJE'CT. v. a. [ejicio, ejectum, Lat.]

1. To throw out; to cast forth; to void.

Infernal lightning sallies from his throat!

Ejected sparks upon the billows float! Sandys.

The heart, as said, from its contracted cave,

On the left side ejects the bounding wave. Blackmore.

Tears may spoil the eyes, but not wash away the affliction, sighs may exhaust the man, but not eject

the burthen. South.

2. To throw out or expel from an office or expression.

It was the force of conquest; force with force

Is well ejected, when the conquer'd can. Milton.

The French king was again ejected when our king submitted to the church. Dryden.

3. To expel; to drive away; to dismiss with hatred.

We are peremptory to dispatch

This viperous traitor; to eject him hence,

Were but our danger; and to keep him here,

Our certain death; therefore it is decreed

He dies to-night. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

4. To cast away; to reject.

To have ejected whatsoever the church doth make account of, be it never so harmless in itself, and of never so ancient continuance, without any other crime to charge it with, than only that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, could not have been defended. Hooker.

Will any man say, that if the words whoring and drinking were by parliament ejected out of the English tongue, we should all awake next morning chaste and temperate. Swift.

EJE'CTRON. n. s. [ejectio, Lat.]

1. The act of casting out; expulsion.

These stories are founded on the ejection of the fallen angels from heaven. Broome.

EIGHTH. adj. [from eight.] Next in order to the seventh; the ordinal of eight.

Another yet?—A seventh! I'll see no more;

And yet the eighth appears! Shakespeare's Macbeth.

In the eighth month should be the reign of Saturn. Bacon.

I stay reluctant seven continued years,

And water her ambrosial couch with tears;

The eighth the voluntarily moves to part,

Or urg'd by Jove, or her own changeful heart. Pope.

EIGHTEEN. adj. [eight and ten.] Twice nine.

He can't take two from twenty, for his heart,

And leave eighteen. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

If men naturally live but twenty years, we should be satisfied if they died about eighteen; and yet eighteen years now are as long as eighteen years would be then.

Taylor.

EIGHTEENTH. adj. [from eighteen.] The next

EI'GHTIETH. adj. [from eighty.] The next in order to the seventy-ninth; eighth tenth.

Some balances are so exact as to be sensibly turned with the eighth part of a grain.

Wilkins's Math. Magic.

EI'GHTSCORE. adv. [eight and score.] Eight times twenty; an hundred and sixty.

What! keep a week away? seven days and nights?

Eightscore eight hours? and lovers absent hours,

More tedious than the dial eightscore times?

Oh weary reckoning! Shakespeare's Othello.

EI'GHTY. adj. [eight and ten.] Eight times ten; fourscore.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen. Shakespeare.

Among all other climactericks three are most remarkable; that is, seven times seven, or forty-nine; nine times nine, or eighty one; and seven times nine, or the year sixty-three, which is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EIGNE. adj. [aïme, Fr.] [In law.] Denotes the eldest or first born. Here it signifies unalienable, as being entailed.

It happeneth not seldom, that, to avoid the yearly oath, for averment of the continuance of some estate for life, which is eigne, and not subject to forfeiture for the alienation that cometh after it, the party will offer to sue for a pardon uncompelled before the time; in all which, some mitigation of the uttermost value may well and worthily be offered. Bacon.

EI'SEL. n. s. [eoril, Saxon.] Vinegar, verjuice; any acid. An old word.

Cast in thy mind

How thou resemblest Christ, as with fowre poison,

If thou paine thy taste; remember therewithall.

How Christ for thee tasted eisel and gall. Sir T. More.

EI'THER. pron. [æððen, Saxon; auðer, Scottish.]

1. Which soever of the two; whether one or the other.

Lepidus flatters both,

Of both is flatter'd; but he neither loves,

Nor either cares for him. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

So like in arms these champions were,

As they had been a very pair;

So that a man would almost swear,

That either had been either. Drayton's Nymph.

Goring made a fast friendship with Digby, either of them believing he could deceive the other. Clarendon.

I do not ask whether bodies do so exist, that the motion of one body cannot really be without the motion of another: to determine this either way, is to beg the question for or against a vacuum. Locke.

2. Each; both.

In the process of natural beings, there seem some to be creatures placed, as it were, on the confines of several provinces, and participating something of either.

Hale.

Sev'n times the sun trans~~it~~ either tropic's view'd,

The Winter banish'd, and the Spring renew'd.

Dryden's Virgil.

3. It is used sometimes of more than two; any one of a certain number.

4. Any of an indeterminate number, as in the following passage:

Henry VIII. Francis I. and Charles V. were so provident, as scarce a palm of ground could be gotten by either of the three, but that the other two would set the balance of Europe upright again. Bacon.

E L A

EI'THER. adv. [from the noun.] A distributive adverb, answered by or; either the one or,

We never heard of any ship that had been seen to arrive upon any shore of Europe; no nor of either the East or West Indies. Bacon's New Atlantis.

What perils shall we find.

If either place, or time, or other course,

Cause us to alter th' order now assign'd? Daniel.

Either your brethren have miserably deceived us, or power confers virtue. Swift to Pope.

EJULA'TION. n. s. [ejulatio, Latin.] Outcry; lamentation; moaning; wailing.

Instead of hymns and praises, he breaks out into ejulations and effeminate wailings.

Government of the Tongue.

With dismal groans

And ejulation, in the pangs of death,

Some call for aid. Philips.

EKE. adv. [eac, Saxon; ook, Dutch.] Also; likewise; beside; moreover.

If any strength we have, it is to ill;

But all the good is God's, both power and eke will.

Fairy Queen.

Now if 'tis chiefly in the heart
That courage does itself exert,
'Twill be prodigious hard to prove,
That this is eke the throne of love. Prior.

TO EKE. v. a. [eacan, Saxon]

1. To increase.

I dempt there much to have eked my store,

But such eking hath made my heart sore. Spenser.

The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.

—And mine to eke out her's. Shakespeare. As you like it.

2. To supply; to fill up deficiencies.

Still be kind,

And eke out our performance with your mind. Shakespeare.

Your ornaments hung all,

On some patch'd doghole ek'd with ends of wall. Pope.

Irrevocable. Prior.

TO ELA'PSE. v. n. [elapsus, Lat.] To pass away; to glide away; to run out without notice.

There is a docible season, a learning time in youth, which, suffered to elapse, and no foundation laid, seldom returns. Clarissa.

ELA'STICAL. adj. [from ἐλασ.] Having the power of returning to the form from which it is distorted or withheld; springy; having the power of a spring.

By what elastick engine did she rear

The starry roof, and roll the orbs in air. Blackmore.

If the body is compact, and bends or yields inward to pression, without any sliding of its parts, it is hard and elastick, returning to its figure with a force rising from the mutual attraction of its parts.

Newton's Opticks.

The most common diversities of human constitutions, arise from the solids, as to their different degrees of strength and tension; in some being too lax and weak, in others too elastick and strong.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

A fermentation must be excited in some assignable place, which may expand itself by its elastical power, and break through, where it meets with the weakest resistance. Bentley.

ELASTI'CITY. n. s. [from elastick.] Force in bodies, by which they endeavour to restore themselves to the posture from whence they were displaced by any external force. Quincy.

A lute-string will bear an hundred weight without rupture; but at the same time cannot exert its elasticity; take away fifty, and immediately it raiseth the weight. Arbutnot.

Me emptiness and dulness could inspire,

And were my elasticity and fire. Pope.

ELA'TE. adj. [elatus, Lat.] Floated with success; elevated with prosperity; lofty; haughty.

Oh, thoughtless mortals! ever blind to fate!

Too soon dejected, and too soon elate!

I, of mind elate, and scornful fear,

Thus with new taunts insult the monster's ear.

Pope's Odyssey.

TO ELATE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To elevate with success; to puff up with prosperity.

2. To exult; to heighten. An unusual sense.

Or truth, divinely breaking on his mind,

Elates his being, and unfolds his power. Thomson.

1. The next joint or curvature of the arm below the shoulder.

In some fair evening, on your elbow laid,
You dream of triumphs in the rural shade. Pope.

2. Any flexure or angle.

Fruit trees, or vines, set upon a wall between elbows or buttresses of stone, ripen more than upon a plain wall. Bacon.

3. To be at the ELBOW. To be near; to be at hand.

Straight will he come;
Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home:
Quick, quick; fear nothing, I'll be at thy elbow.
Shakespeare's Othello.

ELBOWCHAIR. n. f. [elbow and chair.]

A chair with arms to support the elbows.
Swans and elbowchairs, in the opera of Dioclesian, have danced upon the English stage with good success. Gay.

ELBOWROOM. n. f. [elbow and room.] Room to stretch out the elbows on each side;
perfect freedom from confinement.

Now my soul hath elbowroom;
It would not out at windows nor at doors. Shakespeare.

The natives are not so many, but that there may be elbowroom enough for them, and for the adven-tives also. Bacon.

A politician must put himself into a state of liberty to provide elbowroom for conscience to have its full play in. South.

ELD. n. f. [eald, Saxon; eld, Scottish.]

1. Old age; decrepitude.

Her heart with joy unwonted inly swell'd,
As feeling wond'rous comfort in her weaker eld.
Spenser.

Thy blazed youth
Becomes affuaged, and doth beg the alms
Of palsied eld. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
He thought it touch'd his deity full near,
If likewise he some fair one wedded not,
Thereby to wipe away th' infamous blot
Of long uncoupled bed and childless eld. Milton.

2. Old people; persons worn out with years.

They count him of the green-hair'd eld. Chapman.

ELDER. adj. The comparative of eld, now corrupted to eld. [eald, ealdon, Saxon.] Surpassing another in years; survivor;
having the privileges of primogeniture:
opposed to younger.

They bring the comparison of younger daughters conforming themselves in attire to their elder sisters.
Hooker.

Let still the woman take
An elder than herself: so wears she to him,
So sways she level in her husband's heart. Shakespeare.
How I firmly am resolv'd, you know;
That is, not to bestow my youngest daughter,
Before I have a husband for the elder. Shakespeare.

Among the Lacedemonians, the chief magistrates,
as they were, so were they called, elder men.
Raleigh's History.

The elder of his children comes to acquire a degree of authority among the younger, by the same means the father did among them.

Fame's high temple stands;
Stupendous pile; not rear'd by mortal hands!
Whate'er proud Rome, or artful Greece beheld,
Or elder Babylon, its name excell'd. Pope.

ELDERS. n. f. [from elder.]

1. Persons whose age gives them a claim to credit and reverence.

Rebuke not an elder, but intreat him as a father, and the younger men as brethren. 1 Tim. v. 1.

Our elders say,
The barren, touched in this holy chafe,
Shake off their sterile curse. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
The blushing youth their virtuous awe disclose,
And from their seats the reverend elders rose. Sandys.

2. Ancestors.

Says the goose, If it will be no better, e'en carry your head as your elders have done before you.
L'Estrange.

I lose my patience, and I own it too,
Where works are censur'd, not as bad, but new;
While, if our elders break all reason's laws,
Those fools demand not pardon, but applause. Pope.

3. Those who are older than others.

Many nations are very superstitious and diligent observers of old customs, which they received by continual tradition from their parents, by recording of their bards and chronicles, in their songs, and by daily use and ensample of their elders. Spenser's Irel.

At the board, and in private, it very well becometh children's innocency to pray, and their elders to say Amen. Hooker.

4. [Among the Jews.] Rulers of the people.

5. [In the New Testament.] Ecclesiasticks.

6. [Among presbyterians.] Laymen introduced into the kirk-polity in sessions, presbyteries, synods, and assemblies.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana; like the rude
Chaos of presbytry, where laymen ride
With the tame woolpack clergy by their side.
Cleaveland.

ELDER. n. f. [ellara, Saxon; sambucus.]
The name of a tree.

The branches are full of pith, having but little wood: the flowers are monopetalous, divided into several segments, and expand in form of a rose:
these are, for the most part, collected into an um-bel, and are succeeded by soft succulent berries, having three seeds in each. Miller.

Look for thy reward
Amongst the nettles at the elder tree,
Which overshades the mouth of that same pit.
Shakespeare.

ELDERLY. adj. [from elder.]

1. Seniority; primogeniture.

The world, while it had scarcity of people, underwent no other dominion than paternity and eldership. Raleigh.

That all should Alibech adore, 'tis true;
But some respect is to my birthright due:
My claim to her by eldership I prove.
Dryden's Ind. Emp.

Nor were the eldership
Of Artaxerxes worth our least of fears,
If Memnon's interest did not prop his cause. Rowe.

2. Presbytery; ecclesiastical senate; kirk-session.

That controversy sprang up between Beza and Erastus, about the matter of excommunications;
whether there ought to be in all churches an eldership, having power to excommunicate, and a part of that eldership to be of necessity certain chosen out from amongst the laity. Hooker, Preface.

ELDEST. adj. The superlative of eld, now changed to old. [ealb, ealdon,
ealorte, Saxon.]

1. The oldest; that has the right of primogeniture.

We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest Malcolm, whom we name hereafter
The prince of Cumberland. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The mother's and her eldest daughter's grace,
It seems had brib'd him to prolong their space.
Dryden.

2. The person that has lived most years.

Eldst parents signifies either the oldest men and women that have had children, or those who have longest had issue. Locke.

ELECAMPANE. n. f. [helenium, Lat.] A plant, named also starwort. Botanists enumerate thirty species of this plant.

Miller.

The Germans have a method of candying ele-campane root like ginger, to which they prefer it, and call it German spice. Hill's Materia Medica.

To ELECT. v. a. [electus, Lat.]

1. To choose for any office or use; to take in preference to others.

Henry his son is chosen king; though young;
And Lewis of France, elect first, beguil'd. Daniel.
This prince, in gratitude to the people, by whose consent he was chosen, elect a hundred senators out of the commoners. Swift.

2. [In theology.] To select as an object of eternal mercy.

ELECT. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Chosen; taken by preference from among others.

You have here, lady,
And of your choice, these reverend fathers,
Yea, the elect of the land, who are assembl'd
To plead your cause. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

2. Chosen to an office, not yet in possession.

The bishop elect takes the oaths of supremacy, canonical obedience, and against simony; and then the dean of the arches reads and subscribes the sentences. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. [In theology.] Chosen as an object of eternal mercy.

A vicious liver, believing that Christ died for none but the elect, shall have attempts made upon him to reform and amend his life. Hammond.

Some I have chosen of peculiar grace,
Elect above the rest: so is my will. Milton.

ELECTION. n. f. [electio, Lat.]

1. The act of chusing; the act of selecting one or more from a greater number for any use or office; choice.

If the election of the minister should be committed to every several parish, do you think that they would chuse the meetest? Whitgift.

Him, not thy election,
But natural necessity, begot. Milton.

As charity is, nothing can more increase the lustre and beauty than a prudent election of objects, and a fit application of it to them. Spratt.

2. The power of choice.

For what is man without a moving mind,
Which hath a judging wit, and chusing will?
Now if God's pow'r should her election bind,
Her motions then would cease, and stand all still.
Davies.

3. Voluntary preference.

He calls upon the sinners to turn themselves and live; he tells us, that he has set before us life and death, and referred it to our own election which we will chuse. Rogers.

4. Discernment; distinction; discrimination.

The discovering of these colours cannot be done but out of a very universal knowledge of things:
which so cleareth men's judgment and election, as it is the less apt to slide into error. Bacon.

In favour, to use men with much difference and election is good: for it maketh those preferred more thankful, and the rest more officious. Bacon.

5. [In theology.] The predetermination of God by which any were selected for eternal life.

The conceit about absolute election to eternal life,
some enthusiasts entertaining, have been made re-mifs in the practice of virtue. Auterbury.

6. The ceremony of a publick choice.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality, and popular heat, elections were carried in many places.
King Charles.

Since the late dissolution of the club, many persons put up for the next election. Addis. Spect.

ELECTIVE. adj. [from elect.]

1. Regulated

1. Regulated or bestowed by election or choice.

I will say positively and resolutely, that it is impossible an elective monarchy should be so free and absolute as an hereditary. Bacon.

The last change of their government, from elective to hereditary, has made it seem hitherto of less force, and unfit for action abroad. Temple.

2. Exerting the power of choice.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice: whereas all moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will.

Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

ELECTIVELY. adv. [from elect.] by choice; with preference of one to another.

How or why that should have such an influence upon the spirits, as to drive them into those muscles electively, I am not subtle enough to discern.

Ray on the Creation.

They work not electively, or upon proposing to themselves an end of their operations. Grew.

ELECTOR. n. s. [from elect.]

1. He that has a vote in the choice of any officer.

From the new world her silver and her gold Came, like a tempest, to confound the old; Feeding with these the brib'd electors' hopes, Alone she gave us emperors and popes. Waller.

2. A prince who has a voice in the choice of the German emperor.

ELECTORAL. adj. [from elector.] Having the dignity of an elector.

ELECTORATE. n. s. [from elector.] The territory of an elector.

He has a great and powerful king for his son-in-law; and can himself command, when he pleases, the whole strength of an electorate in the empire.

Addison's Freeholder.

ELECTRE. n. s. [electrum, Lat.]

1. Amber; which, having the quality when warmed by friction of attracting bodies, gave to one species of attraction the name of electricity, and to the bodies that so attract the epithet electric.

2. A mixed metal.

Change silver plate or vessel into the compound stuff, being a kind of silver electre, and turn the rest into coin. Bacon.

ELECTRICAL. } adj. [from electru

ELECTRICK }

See ELECTRE.

1. Attractive without magnetism; attractive by a peculiar property, supposed once to belong chiefly to amber.

By electric bodies do I conceive not only such as take up light bodies, in which number the ancients only placed jett and amber; but such as, conveniently placed, attract all bodies palpable.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

An electric body can by friction emit an exhalation so subtle, and yet so potent, as by its emission to cause no sensible diminution of the weight of the electric body, and to be expanded through a sphere, whose diameter is above two feet, and yet to be able to carry up lead, copper, or leaf-gold at the distance of above a foot from the electric body.

Newton.

2. Produced by an electric body.

If that attraction were not rather electric than magnetical, it was wonderful what Helmont delivereth concerning a glass, wherein the magistery of loadstone was prepared, which retained an attractive quality.

Brown.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at about a quarter of an inch from the glass, the electric vapour, excited by friction, will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light.

Newton's Opticks.

ELECTRICITY. n. s. [from electric. See

ELECTRE.] A property in some bodies, whereby, when rubbed so as to grow warm, they draw little bits of paper, or such like substances to them.

Quincy.

Such was the account given a few years ago of electricity; but the industry of the present age, first excited by the experiments of Gray, has discovered in electricity a multitude of philosophical wonders. Bodies electrified by a sphere of glass, turned nimbly round, not only emit flame, but may be fitted with such a quantity of the electrical vapour, as, if discharged at once upon a human body, would endanger life. The force of this vapour has hitherto appeared instantaneous, persons at both ends of a long chain seeming to be struck at once. The philosophers are now endeavouring to intercept the strokes of lightning.

ELECTUARY. n. s. [electarium, Cælius Aurel., which is now written electuary.] A form of medicine made of conserves and powders, in the consistence of honey Electuaries made up with honey or syrup, when the consistence is too thin, ferment; and when too thick, candy. By both which the ingredients will be altered or impaired.

Quincy.

We meet with divers electuaries, which have no ingredient, except sugar, common to any two of them.

Boyle.

ELEEMOSYNARY. adj. [ἐλεημοσύνη.]

1. Living upon alms; depending upon charity. Not used.

It is little better than an absurdity, that the cause should be an elemosynary for its subsistence to its effects, as a nature posterior to and dependent on itself.

Glenville's Scorpis.

2. Given in charity. This is the present use.

ELEGANCE. }

ELEGANCY. } n. s. [elegantia, Lat.]

1. Beauty rather soothing than striking; beauty without grandeur; the beauty of propriety not of greatness.

St. Augustine, out of a kind of elegancy in writing, makes some difference.

Raleigh's Hist.

These questions have more propriety, and elegancy, understood of the old world.

Burnet.

2. Any thing that pleases by its nicety. In this sense it has a plural.

My compositions in gardening are altogether Pindarick, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without the nicer elegancies of art.

Speck.

ELEGANT. adj. [elegans, Lat.]

1. Pleasing by minuter beauties.

Trifles themselves are elegant in him.

Pope.

There may'tt thou find some elegant retreat.

London.

2. Nice; not coarse; not gross.

Polite with candour, elegant with ease.

Pope.

ELEGANTLY. adv. [from elegant.]

1. In such a manner as to please.

Now read with them those organic arts which enable men to discourse and write perspicuously, elegantly, and according to the finest style of lofty, mean, or lowly.

Milton.

In a poem elegantly writ,

I will not quarrel with a slight mistake.

R. scem.

2. Neatly; nicely; with minute beauty; with pleasing propriety.

They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and sententious.

Bacon.

Whoever would write elegantly, must have regard to the different turn and juncture of every period: there must be proper distances and pauses.

Pope's Odyssey, Notes.

ELEGIACK. adj. [elegiacus, Lat.]

1. Used in Elegies.
2. Pertaining to elegies.
3. Mournful; sorrowful.

Let elegiac lay the woe relate,
Soft as the breath of distant flutes. Gay's Trivia.

ELEGY. n. s. [elegus, Lat.]

1. A mournful song.

He hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies upon brambles, all forsooth deifying the name of Rosalind. Shakefp.

2. A funeral song.

So on Meander's banks, when death is nigh,
The mournful swan sings her own elegy. Dryden.

3. A short poem without points or affected elegancies.

ELEMENT. n. s. [elementum, Lat.]

1. The first or constituent principle of any thing.

If nature should intermit her course, those principal and mother elements of the world, whereof all things in this lower world are made, should lose the qualities which now they have.

Hooker.

A man may rationally retain doubts concerning the number of those ingredients of bodies, which some call elements, and others principles.

Boyle.

Simple substances are either spirits, which have no manner of composition, or the first principles of bodies usually called elements, of which other bodies are compounded.

Watts.

2. The four elements, usually so called, are earth, fire, air, water, of which our world is composed. When it is used alone, element commonly means the air.

The king is but a man: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; and the element shews to him as it doth to me.

Shakefp.

My dearest sister, fare thee well;

The elements be kind to thee, and make

Thy spirits all of comfort. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleop.

The king,

Contending with the fretful elements,

Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,

Or swell the curled waters. Shakefp. King Lear.

The heavens and the earth shall pass away, and the elements melt with fervent heat.

Peter.

Here be four of you able to make a good world; for you are as differing as the four elements.

Bacon.

He from his flaming ship his children sent,
To perish in a milder element.

Waller.

3. The proper habitation or sphere of any thing: as water of fish.

We are simple men; we do not know the works by charms, by spells, and such daubry as is beyond our element.

Shakefp.

Our torments may, in length of time,

Become our elements.

Milton.

They shew that they are out of their element, and that logick is none of their talent.

Baker on Learning.

4. An ingredient; a constituent part.

Who set the body and the limbs

Of this great sport together, as you guess?

—One sure that promises no element

In such a business. Shakefp. Henry VIII.

5. The letters of any language.

6. The lowest or first rudiments of literature or science.

With religion it fareth as with other sciences; the first delivery of the elements thereof must, for like consideration, be framed according to the weak and slender capacity of young beginners.

Hooker.

Every parish should keep a petty schoolmaster, which should bring up children in the first elements of letters.

Spenser.

We, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world.

Gal. iv. 3.

There is nothing more pernicious to a youth, in the elements of painting, than an ignorant master.

Dryden.

TO ELEMENT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compound of elements.

Whether any one such body be met with, in those said to be elemented bodies, I now question.

Boyle.

2. To constitute; to make as a first principle.

Dull

Dull visionary lover's love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit
Of absence, cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented it. Donne.

ELEMENTAL. adj. [from element.]

1. Produced by some of the four elements.
If dusky spots are vary'd on his brow,
And streak'd with red, a troubl'd colour show;
That sullen mixture shall at once declare Winds, rain, and storms, and elementary war. Dryden's Virgil.

Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
And sip with nymphs, their elemental tea. Pope.

2. Arising from first principles.

Leeches are by some accounted poison, not properly, that is by temperamental contrariety, occult form, or so much as elemental repugnancy; but inwardly taken, they fasten upon the veins, and occasion an effusion of blood. Brown.

ELEMENTARITY. n. f. [from elementary.]

Containing rudiments or first principles; the simplicity of nature, or absence of composition; being uncompound.

A very large class of creatures in the earth, far above the condition of elementarity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ELEMENTARY. adj. [from element.]

1. Uncompound; having only one principle or constituent part.

All rain water contains in it a copious sediment of terrestrial matter, and is not a simple elementary water. Ray.

The elementary salts of animals are not the same as they appear by distillation. Arbutb. on Aliments.

2. Initial; rude.

ELEMI. n. f.

This drug is improperly called gum elemi, being a resin. The genuine elemi is brought from Æthiopia in flattish masses, or in cylinders, of a yellowish colour. It is very rare in Europe, and supposed to be produced by a tree of the olive kind. The spurious or American elemi, almost the only kind known, is of a whitish colour, with a greater or less greenish or yellowish tinge. It proceeds from a tall tree, which the Brazilians wound, and collect the resin. Hill's Mat. Med.

EL'ENCH. n. f. [elenchus, Lat.] An argument; a sophism.

The first delusion Satan put into Eve, and his whole temptation might be the same elench continued, as when he said, Ye shall not die; that was, in his equivocation, you shall not incur present death. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Discover the fallacies of our common adversary, that old sophister, who puts the most abusive elencbs on us. Dec. of P.

EL'OTS. n. f. Some name the apples in request in the cyder countries so; not known by that name in several parts of England. Mortimer's Husbandry.

E'LEPHANT. n. f. [elephas, Lat.]

1. The largest of all quadrupeds, of whose sagacity, faithfulness, prudence, and even understanding, many surprising relations are given. This animal feeds on hay, herbs, and all sorts of pulse; and is said to be extremely long lived. He is supplied with a trunk, or long hollow cartilage, which hangs between his teeth, and serves him for hands. His teeth are the ivory. Calmet.

He loves to hear,
That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glasses, elephants with holes. Shakespeare.

The elephant hath joints, but not for courtesy;
His legs are for necessity, not flexure. Shakespeare.

2. Ivory; the teeth of elephants.
High o'er the gate, in elephant and gold,
The crowd shall Caesar's Indian war behold. Dryden's Virg.

EL'EPHANTIASIS. n. f. [elephantiasis, Lat.]

A species of leprosy, so called from covering the skin with incrustations like those on the hide of an elephant.

EL'EPHANTINE. adj. [elephantinus, Lat.]

Pertaining to the elephant.

E'LEVATE. v. a. [elevo, Latin.]

1. To raise up aloft.

This subterranean heat or fire, which elevates the water out of the abyss. Woodward.

2. To exalt; to dignify.

3. To raise with great conceptions.

Others apart sat on a hill retir'd,
In thoughts more elevate, and reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate. Milt.

In all that great extent, wherein the mind wanders, in these remote speculations it may seem to be elevated with, it stirs not beyond sense or reflection. Locke.

Now rising fortune elevates his mind,
He shines unclouded, and adorns mankind. Savage.

4. To elate with vicious pride.

To mischief swift, hope elevates, and joy
Brightens his crest. Milton.

5. To lessen by detraction. This sense, though legitimately deduced from the Latin, is not now in use.

When the judgments of learned men are alledged against you, what do they but either elevate their credit, or oppose unto them the judgments of others as learned? Hooker.

E'LEVATE. part. adj. [from elevated.] Exalted; raised aloft.

On each side an imperial city stood,
With tow'rs and temples proudly elevate
On seven small hills. Milton.

ELEVATION. n. f. [elevatio, Latin.]

1. The act of raising aloft.

The disruption of the strata, the elevation of some, and depression of others, did not fall out by chance, but were directed by a discerning principle. Woodward.

2. Exaltation; dignity.

Angels, in their several degrees of elevation above us, may be endowed with more comprehensive faculties. Locke.

3. Exaltations of the mind by noble conceptions.

We are therefore to love him with all possible application and elevation of spirit, with all the heart, soul and mind. Norris.

4. Exaltation of style.

His style was an elegant perspicuity, rich of phrase, but seldom any bold metaphors; and so far from tumid, that it rather wanted a little elevation. Watson.

5. Attention to objects above us.

All which different elevations of spirit unto God, are contained in the name of prayer. Hooker.

6. The height of any heavenly body with respect to the horizon.

Some latitudes have no canicular days, as those which have more than seventy-three degrees of northern elevation, as Nova Zembla. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ELEVATOR. n. f. [from elevate.] A raiser, or lifter up, applied to some surgical instruments put to such uses. Quincy.

ELEVEN. [adj. and lepen, Saxon.] Ten and one; one more than ten.

Had I a dozen sons, and none less dear than Marcus, I had rather eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shakespeare.

ELEVENTH. adj. [from eleven.] The next in order to the tenth.

In the eleventh chapter he returns to speak of the building of Babel. Raleigh's History.

ELF. n. f. plural elves. [elf, Welsh. Baxter's Gloss.]

1. A wandering spirit, supposed to be seen in wild unfrequented places; a fairy.

Through this house give glimmering light,
By the dead and drowsy fire;
Every elf and fairy sprite,
Hop as light as bird from briar. Shakespeare.

Fairy elves,
Whose midnight revels by some forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees. Milton.

The king of elves and little fairy queen
Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green. Dryden.

If e'er one vision touch'd thy infant thought,
Of all the nurse and all the priests have taught;
Of airy elves by moon-light shadow seen,
The silver token, and the circled green. Pope.

2. A devil.

That we may angels seem, we paint them elves;
And are but satires to set up ourselves. Dryden.

However it was civil, an angel or elf;
For he ne'er could have fill'd it so well of himself. Swift.

ELF. v. a. [from the noun.] To entangle hair in so intricate a manner, that it is not to be unravelled. This the vulgar have supposed to be the work of fairies in the night; and all hair so matted together, hath had the name of elf-locks. Hammer.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots. Shakespeare.

ELFIN. adj. [from elf.] Relating to fairies; elfish; belonging to elves.

Now when that idle dream was to him brought,
Unto that elfin knight he bade him fly,
Where he slept soundly. Spenser.

ELFLOCK. n. f. [elf and lock.] Knots of hair twisted by elves.

This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horses in the night,
And cakes the elf-locks in foul fluttish hairs,
Which, once entangl'd, much misfortune bodes. Shakespeare.

ELI'CITE. v. a. [elicio, Latin.] To strike out; to fetch out by labour or art.

Although the same truths may be elicited, and explained by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

He elicits those acts out of the meer lapsed state of human nature. Cleyn.

ELI'CIT. adj. [elicitus, Latin.] Brought into act; brought from possibility to real existence.

It is the virtue of humility and obedience; and not the formal elicit act of meekness; meekness being ordinarily annexed to these virtues. Hamm.

The schools dispute whether, in morals, the external action superadds any thing of good or evil to the internal elicit act of the will. South.

ELICITATION. n. f. [from elicio, Latin.]

That elicitation which the schools intend, is a deducing of the power of the will into act: that drawing which they mention, is merely from the appetibility of the object. Bramhall.

ELI'DE. v. a. [elido, Latin.] To break in pieces; to crush.

We are to cut off that whereunto they, from whom these objections proceed, fly for defence, when the force and strength of the argument is elided. Hooker.

ELI'GIBILITY. n. f. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen.

The business of the will is not to judge concerning the nature of things, but to choose them in consequence of the report made by the understanding, as to their eligibility or goodness. Fiddes's Sermon.

EL'IGIBLE. adj. [eligibilis, Latin.] Fit to be chosen; worthy of choice; preferable.

A British ministry ought to be satisfied, if, allowing to every particular man that his private scheme scheme is wisest, they can persuade him, that next to his own plan, that of the government is the most eligible. Addison's Freeholder.

Did they really think that going on with the war was more eligible for their country than the least abatement of those conditions? Swift.

That the most plain, short, and lawful way to any good end, is more eligible than one directly contrary in some or all of these qualities. Swift.

Certainty, in a deep distress, is more eligible than suspense. Clarissa.

ELIGIBLENESS. n. f. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen; preferableness.

ELIMINATION. n. f. [elimino, Latin.] The act of banishing; the act of turning out of doors; rejection. Diſt.

ELISION. n. f. [eliso, Latin.]

1. The act of cutting off; as, can't is at-tempt, there is an elision of a syllable.

You will observe the abbreviations and elisions, by which consonants of most obdurate sounds are joined together, without any softening vowel to intervene. Swift.

2. Division; separation of parts.

The cause given of sound, that it would be an elision of the air, whereby, if they mean any thing, they mean a cutting or dividing, or else an attenuating of the air, is but a term of ignorance. Bacon's Natural History.

ELIXATION. n. f. [elixis, Latin.] The act of boiling or stewing any thing.

Even to ourselves, and more perfect animals, water performs no substantial nutrition; serving for refrigeration, dilution of solid aliments, and its elixation in the stomach. Brown.

ELIXIR. n. f. [Arabick.]

1. A medicine made by strong infusion, where the ingredients are almost dissolved in the menstruum, and give it a thicker consistence than a tincture. Quincy.

For when no healing art prevail'd,
When cordials and elixirs fail'd,
On your pale cheek he dropp'd the show'r,
Reviv'd you like a dying flow'r. Waller.

2. The liquor, or whatever it be, with which chymists hope to transmute metals to gold.

No chymist yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befall
Some oderiferous thing, or medicinal. Donne.

3. The extract or quintessence of any thing.

In the soul, when the supreme faculties move regularly, the inferior passions and affections following, there arises a serenity infinitely beyond the highest quintessence and elixir of worldly delight. South.

4. Any cordial; or invigorating substance.

What wonder then, if fields and regions here Breathe forth elixir pure! Milton's Par. Lost.

ELK. n. f. [alc, Saxon.]

The elk is a large and stately animal of the stag kind. The neck is short and slender; the ears nine inches in length, and four in breadth. The colour of its coat in Winter is greyish, in Summer it is paler. The horns of the male elk are short and thick near the head, where they by degrees expand into a great breadth, with several prominences in its edges. Hill.

And, scarce his head
Rais'd o'er the heavy wreath, the branching elk
Lies slumb'ring silent in the white abyſs. Thomson.

ELL. n. f. [eln, Saxon.]

1. A measure containing forty-five inches, or a yard and a quarter.

They are said to make yearly forty thousand pieces of linen cloth, reckoning two hundred ell the piece. Addison.

2. It is taken proverbially for a long measure.

Acquit thee brave'y, play the man;
Look not on pleasures as they come, but go:

VOL. I.

Defer not the last virtue; life's poor span Makes not an ell by trifling in thy woe. Herbert.

ELLIPSI. n. f. [ἔλλειψις.]

1. A figure of rhetorick, by which something is left out necessary to be supplied by the hearer: as, the thing I love, for the thing which I love.

The words are delivered by way of ellipsis, Rom. iv. 18. Hammond.

2. [In geometry.] An oval figure, being generated from the section of a cone, by a plane cutting both sides of the cone, but not parallel to the base, which produces a circle, and meeting with the base when produced. Harris.

On the cylinder inclined, describe an ellipsis parallel to the horizon. Wilkins's Dædalus.

The planets could not possibly acquire such revolutions in circular orbs, or in ellipses very little eccentric. Bentley.

ELLIPTICAL. } adj. [from ellipsis.] Having the form of an ellipsis; oval.

Since the planets move in elliptick orbits, in one of whose foci the sun is, and by a radius from the sun describe equal areas in equal times, which no other law of a circulating fluid, but the harmonical circulation, can account for; we must find out a law for the paracentric motion, that may make the orbits elliptick. Cbryne's Phil. Prin.

In animals, that gather food from the ground, the pupil is oval or elliptical; the greatest diameter going transversely from side to side. Cbryne's Phil. Prin.

ELM. n. f. [ulmus, Latin; elm, Saxon.]

1. The name of a tree. The species are, the common rough-leaved elm; the witch hazel, or broad-leaved elm, by some called the British elm; the smooth-leaved or witch elm. Neither of them were originally natives of this country; but they have propagated themselves by seeds and suckers in such plenty as hardly to be rooted out; especially in hedgerows, where there is harbour for their roots. They are very proper to place in hedgerows upon the borders of the fields, where they will thrive better than when planted in a wood or close plantation, and their shade will not be very injurious to whatever grows under them; for they may be trained up in form of an hedge, keeping them cut every year, to the height of forty or fifty feet: but they should not be planted too near fruit trees; because the roots of the elm will intermix with the roots of other trees, and deprive them of nourishment. Miller.

The rural seat,
Whose lofty elms and venerable oaks,
Invite the rook, who high amid' the boughs,
In early Spring his airy city builds. Thomson.

2. It was used to support vines, to which the poets allude.

Thou art an elm, my husband; I a vine,
Whose weakness married to thy stronger state,
Makes me with thy strength to communicate. Shakespeare.

ELOCUTION. n. f. [elocutio, Latin.]

1. The power of fluent speech.

A travelled doctor of physick, of bold, and of able elocution. Wotton.

2. Power of speaking; speech.

Whose taste, too long forborne, at first essay Gave elocution to the mute, and taught
The tongue not made for speech to speak thy praise. Milton.

3. The power of expression or diction; eloquence; beauty of words.

The third happiness of his poet's imagination is elocution, or the art of cloathing or adorning that thought so sound, and varied, in apt, significant, and sounding words. Dryden.

As I have endeavoured to adorn it with noble thoughts, so much more to express those thoughts with elocution. Dryden.

E'LOGY. n. f. [elogé, French.] Praise; panegyrick.

Buckingham lay under millions of maledictions, which at the prince's arrival did vanish into praises and elogies. Wotton.

If I durst say all I know of the elogies received concerning him, I should offend the modesty of our author. Boyle.

Some excellent persons, above my approbation or elogy, have considered this subject. Holder's Elements of Speech.

To E'LOIGNE. v. a. [eloigner, French.] To put at a distance; to remove one far from another. Now disused.

From worldly care himself he did eloin,
And greatly shunned manly exercise. Fairy Queen.

I'll tell thee now, dear love! what thou shalt do
To anger destiny, as she doth us;
How I shall stay though she elaigne me thus,
And how posterity shall know it too. Donne.

To E'LONGATE. v. a. [from longus, Latin.]

1. To lengthen; to draw out; to protract; to stretch.

2. To put further off.

The first star of Aries, in the time of Meton the Athenian, was placed in the very intersection, which is now elongated and moved eastward twenty-eight degrees. Brown.

To E'LONGATE. v. n. To go off to a distance from any thing.

About Cape Frio in Brasilia, the South point of the compass varieth twelve degrees unto the West; but elongating from the coast of Brasilia, towards the shore of Africa, it varieth eastward. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ELONGATION. n. f. [from elongate.]

1. The act of stretching or lengthening itself.

To this motion of elongation of the fibres is owing the union or conglutination of the parts of the body, when they are separated by a wound. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. The state of being stretched.

3. [In medicine.] An imperfect luxation, when the ligament of any joint is so extended or relaxed as to lengthen the limb, but yet not let the bone go quite out of its place. Quincy.

Elongations are the effect of an humour soaking upon a ligament, thereby making it liable to be stretched, and to be thrust quite out upon every little force. Wise's Surgery.

4. Distance; space at which one thing is distant from another.

The distant points in the celestial expanse appear to the eye in so small a degree of elongation from another, as bears no proportion to what is real. Glanville's Sceptis.

5. Departure; removal.

Nor then had it been placed in a middle point, but that of descent, or elongation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To E'LOPE. v. a. [loopen, to run, Dutch.] To run away; to break loose; to escape from law or restraint.

It is necessary to treat women as members of the body politic, since great numbers of them have eloped from their allegiance. Addison's Freeholder.

What from the dame can Paris hope?
She may as well from him elope. Prior.

The fool whose wife elopes some thrice a quarter,
For matrimonial solace dies a martyr. Pope.

ELS

ELOPEMENT. n. f. [from elope.] Departure from just restraint; rejection of lawful power: commonly used of a wife.

An elopement is the voluntary departure of a wife from her husband to live with an adulterer, and with whom she lives in breach of the matrimonial vow.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

The negligent husband, trusting to the efficacy of his principle, was undone by his wife's elopement from him.

Arbutnot.

ELOPS. n. f. [ἔλος.] A fish; reckoned however by Milton among the serpents.

Scorpion and asp, and amphibena dire
Cerafles horn'd, hydrus, and elops drear,
And dipfas.

Milton's Par. Lost.

E'LOQUENCE. n. f. [eloquentia, Latin.]

1. The power of speaking with fluency and elegance; oratory.

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant
More learned than the ears.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Athens or free Rome, where eloquence Flourish'd, since mute.

Milton.

His infant softness pleads a milder doom,
And speaks with all the eloquence of tears.

Heigh.

2. Elegant language uttered with fluency.

Say the be mute, and will not speak a word;
Then I'll commend her volubility,
And say the uttered piercing eloquence.

Shakespeare.

Fit words attended on his weighty sense,
And mild persuasion flow'd in eloquence.

Pope's Od.

E'LOQUENT. adj. [eloquens, Latin.] Having the power of oratory; having the power of fluent and elegant speech.

The Lord of hosts doth take away the captain of fifty, and the honourable man, and the counsellor, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent orator.

Isaiah iii. 3.

O death! all eloquent, you only prove
What dust we dote on, when 'tis man we love.

Pope.

ELSE. pronoun. [eller, Saxon.] Other; one besides: it is applied both to persons and things.

To stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him; thinking of nothing else, putting all affairs else in oblivion, as if there were nothing else to be done but to see him.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Should he or any else search, he will find evidence of the Divine Willdom.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

He says, 'twas then with him, as now with you;
He did it when he had nothing else to do.

Denham.

ELSE. adv.

1. Otherwise.

Dare not, on thy life,
Touch ought of mine beside, by lot my due,
But stand aloof, and think profane to view:
This faulchion, else, not hitherto withstood,
These hostile fields shall fatten with thy blood.

Dryden.

What ways are there whereby we should be assured, but either by an internal impression of the notion of a God upon our minds, or else by such external and visible effects as our reason tells us must be attributed to some cause?

Tillotson.

2. Beside; except that mentioned.

Pleasures which no where else were to be found,
And all Elysium in a spot of ground.

Dryden.

3. It has sometimes or before it superfluously.

Be more abstemious,
Or else, good night your vow.

Shakespeare.

ELSEWHERE. adv. [else and where.]

1. In any other place.

There are here divers trees, which are not to be found elsewhere.

Abbot's Descrip. of the World.

As he proved that Pison was not Ganges, or Ge-hon, Nilus; so where to find them elsewhere he knew not.

Raleigh's Hist.

For, if we chance to fix our thoughts elsewhere,
Though our eyes open be, we cannot see.

Davies.

Henceforth oracles are ceas'd,
And thou no more with pomp and sacrifice
Shalt be enquir'd at Delphos, or elsewhere.

Milton.

Although seasoned bodies may and do live near as long in London as elsewhere, yet new-comers and elders do not.

Graunt's Bills of Mor. Mort.

ELU

2. In other places; in some other place.

They which elsewhere complain, that injury is offered to the meanest minister, when the magistrate appointeth him what to wear, think the gravest prelates no competent judges where it is fit for the minister to stand.

Hooker.

Let us no more contend, nor blame
Each other, blam'd enough elsewhere.

Milton.

Bestow, base man, thy idle threats elsewhere;
My mother's daughter know's not how to fear.

Dryd.

If it contradicts what he says elsewhere, it is no
new or strange thing.

Tillotson.

To ELU'CIDATE. v. a. [elucido, Latin.]

To explain; to clear; to make plain.

To elucidate a little the matter, let us consider it.

Boyle.

ELUCIDA'TION. n. f. [from elucidate.] Explanation; exposition.

We shall, in order to the elucidation of this matter,
subjoin the following experiment.

Boyle.

ELUCIDA'TOR. n. f. [from elucidate.] Explainer; expositor; commentator.

Obscurity is brought over them by the course of ignorance and age, and yet more by their pedantical elucidators.

Abbot.

To ELU'DE. v. a. [eludo, Latin.]

1. To escape by stratagem; to avoid any mischief or danger by artifice.

Several pernicious vices, notorious among us, escape or elude the punishment of any law yet invented.

Swift.

He who looks no higher for the motives of his conduct than the resentments of human justice, whenever he can presume himself cunning enough to elude, rich enough to bribe, or strong enough to resist it, will be under no restraint.

Rogers.

2. To mock by an unexpected escape.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found.

Pope.

ELU'DIBLE. adv. [from elude.] Possible to be defeated.

There is not any common place more insisted on than the happiness of trials by juries; yet if this blessed part of our law be eludible by power and artifice, we shall have little reason to boast.

Swift.

ELVES. The plural of elf. See ELF.

Fairy elves

Whose midnight revels by some forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees.

Milton.

Ye sylphs and sylphids to your chief give ear;
Fays, fairies, genii, elves and demons hear.

Pope.

E'LVELOCK. n. f. [from elves and lock.] Knots in the hair superstitiously supposed to be tangled by the fairies.

From the like might proceed the fears of polling elvelocks, or complicated hairs of the head.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

E'LVISH. adj. [from elves, the plural of elf:
it had been written more properly elfish.]

Relating to elves, or wandering spirits.

Thou elvish markt, abortive, rioting hog!
The slave of nature, and the son of hell!

Shakespeare.

No muse hath been so bold,
Or of the latter or the old,
Those elvish secrets to unfold,

Which lie from others reading.

Drayton.

ELU'MBATED. adj. [elumbis, Lat.] Weakened in the loins.

DiA.

ELU'SION. n. f. [elusio, Latin.] An escape from enquiry or examination; a fraud;
an artifice.

An appendix relating to the transmutation of metals, detects the impostures and elusions of those who have pretended to it.

Woodward's Nat. Hist.

ELU'SIVE. adj. [from elude.] Practising elusion; using arts to escape.

Elusive of the bridal day, she gives
Fond hopes to all, and all with hopes deceives.

Pope.

EMA

ELU'SORY. adj. [from elude.] Tending to elude; tending to deceive; fraudulent, deceitful; fallacious.

It may be feared they are but Parthian flights, ambuscade retreats, and elusory tergiversation.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To ELU'TE. v. a. [eluo, Latin.] To wash off.

The more oily any spirit is, the more pernicious;
because it is harder to be eluted by the blood.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

To ELU'TRIATE. v. a. [elutrio, Lat.] To decant; or strain out.

The pressure of the air upon the lungs is much less than it has been computed by some; but still it is something, and the alteration of one tenth of its force upon the lungs must produce some difference in elutriating the blood as it passes through the lungs.

Arbutnot on Air.

ELY'SIAN. adj. [elysius, Latin.] Pertaining to Elysium; pleasant; deliciously soft and soothing; exceedingly delightful.

The river of life, through midst of heaven,
Rolls o'er elysian flowers her amber stream.

Milton.

ELY'SIUM. n. f. [Latin.] The place assigned by the heathens to happy souls;
any place exquisitely pleasant.

To have thee with thy lips to stop my mouth,
So should'st thou either turn my flying soul,
Or I should breathe it so into thy body,
And then it liv'd in sweet Elysium.

Shakespeare's Hen. VI.

'EM. A contraction of them.

For he could coin and counterfeit
New words with little or no wit;
And when with hasty noise he spoke 'em,
The ignorant for current took 'em.

Hudibras.

To EMA'CIATE. v. n. [emacio, Latin.]
To waste; to deprive of flesh.

Men after long emaciating diets wax plump, fat, and almost new.

Bacon.

All dying of the consumption, die emaciated and lean.

Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

To EMA'CIATE. v. n. To lose flesh; to pine; to grow lean.

He emaciated and pined away in the too anxious enquiry of the sea's reciprocation, although not drowned therein.

Brown.

EMACIA'TION. n. f. [emaciatum, Latin.]

1. The act of making lean.

2. The state of one grown lean.

Searchers cannot tell whether this emaciation or leanness were from a phthisis, or from a hectic fever.

Graunt.

EMACULA'TION. n. f. [emaculo, Latin.]
The act of freeing any thing from spots or foulness.

DiA.

E'MANANT. adj. [emanans, Lat.] Issuing from something else.

The first act of the divine nature, relating to the world, and his administration thereof, is an emanant act: the most wise counsel and purpose of Almighty God terminate in those two great transient or emanant acts or works, the work of creation and providence.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To E'MANATE. v. n. [emano, Latin.] To issue or flow from something else.

EMANA'TION. n. f. [emanatio, Latin.]

1. The act of issuing or proceeding from any other substance.

Aristotle said, that it streamed by connatural result and emanation from God, the infinite and eternal Mind, as the light issues from the sun.

South.

2. That which issues from another substance; an efflux; effluvium.

The experience of those profitable and excellent emanations from God, may be, and commonly are,
the first motive of our love.

Taylor.

Another way of attraction is delivered by a tenuous emanation, or continued effluvium, which, after some distance, retracteth unto itself; as in syrups, oils, and viscolities, which spun, at length retire into their former dimensions.

Brown.

Such

Such were the features of her heav'nly face;
Her limbs were form'd with such harmonious grace;
So faultless was the frame, as if the whole
Had been an emanation of the soul. Dryd.
The letters, every judge will see, were by no means efforts of the genius, but emanations of the heart. Pope.

Each emanation of his fires
That beams on earth, each virtue he inspires;
Each art he prompts, each charm he can create;
Whate'er he gives, are giv'n for you to hate. Pope.

EMA'NATIVE. adj. [from emano, Latin.]
Issuing from another. DiB.

TO EMA'NCIPATE. v. a. [emancipo, Latin.] To set free from servitude; to restore to liberty.

Having received the probable inducements of truth, we become emancipated from testimonial engagements. Brown.

By the twelve tables, only those were called unto the intestate succession of their parents that were in the parents power, excluded all emancipated children. Ayliffe's Parergon.

They emancipated themselves from dependence. Arbutnot.

EMANCIPA'TION. n. f. [from emancipate.] The act of setting free; deliverance from slavery.

Obstinacy in opinions holds the dogmatist in the chains of error, without hope of emancipation. Glanville's Scepss.

TO EMA'RGINATE. v. a. [margo, Latin.] To take away the margin or edge of any thing. DiB.

TO EMA'SCULATE. v. a. [emasculo, Latin.]

1. To castrate; to deprive of virility.
When it is found how many ewes, suppose twenty, one ram will serve, we may geld nineteen, or threeabouts; for if you emasculate but ten, you shall, by promiscuous copulation, hinder the increase. Graunt.

2. To effeminate; to weaken; to vitiate by unmanly softness.

From wars and from affairs of state abstain;
Women emasculate a monarch's reign. Dryd.
Dangerous principles impose upon our understandings, emasculate our spirits, and spoil our temper. Collier.

EMASCULA'TION. n. f. [from emasculate.]

1. Castration.
2. Effeminacy; womanish qualities; unmanly softness.

TO EMA'SLE. v. a. [emballer, French.]

1. To make up into a bundle.
2. To bind up; to inclose.

Below her ham her weed did somewhat train,
And her straight legs most bravely were embal'd
In golden buskins of costly cordwain. Fairy Queen.

TO EMA'LM. v. a. [embaumer, French; embalsamer, Spanish.] To impregnate a body with aromatics, that it may resist putrefaction.

Embalm me,
Then lay me forth; although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me. Shakespeare.

I would shew future times
What you were, and teach them t'urge towards such:
Verse embalms virtue, and tombs or thrones of rhymes,
Preserve frail transitory fame as much
As spice doth bodies from corrupt air's touch. Donne.

Muse; at that name thy sacred sorrows shed;
Those tears eternal that embal the dead. Pope.

EMBA'LMER. n. f. [from embalm.] One that practises the art of embalming and preserving bodies.

The Romans were not so good embalmers as the Egyptians, so the body was utterly consumed. Bacon's Natural History.

TO EMBA'R. v. a. [from bar.]

1. To shut; to enclose.
Themselves for fear into his jaws to fall,
He forc'd to castle strong to take their flight;
Where fast embar'd in mighty brazen wall,
He has them now four years belieg'd to make them thrall. Spenser.

In form of airy members fair embar'd
His spirits pure were subject to our sight. Fairfax.

2. To stop; to hinder by prohibition; to block up.

Translating the mart unto Calais, he embar'd all further trade for the future. Bacon's Henry VII.
If this commerce 'twixt heaven and earth were not Embar'd, and all this traffick quite forgot,
She, for whose loss we have lamented thus,
Would work more fully and pow'rfully on us. Donne.

EMBARKA'TION. n. f. [from embark.]

1. The act of putting on shipboard.

The French gentlemen were very solicitous for the embarkation of the army, and for the departure of the eet. Clarendon.

2. The act of going on shipboard.

EMBA'RGO. n. f. [embargar, Spanish.] A prohibition to pass; in commerce, a stop put to trade.

He knew that the subjects of Flanders drew so great commodity from the trade of England, as by embargo they would soon wax weary of Perkin. Bacon's Henry VII.

After an embargo of our trading ships in the river of Bourdeaux, and other points of sovereign affront, there did succeed the action of Rheez. Wotton.

I was not much concerned, in my own particular, for the embargo which was laid upon it. Dryd.

TO EMBA'RK. v. a. [embarquer, French.]

1. To put on shipboard.
Of mankind, so numerous late,
All left, in one small bottom swam embark'd. Milton.

The king had provided a good fleet, and had caused a body of three thousand foot to be embarked on those ships. Clarendon.

Straight to the ships Æneas took his way,
Embark'd his men, and skim'd along the sea. Dryden's Æn.

2. To engage another in any affair.

TO EMBA'RK. v. n.

1. To go on shipboard.
I should with speed embark,
And with their embassy return to Greece. A. Phillips.

2. To engage in any affair.

TO EMBA'RRASS. v. a. [embarrasser, Fr.] To perplex; to distress; to entangle.

I saw my friend a little embarrassed, and turned away. SpeEt.

EMBA'RRASSMENT. n. f. [from embarrass.] Perplexity; entanglement.

Let your method be plain, that your hearers may run through it without embarrassment, and take a clear view of the whole. Watts's Logick.

TO EMBA'SE. v. a. [from basse.]

1. To vitiate; to depauperate; to lower; to deprave; to impair.

Grains are annual, so that the virtue of the seed is not worn out; whereas in a tree it is embased by the ground. Bacon.

I have no service or ignoble end in my present labour, which may, on either side, restrain or embase the freedom of my poor judgment. Wotton.

I will rather chuse to wear a crown of thorns, than to exchange that of gold for one of lead, whose embased flexibility shall be forced to bend. King Charles.

A pleasure high, rational, and angelical; a pleasure embased with no appendant sting; but such a one as being honey in the mouth, never turns to gall or gravel in the belly. Somrb.

2. To degrade; to vilify.

Joy of my life, full oft for loving you
I bless my lot, that was so lucky plac'd:

But then the more your own mishap I rue,
That are so much by so mean love embas'd. Spenser.

EMBA'SSADOR. n. f. [See AMBASSADOUR.]

One sent on a publick message.
Mighty Jove's ambassador appear'd
With the same message. Denham.

Myself, the king's ambassador, will go. Dryden.

EMBA'SSADRESS. n. f. A woman sent on a publick message.

With fear the modest matron lifts her eyes,
And to the bright embassadress replies. Garth's Ovid.

EMBASSAGE. } n. f. [It may be observed, EMBASSY. } that though our authours write almost indiscriminately ambassador, or ambassador, embassy or embassy;
yet there is scarcely an example of am-bassy, all concurring to write embassy.]

1. A publick message; a message concerning business between princes or states.

Fresh embassy and suits,
Nor from the state nor private friends, hereafter,
Will I lend ear to. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

When he was at Newcastle he sent a solemn embassy unto James king of Scotland, to treat and conclude a peace with him. Bacon's Henry VII.

The peace polluted thus, a chosen band,
He first commissions to the Latian land,
In threat'ning embassy. Dryden's Æn.

2. Any solemn message.

He sends the angels on embassies with his decrees. Taylor.

3. An errand in an ironical sense.

A bird was made fly with such art to carry a written embassy among the ladies, that one might say, If a live bird, how taught? If dead, how made? Sidney.

Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot,
Doth not thy embassy belong to me;
And am I last that know it? Shakefp. Rich. II.

TO EMBA'TTLE. v. a. [from battle.] To range in order or array of battle.

The English are embattled;

To horse! you gallant princes, straight to horse! Shak.
I could drive her from the ward of her reputation, her marriage-vow, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me. Shakefp.

On their embattl'd ranks the waves return,
And overwhelm the war! Milton's Par. Lost.

Embattl'd nations strive in vain
The hero's glory to restrain:
Streams arm'd with rocks, and mountains red with fire,

In vain against his force conspire. Prior.

TO EMBA'TTLE. v. n. To be ranged in battle array.

The night
Is shiny, and they say we shall embattle
By the second hour of the morn. Shakespeare.

TO EMBA'Y. v. a. [from baigner, to bathe, French.]

1. To bathe; to wet; to wash. Not used.
In her lap a little babe did play
His cruel sport;
For in her streaming blood he did em'ay
His little hands, and tender joints embrew. Fairy Q.

Every sense the humour sweet embay'd,
And, slumb'ring soft, my heart did steal away. Fairy Queen.

2. [From bay.] To inclose in a bay; to land lock.

If that the Turkish fleet
Be not inselter'd and embay'd, they're drown'd. Shakefp.

TO EMBE'LLISH. v. a. [embellir, French.] To dorn; to beautify; to grace with ornaments; to decorate.

How much more beauteous had the fountain been,
Embellish'd with her first created green;
Where crystal streams through living turf had run,
Contented with an urn of native stone. Dryd. Jiru.

The names of the figures that embellish'd the discourses

discourses of those that understood the art of speaking, are not the art and skill of speaking well. Locke.
That which was once the most beautiful spot of Italy, covered with palaces, embellished by emperors, and celebrated by poets, has now nothing to shew but ruins. Addison on Italy.

EMBE'LLISHMENT. n. f. [from embellish.] Ornament; adventitious beauty; decoration; adscititious grace; any thing that confers the power of pleasing.

Cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,
The embellishments of life. Addison's Cato.

Apparitions, visions, and intercourses of all kinds between the dead and the living, are the frequent and familiar embellishments of the legends of the Romish church. Auerbury.

EMBERING. n. f. The ember days. A word used by old authours, now obsolete.

For causes good so many ways,
Keep emb'ring well, and fasting days;
What law commands, we ought to obey,
For Friday, Saturn, and Wednesday. Tusser.

EMBERS. n. f. without a singular [æmýria, Saxon, ashes; emýria, Islandick, hot ashes or cinders.] Hot cinders; ashes not yet extinguished.

Take hot embers, and put them about a bottle filled with new beer, almost to the very deck: let the bottle be well stopped, lest it fly out; and continue it, renewing the embers every day for the space of ten days. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

If the air will not permit,
Some still removed place will fit,
While glowing embers through the room
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom. Milton.

While thus heaven's highest counsels, by the low Footsteps of their effects, he trac'd too well,
He to's'd his troubl'd eyes, embers that glow
Now with new rage, and wax too hot for hell. Crashaw.

He said, and rose, as holy zeal inspires;
He rakes hot embers, and renews the fires.
Dryden's Virgil.

EMBERWEEK. n. f. [The original of this word has been much controverted: some derive it from embers or ashes strewed by penitents on their heads; but Nelson decides it in favour of Marschal, who derives it from ymbren or embren, a course or circumlocution.] A week in which an ember day falls.

The ember days at the four seasons are the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday after the first Sunday in Lent, the feast of Pentecost, September 14, December 13. Common Prayer.

Stated times appointed for fasting are Lent, and the four seasons of the year called emberweeks. Ayliffe's Paragon.

TO EMBEZZLE. v. a. [This word seems corrupted by an ignorant pronunciation from imbecil.]

1. To appropriate by breach of trust; to turn what is intrusted in his hands to his own use.

He had embezzled the king's treasure, and extorted money by way of loan from all men. Hayw.

2. To waste; to swallow up in riot.
When thou hast embezzel'd all thy store,

EMBEZZLEMENT. n. f. [from embezzle.] 1. The act of appropriating to himself that which is received in trust for another.

2. The thing appropriated.

TO EMBLA'ZE. v. a. [blasonner, French.]

1. To adorn with glittering embellishments.
Th' unthought diamonds
Would so emblaze the forehead of the deep,
And so bestud with stars, that they below
Would grow inur'd to light. Milton.

No weeping orphan saw his father's stores
Our shrines irradiate, or emblaze the floors. Pope.

2. To blazon; to paint with ensigns armorial.

Nor shall this blood be wiped from this point,
But thou shalt wear it as a herald's coat,
T' emblaze the honour which thy mastenger. Shak.

He from the glittering staff ensur'd
Th' imperial ensigu, streaming to the wind,
With gems and golden lustre rich emblaz'd, Seraphick arm, and trophies. Milton's Par. Lost.

TO EMBLA'ZON. v. a. [blasonner, French.]

1. To adorn with figures of heraldry; to grace with ensigns armorial.

2. To deck in glaring colours; to set out pompously to shew.

We find Augustus, for some petty conquest, emblazoned by the poets to the highest pitch. Hakewill on Providence.

EMBLA'ZONRY. n. f. [from emblazon.] Pictures upon shields.

Him round
A globe of fiery seraphim inclos'd
With bright emblazonry and horrent arms. Milton.

EMBLEM. n. f. [ἑμβλημα.]

1. Inlay; enamel; any thing inserted into the body of another.

2. An occult representation; an illusive picture; a typical designation.

She had all the royal makings of a queen,
The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems, Laid noble on her. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

If you draw your beast in an emblem, shew a landscape of the country natural to the beast. Peacham on Drawing.

Gentle Thames,
Thy mighty master's emblem, in whose face
Sate meekness, heighten'd with majestic grace. Denham.

He is indeed a proper emblem of knowledge and action, being all head and paws. Addison's Guard.

TO EMBLEM. v. a. [from the noun.] To represent in an occult or illusive manner. Not used.

The primitive fight of elements doth fitly emblem that of opinions. Glauville's Sceptis.

EMBLEMA'TICAL. } adj. [from emblem.]
EMBLEMA'TICK. }

1. Comprising an emblem; allusive; occultly representative.

In the well fram'd models,
With emblematick skill and mytlick order,
Thou shew'dst where tow'rs on battlements should rise,
Where gates should open, or where walls should compass. Prior.

The poets contribute to the explication of reverses purely emblematick, or when the persons are allegorical. Addison.

2. Dealing in emblems; using emblems.

By tongue and pudding to our friends explain
What does your emblematick worship mean. Prior.

EMBLEMA'TICALLY. adv. [from emblematic.] In the manner of emblems; allusively; with occult representation.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically, as to the Egyptians; and the phoenix was the hieroglyphick of the sun. Brown's Vulg. Er.

He took a great stone, and put it up under the oak, emblematically joining the two great elements of maloury. Swift.

EMBLE'MATIST. n. f. [from emblem.] Writers or inventors of emblems.

These tables are still maintained by symbolical writers, emblematicks, and heralds. Brown's Vulg. Er.

EMBOLISM. n. f. [ἑμβολισμός.]

1. Intercalation; insertion of days or years to produce regularity and equation of time.

The civil constitutions of the year were after different manner in several nations; some using the sun's year, but in divers fashions; and some following the moon, finding out embolisms or equations, even to the addition of whole months, or to make all as even as they could. Holder on Time.

2. The time inserted; intercalatory time.

EMBOLUS. n. f. [ἑμβολος.] Any thing inserted and acting in another, as the sucker in a pump.

Our members make a sort of an hydraulick engine, in which a chemical liquor resembling blood, is driven through elastic channels by an embolus, like the heart. Arbutnot.

TO EMBOSS. v. a. [from basse, a protuberance, French.]

1. To form with protuberances; to cover with something rising into lumps or bunches.

Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Which once a-day, with his embossed froth,
The turbulent surge shall cover. Shakespeare. Timon.

Thou art a bile,
A plague sore, or embossed carbuncle,
In my corrupted blood. Shakespeare. King Lear.

Botches and blains must all his flesh emboss,
And all his people. Milton's Par. Lost.

All crowd in heaps, as at a night-alarm
The bees drive out upon each other's backs,
T' emboss their hives in clusters. Dryd. Don. Sebast.

2. To engrave with relief, or rising work.
Then o'er the lofty gate his art emboss'd.
Androgeo's death, and offerings to his ghost. Dryd. Virg.

3. [from emboffer, French, to inclose in a box.] To inclose; to include; to cover.

The knight his thrilant spear again assay'd

Like that self-begotten bird
In th' Arabian woods embost. Milton's Agonistes.

5. To hunt hard.

When a deer is hard run, and foams at the mouth, he is said to be embost: a dog also, when he is strained with hard running, especially upon hard ground, will have his knees swelled, and then he is said to be embost, from bosse, French, a tumour. Hammer.

Oh, he is more mad
Than Telamon for his shield; the boar of Theffaly
Was never so embost. Shakespeare.

We have almost embost him: you shall see his fall to-night. Shakespeare.

EMBO'SSMENT. n. f. [from emboss.]

1. Any thing standing out from the rest; jut; eminence.

I wish also, in the very middle, a fair mount, with three ascents and alleys, enough for four to walk a-breast; which I would have to be perfect circles, without any bulwarks or embossments. Bacon's Essays.

2. Relief; rising work.

They are at a loss about the word pendants; some fancy it expresses only the great embossment of the figure, others believe it hung off the helmet in alto relievo. Addison on Italy.

EMBRA'CEMENT. n. s. [from embrace.]

1. Clasp in the arms; hug; embrace.

Thus death becomes a rival to us all,
And hopes with foul embracements her to get,
In whose decay virtue's fair shrine must fall. Sidney.

There cherishing one another with dear, though chaste embracements, with sweet, though cold kisses, it might seem that Love was come to play him
there without darts. Sidney.

2. Hostile hug; grapple.

These beasts, fighting with any man, stand upon their hinder feet, and so this did, being ready to give me a shrewd embracement. Sidney.

3. Comprehension.

Not can her wide embracements filled be. Davies.

4. State of being contained; inclosure.

The parts in man's body easily reparable, as spirits, blood, and flesh, die in the embracements of the parts hardly reparable, as bones, nerves, and membranes. Bacon's Natural History.

5. Conjugal endearment.

I would freelier rejoice in that absence, wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would shew most love. Shak. Coriola.

EMBRA'CE. n. s. [from embrace.] The person embracing.

Yet are they the greatest embracers of pleasure of any other upon earth; and they esteem of pearls as pebbles, so they may satisfy their gust, in point of pleasure or revenge. Howel.

EMBRA'SURE. n. s. [embrasure, French.]

We endeavoured to ease by discutient and emollient cataplasms, and embrocations of various sorts.

Wifeman's Surgery.

To EMBROI'DER, v. a. [broder, French.]

To border with ornaments; to decorate with figured work; to diversify with needlework; to adorn a ground with raised figures of needlework.

Such an accumulation of favours is like a kind of embroidering, or lifting of one favour upon another. Wotton.

Embroider'd so with flowers it had stood,
That it became a garden of a wood. Waller.

Let no virgin be allowed to receive her lover, but in a suit of her own embroidering. Speet. N. 606.

Embroider'd purple clothes the golden beds;
This slave the floor, and that the table spreads. Pope.

EMBROI'DERER. n. s. [embroider.] One ragdus*, Lat.] A green precious stone.

The emerald is evidently the same with the ancient smaragdus; and, in its most perfect state, is perhaps the most beautiful of all the gems. The rough emerald is usually of a very bright and naturally polished surface, and is ever of a pure and beautiful green, without the admixture of any other colour. The oriental emerald is of the hardness of the sapphire and ruby, and is second only to the diamond in lustre and brightness. Hill on Fossils.

Do you not see the grass how in colour they excel
the emerald? Sidney.

The emerald is a bright grass green: it is found in fissures of rocks, along with copper ores. Woodward on Fossils.

Nor deeper verdure dies the robe of Spring,
When first she gives it to the southern gale,
Than the green emerald shows. Thomson's Summer.

Thetis, not unkindful of her son,
Emerging from the deep, to beg her boon, Pursu'd their track. Dryd. Homer.

2. To issue; to proceed.

If the prism was turned about its axis that way, which

which made the rays emerge more obliquely out of the second refracting surface of the prism, the image soon became an inch or two longer, or more.

Newton's Opticks.

3. To rise; to mount from a state, of depression or obscurity; to rise into view.

Darkness, we see, emerges into light;
And shining suns descend to sable night. Dryd. Fab.

When, from dewy shade emerging bright,
Aurora streaks the sky with orient light,
Let each deplore his dead. Pope's Odyssey.

Then from ancient gloom emerg'd
A rising world. Thomson's Summer.
